GENERAL FOREIGN POLICY SERIES

PREFACE

In 1950 the Division of Historical Policy Research, Department of State and the staff of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations collaborated in the preparation of a collection of documents on American foreign policy covering the years 1941-1949. This collection was released under the title A Decade of American Foreign Policy: Basic Documents, 1941-49 as Senate Document 100, 80th Congress, 1st Session. The usefulness of this publication has shown the need for a supplement that would bring the collection up to date.

The present compilation, like its predecessor, has been prepared primarily for official use. The possibility that it might be of interest to others outside official circles has also played a part in determining the scope and editorial mechanics of the publication. In the 6-year span (1950-1955) of the compilation has been included, for the sake of completeness and continuity, with the reproduction of documents that appeared in the earlier Decade, the publication of additional pre-1950 documents, and the including of new materials. Certain international agreements to which the United States is not a party have been included where the effect of such agreements on American policy formulation is obvious.

Despite its size, which reflects the growth of American participation in international relations, the present collection makes a reasonably complete and being exhaustive. In many instances, it has provided brief print summaries of developments and of individual lengthy documents or to provide nothing more than the title of a document where its text may be found. While the general rule of chronological arrangement of the documents within each of the 20 Parts has been observed, it has been necessary in certain Parts to place documents under chronologically overlapping subject headings. This arrangement, coupled with a list of the documents, a list of cross-references, and an index, will facilitate use of the collection.

This collection was prepared in the Historical Division, Department of State, under the direction of the Division Chief, Mr. [Name obscured] and the assistance of the Division staff.

GERMANY, AUSTRIA, AND EUROPEAN SECURITY

RELATIONS WITH THE GERMAN FEDERAL REPUBLIC, 1950-1955

ALLIED POLICY TOWARD GERMANY: Declaration Issued at London by the Foreign Ministers of the United States, the United Kingdom, and France, May 14, 1950 ¹

Following the London agreements of June 1948 ² and the Washington agreements of April 1949, ³ the United States of America, France and the United Kingdom replaced the military authority and the direct administration of the occupied territories in force since 1945 by a civilian regime simply of supervision. By virtue of this regime Germany was able to produce a constitution, ⁴ proceed to free elections, ⁵ form a parliament, ⁶ form a government, ⁷ and elect a federal president. ⁸ The Federal Government and the governments of the Laender were to take over the administration and control of internal German affairs.

Furthermore, by the agreement of April 13, 1949, ⁹ the Allies agreed to ease the burden of reparations on Germany. Some months later, under the Petersburg protocol ¹⁰ an agreement was reached for a settlement in regard to the delivery of plant by way of reparations. In the domain of foreign relations the Petersburg protocol made provision for the appointment of German consular and commercial representatives.

representatives abroad. During the last few months taken by the Western powers to secure the accession of the Republic to a number of international organizations, the Organization for European Economic Cooperation.

The progress made has been accomplished in large measure due to the action and the influence of the three Allied powers, in whom the three Foreign Ministers are happy to place their full confidence.

2. The Allies are resolved to pursue their aims in accordance with the Washington agreement of April 1949, and reaffirm their intention that Germany shall reenter progressively the life of the peoples of Europe. When that situation has been reached, Germany would be liberated from controls to which she has been subjected, and accorded her sovereignty to the maximum extent compatible with the basis of the occupation regime. This regime is in place of the German Government and on the Allies by the consequences of the war, and of the international position. Until this situation is reached, it must be retained in accordance with the common interests of Germany and of Europe.

3. In view of the continued refusal of the Soviet Government to permit the inhabitants of their zone of occupation to join their fellow countrymen in a democratic and united Germany, it has been possible, and will not be as long as this Soviet attitude persists, to proceed to the conclusion of a treaty of peace with Germany. The Ministers accordingly agreed to set up a study group to undertake the necessary preparatory work to enable the Government to be reviewed at the appointed time and to make arrangements for eliminating the major practical inconveniences for the countries concerned from the state of war, on the basis of the present situation of Europe supreme authority in the hands of the allied powers.

4. While retaining the framework outlined above, the Allies intend to give Germany the possibility of developing freely, while safeguarding the possibility of peaceful reunification, which remains the ultimate object of their policy. The statements reaffirm the offers which were formulated during the meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers last June,² and express the intention that the necessary conditions for the establishment of a democratic Government in all Germany may be achieved which would guarantee the respect for their laws and fundamental liberties and the independence upon the conditions which are necessary in the present situation.

The Western powers desire to see the pace of progress toward this as rapid as possible. Progress will depend upon the degree of prompt and frank cooperation displayed by the government and the people of the Federal Republic. In the first place the pace will be determined by the extent to which the Allies can be satisfied that German security is safeguarded by the development in Germany of a climate for peace and friendly association with themselves. In the second place the pace will be set by the rate at which Germany advances toward a condition in which true democracy governs and the liberties of the individual are assured. Therefore, the Western powers wish to emphasize most strongly that the natural desire of the German people to secure relaxation of controls and the restoration of the sovereignty of their country depends for its satisfaction upon the efforts of the German people themselves and of their government. They earnestly trust that the Federal Republic will live up to this respect the hopes placed in the wisdom of her people and leaders. Meanwhile, the High Commissioners in exercising the powers reserved to them will continue to place their main emphasis upon the essential elements of security and fundamental democratic principles of real importance.

ALLIED POLICY TOWARD GERMANY: Communiqué Issued at Washington by the Foreign Ministers of the United States, the United Kingdom, and France, September 19, 1950¹

The Foreign Ministers have reviewed the situation in Germany and Allied relations with the Federal Republic, in the light of developments since their last meeting in London in May 1950.² They have taken into account in their examination the views which have been expressed on recent occasions by the Government of the Federal Republic.

The Allies and their Governments share the desire of the German people for the unification of Germany on a basis which respects the fundamental liberties. Despite their efforts to achieve this end, it obviously cannot be realized so long as the Soviet Union continues to reject proposals for democratic all-German elections, and to stage controlled elections such as the one to be held in the Soviet zone on October 15. Pending the unification of Germany, the three governments consider the Government of the Federal Republic the only German Government freely and legitimately constituted and therefore entitled to speak for Germany as the representative appears to them that the time has now come for the attainment of these aims.

In the spirit of the new relationship which exists with the Federal Republic, the three Governments, as soon as action can be taken in all three directions, with their respective constitutional requirements, will take the necessary steps in their domestic legislation to bring them into line with Germany.¹

This action will not affect the rights and interests of the German people in Germany, which rest upon other bases. It will provide a firmer foundation for the developing structural changes in German relationships and will remove disabilities to which the German people are subject. It is hoped that other nations will also take similar action in accordance with their own constitutional practices.

The three Ministers have given serious consideration to the problem of the security of the Federal Republic in its internal aspects. They recognize the fact that the German units have been created in the Soviet zone and that the fact together with recent events in Germany has given rise to a situation of great concern.

The Allied Governments consider that the German units have in addition to their occupation duties the task of acting as security forces for the protection of the free world, including the German Federal Republic, in the sectors of Berlin. To make this protection more effective, the Allied Governments will increase and reinforce their forces. They will treat any attack against the Federal Republic from any quarter as an attack upon themselves.

The Ministers are fully agreed that the creation of a national army would not serve the best interests of Europe. They also believe that this is the wish of the German people.

The Ministers have taken note however of the views expressed in Germany and elsewhere in favor of the creation of an integrated force for the defense of Europe. The questions raised by the problem of the participation of the Federal Republic in the common defense of Europe are the subject of study and exchange of views.

As regards internal security, the Foreign Ministers are fully agreed on the necessity for insuring that the German authorities are able to deal effectively with possible subversive activities. The Foreign Ministers have agreed to permit the creation of mobile police formations organized on a local basis which would enable the Federal Government to make effective use of all or part of its police forces to meet the exigencies of the present situation.

and the Allied Forces in Germany will render such assistance as may be feasible in the rapid establishment of this force.

A new phase in the relations between the Allies and the Federal Republic will be marked by major extensions of the authority of the Federal Government. To make this possible, the occupying powers are prepared to amend the Occupation Statute¹ while maintaining the legal basis of the occupation, and the Federal Republic will be required to undertake certain commitments and other actions consistent with its new responsibilities.

In the field of foreign affairs, the Federal Government will be authorized to establish a Ministry of Foreign Affairs and to enter into diplomatic relations with foreign countries in all suitable cases. In the economic fields, and particularly in relation to internal economic matters, reaching reductions will be made in existing controls, and the present system of review of German legislation will be modified. In such cases, the Allied powers will cease as soon as the Federal Government has given undertakings or taken suitable action. The High Commission will promptly begin discussions with the Federal Government to work out the necessary agreements for such undertakings.

The Foreign Ministers have also agreed that a review of the production and limited industries agreement² shall be undertaken in the context of the developing relationships with the Federal Republic. During this review the High Commission has been instructed to proceed forthwith with all restrictions on the size, speed, and number of commercial cargo ships built for export and to allow steel to be produced outside the present limitation where this will facilitate the economic effort of the west.

The three Governments pay tribute to the continued steadfastness of the people of Berlin in the valiant struggle of the city to preserve its freedom. They will continue to oppose aggression in any form against the people of the city, and are taking steps to strengthen their forces there. In view of the heavy price Berlin has had to pay to defend its freedom, the Governments will continue their efforts to alleviate its economic situation. They have directed the High Commission to review the statement of principles governing the relationship between the Allied Kommandatura and Berlin,³ and to liberalize Allied controls in the city to the maximum extent compatible with the security of the west.

These decisions mark an important stage in the normalization of German relations and should contribute toward the creation of an atmosphere of mutual confidence and understanding. They represent a significant advance toward the progressive return of Germany to partner-

5. REVISION OF OCCUPATION CONTROLS: Decision of the Allied High Commission, March 6, 1951

In implementation of the decisions taken by the Foreign Ministers of the United States, the United Kingdom and France at the London Conference and the New York Meeting on 18 September, 1950,² the Council of the Allied High Commission, having this day promulgated the "First Amendment to the Occupation Statute,"³ has decided to implement the following program for further relaxation of controls provided for in the Occupation Statute:

1. The powers reserved by paragraph 2 (b) relating to the concentration of the population will be exercised only to ensure completion of programs relating to the steel, coal and motion picture industries, the Farben and the Grossbanken and actions which, as of December 1, 1950, are called for under laws adopted by the Allied High Commission or have been initiated through legal process under existing laws. Upon completion of such programs and actions, the powers will be relinquished.

2. (a) The powers reserved by paragraph 2 (b) relating to the concentration of the population will be relinquished upon the enactment by the Federal Republic of legislation satisfactory to the occupation authorities including provisions to prevent new concentrations of the population.

The occupation authorities will retain the powers necessary to ensure that the Federal Government carries out commitments under treaties and legislation enacted pursuant to paragraph 2 above and that essential features of such legislation are maintained.

The Council of the Allied High Commission will issue further amendments of revision of the Occupation Statute from time to time under conditions prescribed by this decision for the relinquishment of powers as are fulfilled.

This decision shall become effective on March 7, 1951.

7. INCLUSION OF GERMANY IN THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITY: Declaration Issued at Washington by the Foreign Ministers of the United States, the United Kingdom, and France, March 14, 1951¹

The three Foreign Ministers declare that their objective is the inclusion of a democratic Germany, on a basis of equality, in a Continental European Community, which is to be a part of a constantly developing Atlantic Community.

The three Ministers recognize that the initiative for the creation of a European Community is being taken by the French Government concerning the creation of Plan as a very important contribution to the effective Defense of Europe, including Germany.

The participation of Germany in the common defense should fully be attended by the replacement of the present Occupation Regime by a new relationship between the three Governments and the German Federal Republic.

The Government of the United Kingdom desires to establish the closest possible association with the European continental community in all stages in its development.

The three Ministers reaffirm that this policy, which will be undertaken in concert with the other free nations, is directed to the establishment and the maintenance of a durable peace founded on justice and law. Their aim is to reinforce the security and the prosperity of Europe without changing in any way the purely defensive character of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. They reaffirm their determination that in no circumstances shall the above arrangements be made use of in furtherance of any aggressive action.

ALLIED POLICY TOWARD GERMANY: Communiqué by the Foreign Ministers of the United States, the United Kingdom, and France, September 14, 1951 ¹

The Foreign Ministers of France, the United Kingdom and the United States have held meetings in Washington from September 10 to September 14. The three Foreign Ministers have met frequently in the last few years primarily because of the special and great responsibilities of their Governments in regard to Germany and Austria. The meetings equally offer a convenient opportunity for the three Ministers to exchange views on world developments and informally to review problems of mutual concern to their three countries.

The Foreign Ministers have noted with satisfaction the results achieved by their three countries, together with other free nations of the world, in order to insure their common security and to safeguard the peace. They again recorded the fundamental character of the policies of their three governments in regard to the many acute problems facing them today.

The Foreign Ministers have reviewed the relationship of their countries to the German Federal Republic, and have agreed on recommendations to the Allied High Commission for negotiation of mutually acceptable agreements with the Federal Government, the between the three Powers and the Federal Republic on contractual basis as possible, in the light of German part in Western Defense. The Foreign Ministers have now the High Commission to proceed to negotiations with the Government, which will, it is hoped, culminate in early between the four Governments to enter into effect to the agreement for German participation in Western Defense the proposed European Defense Community, whose forces form part of the joint defense forces under the North Atlantic Command.

The Foreign Ministers have agreed on certain general principles to guide the High Commission in its negotiations with the Government. As stated in the Tripartite Declaration of 1948, day¹ the guiding principle of their policy continues to be the integration of the Federal Republic on a basis of equality in the European community itself included in a developing Atlantic community. Such integration would thus be inconsistent with the intention in future of an occupation status or of the power to intervene in the Federal Republic's domestic affairs.

The Ministers believe that the agreements now to be reached by the Federal Government should provide the basis for its relations to their countries until a peace settlement with a unified Germany becomes possible. The division of Germany, however, precludes the conclusion of such a settlement at this time. This division of Germany is a security problem confronting the Federal Republic obliging it to retain, in the common interest, certain special rights in relation to the stationing of armed forces in Germany and the protection of the security of those forces, as well as to questions relating to Berlin and Germany as a whole, including the eventual peace settlement and the peaceful reunification of Germany.

The High Commission will proceed to negotiations with the Government as rapidly as possible. The Ministers hope to consider at an early meeting final drafts both of the agreement to be reached by the three Powers and the Federal Republic and the agreement for the establishment of a European Defense Community including Germany.³

The three Foreign Ministers were unanimous in stating their view of their Governments there is no justification for any delay in the conclusion of a treaty for the re-establishment of Austria and independent Austria. This has been the constant aim of the conclusion of hostilities. They will not desist in their efforts to bring the Soviet Government to the same view and to that end have decided to make a new and resolute effort in the meeting of the High Commission in Berlin on 10th April 1955.

GERMANY, AUSTRIA, AND EUROPEAN SECURITY

some provisions of the Italian peace treaty¹ and the present position in the family of free nations. The Ministers studied pathetically this question which will be the subject of further conversations between the Governments.

Note was taken of the necessity further to examine in collaboration with the other members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization the most effective use of their combined resources taking full account of the social and economic as well as of the military needs of the peoples.

While recognizing the gravity of the world situation, especially in the face of the continued defiance of the United Nations by the aggressors, of aggression in Korea, the Ministers nevertheless found solid grounds for confidence in the growing strength and unity of the free world.

The three Ministers on behalf of their Governments and peoples restate their fidelity to the principle contained in the United Nations Charter that international differences must be resolved by peaceful processes and not by force or threat of force. They thus express the hope that the forthcoming meeting of the General Assembly of the United Nations in Paris² will afford a real opportunity for contacts and exchanges of views which the three Foreign Ministers are, for their part, prepared fully to use.

9. TERMINATION OF THE STATE OF WAR BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND GERMANY: Proclamation by the President, October 24, 1951³

WHEREAS, by a joint resolution, approved by the President on December 11, 1941, the Congress of the United States formally declared a state of war to exist between the United States and the Government of Germany (55 Stat. 796); and

WHEREAS on December 31, 1946, the President proclaimed the cessation of hostilities of World War II;⁴ and

WHEREAS it has been and continues to be the policy of the United States to bring about the conclusion of a treaty of peace with the government of a united and free Germany, but efforts to this end have been frustrated and made impossible for the time being by the policy of the Soviet Government; and

WHEREAS it has nevertheless been considered desirable to terminate the existing state of war with Germany to a close and to remove Germany from its present enemy status, thus eliminating the disabilities affecting German nationals; and have become entitled as a result of the war, as well as to exercise or enforce the same, derive from the conquest of and the assumption of supreme authority by the Allies and affected by the termination of the state of war; and

WHEREAS the Congress of the United States by a joint resolution approved October 19, 1951 (Public Law 181, 82d Cong.) resolved that the state of war declared to exist between the United States and the Government of Germany is terminated and the termination shall take effect on the date of enactment of this resolution:

Now, THEREFORE, I, HARRY S. TRUMAN, President of the United States of America, pursuant to such joint resolution, do hereby claim that the state of war between the United States and the Government of Germany declared by the joint resolution of the Congress approved December 11, 1941 was terminated on October 19, 1951.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and the Seal of the United States of America to be affixed.

10. RELATIONS BETWEEN THE GERMAN FEDERAL REPUBLIC AND THE ALLIES: Statement to the Press by the Ministers of the United States, the United Kingdom, and the Chancellor and Foreign Minister of the German Federal Republic, November 22, 1951²

The Foreign Ministers of France, the United Kingdom, the United States met today with Dr. Adenauer.

This meeting, the first occasion on which the Chancellor and the Foreign Minister of the German Federal Republic had conferred with the foreign ministers of the three Western Powers, marked in itself a notable advance in the progressive association of the German Federal Republic with the West on the basis of equality. All participants welcomed the opportunity given for a review of a problem of mutual concern.

In the course of the conversation, which dealt with the political situation of the Federal Republic in connection with the present world situation, the four foreign ministers reviewed the progress so far made in the negotiations carried on in Bonn for the establishment by freely negotiated agreements of a new basis for a relationship between their countries.

In particular they examined the draft of a general agree-

certain outstanding points in the general agreement were settled subject to final confirmation by their Governments, the ministers approved the draft of this agreement. It will not be signed or signed at present, since the four Governments agree that it must be completed by a number of related conventions governing in more or less other important matters arising out of the future relationship between them. The ministers agreed on the need for rapid progress toward the completion of all these related conventions.

The general agreement will be a concisive step toward the realization of the common aim of the three Western Powers and the Federal Government to integrate the Federal Republic on a basis of equality with the European community itself included in a developing Atlantic community.

With the coming into force of the general agreement and the related convention,² the Occupation Statute with its powers of intervention in the domestic affairs of the Federal Republic will be revoked, and the Allied High Commission and the Offices of the Land Commissioners will be abolished. The three powers will retain only such special rights as cannot now be renounced because of the special international situation of Germany, and which it is in the common interest of the four states to retain. These rights relate to the armaments and the security of the forces in Germany to Berlin and to questions concerning Germany as a whole.

The mission of the forces stationed in Germany by the three powers will be the defense of the free world, of which the Federal Republic and Berlin form part. Their status will be settled in detail in one of the related conventions.³ Any disputes rising from the interpretation or application of the general agreement or the related conventions—the exception of certain special rights—will be settled by a court of arbitration.

The Federal Republic will undertake to conduct its policy in accordance with the principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations and with the aims defined in the Statute of the Council of Europe.⁴

The four ministers are agreed that an essential aim of the common policy of their Governments is a peace settlement for the whole of Europe, to be freely negotiated between Germany and her former enemies, and which should lay the foundation for a lasting peace. They further agreed that the final settlement of the boundaries of Germany await a peace settlement.

They reaffirmed their intention to strive for the establishment of ascertain whether free elections can be held simultaneously in the Federal Republic, Berlin, and the Soviet zone of Germany.

The four foreign ministers consider the contractual arrangements to be concluded between their Governments as well as the steps for the creation of an integrated European community as essential steps to the achievement of their common aim: A unified Germany integrated within the Western European community.

11. COMMUNIQUÉ BY THE FOREIGN MINISTERS OF THE UNITED STATES, THE UNITED KINGDOM, AND FRANCE AND THE CHANCELLOR OF THE GERMAN FEDERAL REPUBLIC, FEBRUARY 19, 1952¹

The Foreign Ministers of the United States, France and the United Kingdom and the Chancellor of the German Federal Republic met in discussions in the Foreign Office on the 18th and 19th of February. They reviewed the position reached in the parallel negotiations in Paris and in Bonn, now approaching a successful conclusion, for the establishment of the European defense community² and for the creation of a new relationship between the three Western powers and the Federal Republic of Germany based on a series of negotiated conventions.³

The Foreign Ministers and the Chancellor are well pleased with the results of their work. They reached agreement on outstanding issues arising from the negotiations in Bonn. The question of Germany's financial contribution to European defense is dealt with below.

On the difficult problem concerning the future regulation of arms production in the interests of Western defense of arms production by the states of the European defense community they have reached certain conclusions and provided for a series of meetings which are confident will produce speedy results.

They reached agreement on methods for dealing with the question of war criminals now detained in the Federal Republic.

They reviewed the report made by the Executive Bureau of the Temporary Council Committee of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization on the financial contribution of the Federal Republic to Western defense. The ministers agreed that this report, which reached them on the 16th of February, should be published tonight.⁴ They expressed every prospect that an agreed decision on the total financial the distribution of the Federal Republic's contribution, will proceed at once in Bonn between representatives of the German Federal Republic and of the three powers.

The four ministers welcome the progress made towards the conclusion of the treaty for the establishment of the European defense community which will provide a solid foundation for the agreement to be concluded between the three Western powers and the Federal Republic of Germany. This treaty and the agreements will constitute a single structure designed to bring about the association of the Federal Republic with the free world and to solidify the defense of Western Europe.

The four ministers discussed the relationship between the European defense community and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and agreed on certain recommendations which will be made by the three foreign ministers to the NATO Council for settling this question.

It will be the concern of the four governments, together with other interested governments, to ensure the preservation and progressive strengthening of the European defense community which as a part of the wider Atlantic community, creates a partnership for peace.

The four ministers are agreed that continuing efforts should be made to accomplish the unification of Germany through democratic and peaceful means.

The four ministers are convinced that their meeting has removed the obstacles which have hitherto delayed the conclusion of negotiations and has thus marked a decisive advance in the cause of peace.

12. THE BONN AGREEMENTS: Statement by the Secretary of State, May 26, 1952 ²

The agreements that have been signed today ³ are of great importance for each of the four countries represented here. The Federal Republic is attaining the independence in foreign affairs and authority in domestic matters which befit a free state. The United Kingdom, France, and the United States, together with the other free nations, are welcoming a new partner in their great effort to establish peace and security in the world.

Let us take a moment to examine what these agreements mean and what they are intended to accomplish.

The relations which follow from these agreements are fundamental, such as exist between countries closely associated in peace and friendship.

other governments on a normal basis. The U.S. Govt. is convinced that the agreements are just because problems about the war must be settled, and it is right to settle them in this way. The purpose of the agreements is to bring the Occupation to a normal basis and this will be their effect.

There are still certain powers reserved to the United Kingdom, France, and the United States. But the important thing to remember about these powers is that they are not retained for any reason that has to do with the Federal Republic alone. They are related to other factors entirely—to the necessity for the presence in Germany of troops whose mission is the defense of German peace and order and of peace and freedom throughout the free world, and to the unhappy fact that Germany is still a divided country. When conditions no longer exist, the powers retained to deal with the situation will be withdrawn.

It is a matter of great regret and concern to the American Government that the task of restoring Germany as a whole is not yet complete. I feel deeply the absence on this occasion of those who represented the people of that part of Germany which is under Soviet occupation. It would have been a more joyful occasion if they had been permitted to join us.

One of the great aims of the Western World, one of the great values of its culture, and one of the great achievements of its people is freedom. Political and social freedom of the individual, freedom of his conscience and speech, have been what the West holds dear. Since the end of the war the Three Powers have consistently worked to establish freedom throughout Germany, and their efforts have been met with invaluable cooperation on the part of the German people in Western Germany and Berlin. Together, we have succeeded in bringing freedom to the greater part of Germany, but until it can be extended to the entire country, and until all Germans in East and West—are reunited in freedom, the goal will not be reached.

I can assure you of my Government's continued determination to press steadily toward this goal until the unity of Germany has become a reality.

In anticipation of the day when these agreements will be accepted by the legislative bodies of our countries and will take effect, I wish to congratulate the Federal Republic on its status among nations of the world. We have difficult problems before us, but we can solve them only by working together. We are glad to have the Federal Republic as a new partner in this great cause. On behalf of the President of the United States and the American people, I welcome the Federal Republic on its return to the community of nations.

3. GERMAN-AMERICAN RELATIONS: Communiqué by the President of the United States and the Chancellor of the Federal Republic, April 9, 1953 ¹

The President of the United States, the Secretary of State, and other members of the Cabinet have met during the past 3 days with the Chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany and had a full and frank exchange of views on the world situation in general and German-American relations in particular. The conversations took place in a spirit of friendship and cooperation and revealed a far-reaching identity of views and objectives.

The President and the Chancellor discussed the effects which recent developments in the Soviet orbit ² might have on the East-West conflict. They were fully agreed that, while no opportunity should be missed to bring about a general relaxation of tension, the free nations of the West must not relax their vigilance nor diminish their efforts to increase their unity and common strength. They were further agreed that if the Soviet rulers are genuinely desirous of peace and cooperation among all nations, they could furnish no better proof of their good will than by permitting genuinely free elections in the Soviet-occupied Zone of Germany and by releasing the hundreds of thousands of German civilian deportees and war prisoners still in Soviet hands. They further stated their joint conviction that there can be no lasting solution of the German problem short of a reunification of Germany by peaceful means and on a free and democratic basis. The achievement of this purpose calls for sustained common efforts of the signatory powers to the contractual agreements signed at Bonn last year. ³

There was unanimity of conviction that all concerned should press forward unwaveringly toward European unity through early ratification of the treaty establishing a European Defense Community. Achievement of this goal will be accompanied by the establishment of German independence and sovereignty under the contractual agreements. The Chancellor declared that the Federal Republic of Germany is ready and willing to cooperate on a basis of equality and partnership with all the free nations of the West in strengthening the defenses of the free world. The Chancellor was given assurance that the United States would supply military equipment to the European Defense Community to assist in equipping the German contingent once the treaty has been ratified.

The problem of the Saar was discussed and it was agreed that a preliminary agreement should be sought in the common interest. ⁵

Consideration was given to the special situation of Berlin. The U.S. representative expressed admiration for the political firmness and courage of the German Government and its inhabitants. It was agreed that the moral and material support to keep the city strong is a matter of primary importance. The U.S. representative indicated that he had in mind further measures to increase production and reduce unemployment. The German representative stated that consideration was now being given to assistance by the U.S. Government to investment and other programs to improve economic conditions in Berlin.¹

The Chancellor indicated the great difficulties facing the Federal Republic because of the necessity to assimilate not only the displaced persons but also of expellees who came earlier from eastern areas but the refugees from the Soviet Zone and beyond. The U.S. Secretary of State recognized the great efforts undertaken by the Federal Republic to care for these homeless persons and to maintain economic and social stability. The discussion took account of the possibility that the Federal Republic and Berlin might be required to bear this burden alone. The Director for Mutual Security stated that careful consideration of this matter would be given in connection with the preparation of the Mutual Security Program for the year beginning July 1, 1953.²

The Chancellor raised the problem of war criminals. The U.S. representative stated that the war criminals now in U.S. custody was discussed. The German representative stated that his Government would reconsider the status of these prisoners and would also look forward to the adoption of new review procedures with German participation as soon as German ratification of the treaties was completed.

The representatives of both Governments exchanged views concerning progress toward the freeing and expansion of world trade and the achievement of currency convertibility. The German representative expressed particular interest in the reduction of tariff and customs administrative barriers. For their part, the U.S. representatives noted President Eisenhower's statement of April 7 that the U.S. must achieve an expanding trade, balanced at high level, to permit each nation to make its full contribution to the growth of the free world's economy and to share fully the benefits of progress.³

Representatives of the two Governments discussed a number of specific problems connected with the normalization of relations between the United States and Germany, in ects for increased use by German exporters of the trademarks by German nationals prior to World War II. It was noted that considerable progress had already been achieved in making such marks available to former German owners and that future progress in that direction was being sympathetically studied by the United States.

The Chancellor and the Secretary of State agreed that the conclusion of a new treaty of friendship, commerce, and navigation between the United States and the Federal Republic¹ would be of benefit to both countries and that negotiations for such a treaty should begin at an early date. Meanwhile, as an interim measure, the two Governments are negotiating an agreement² to restore to force the 1923 treaty of friendship, commerce, and consular rights³ as it stood prior to the war, taking into account the requirements of the present situation. This interim agreement, when ratified in both countries, will, among other things, re-establish a basis on which businessmen in each country would be able to reside and carry on business in the

The German representatives indicated their interest in the placing of shore procurement contracts in Germany. They were informed that as soon as the contractual and European Defense Community treaties have entered into force, the same criteria will be applied in the placing of such contracts in Germany, within the framework of the European Defense Community, as are applied with respect to the placing of contracts in other European countries.

In order to foster closer cultural cooperation between Germany and the United States and promote mutual understanding between their peoples, an exchange of notes is taking place.⁴

The two Governments reaffirmed their common interest in controlling together with other nations of the free world, the movement of strategic materials to nations whose policies jeopardize the peace and stability of the free world. Both Governments undertook to continue to that end, and, in particular, to keep under constant review the list of items which from time to time may be subject to embargo against Communist China. The representatives of the Federal Republic expressed their Government's intention, in cooperation with other land and maritime nations, to apply supplementary measures, such as transshipment controls, against violations or evasions of existing strategic controls.

Announcement is being made simultaneously in the two capitals of the return to the Federal Republic of approximately 350 vessels formerly of German ownership.⁵ Arrangements for their transfer to

The President and the Chancellor are convinced that the negotiations just concluded have made a solid contribution to the achievement of common goals of the two countries, in strengthening of friendship now happily re-established and in consolidation and strength of the free world.

Whereas a convention on relations between the United States of America, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the French Republic, therein referred to as the "Three Big Powers," and the Federal Republic of Germany, was signed on May 23, 1952, with a view to restoring sovereignty to the Federal Republic of Germany; and

15. GERMAN-AMERICAN RELATIONS: Statement of the President of the United States and the Chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany, October 28, 1954³

I

During this morning's conversations we took an opportunity to renew the spirit of friendship and confidence which has marked our relationship in the past, especially in our efforts to overcome the serious situation which faced us during the past few months. We reviewed the decisions taken at London⁴ and Paris⁵ and convinced that with the coming into effect of the Agreements signed this past weekend, the road towards a strong and united Europe will have been paved. We view the understanding reached between the Governments of France and the Federal Republic of Germany as an especially encouraging step towards lasting peace in Continental Europe. This understanding was greatly furthered by the commitment on the part of the United Kingdom to maintain forces on the Continent.¹ The basis for a European community has thus been established.

The continued interest in and support of this community by the United States was reiterated.² Together with the strengthened North Atlantic Treaty Organization, now to include the Federal Republic of Germany, these new agreements will, we are convinced, serve to reinforce the defense system of the free world.

II

We particularly addressed ourselves to the question of German reunification. The demand for a reunited Germany in freedom is viewed by us as the legitimate demand of the German people. We are agreed that this aim shall be achieved only by peaceful means. We are convinced of the necessity of continued efforts towards this goal and are agreed that such efforts will be made by the United States and the Federal Republic of Germany together with the Governments of the United Kingdom and France.

In this connection, we exchanged views on the latest Soviet note. It is our initial view that this does not seem to offer any new proposals on the part of the Soviet Union; it appears essentially as a reiteration of the positions taken by Mr. Molotov at the Conference in Berlin regarding Germany and European security.⁴

We have no doubt that the strengthening of free Europe which will result from the recent London and Paris Agreements will aid our efforts to bring freedom and unity to all of the German people.

III

We discussed the unfortunate fact that large numbers of German prisoners of war and civilian deportees are still held in custody in areas behind the Iron Curtain, mainly the Soviet Union. The Chancellor requested the continued assistance of the United States in obtaining the release of these prisoners. This question has for some time been the subject of investigation by a United Nations Commission.⁵ The Chancellor was assured that the United States stands ready, now as in the past, to offer every support and assistance considered useful in accomplishing this end.

IV

We also discussed the question of German assets in the United States. The President expressed sympathy for the project by the Chancellor in his letter of July 17, 1954, to him¹ and again expressed his willingness to explore such matters along with the question of American war claims. We expect that conversations between representatives of our two Governments will soon begin.

16. TERMINATION OF THE OCCUPATION REGIME in Germany by the Allied High Commission, May 5, 1955

WHEREAS a new relationship between the French Republic, the United States of America, and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, on the one hand, and the Federal Republic of Germany, on the other, has been established by the Cooperation and Relations between the Three Powers and the Federal Republic of Germany and the Related Conventions which were signed at Paris on 26 May 1952, were amended by the Protocol on the Termination of the Occupation Regime in the Federal Republic of Germany signed at Paris on 23 October 1954,³ and enter into force today,

NOW THEREFORE, We,

THAT the Allied High Commission and the Offices of the Allied High Commissioners in the Federal Republic are abolished.

UNITED STATES AUTHORITY AND FUNCTIONS IN GERMANY: Executive Order No. 10608, May 5, 1955¹

virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and the laws, including the Foreign Service Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 999), as amended, and as President of the United States and Commander in Chief of the armed forces of the United States, it is ordered as follows:

Executive Order No. 10062 of June 6, 1949,² and Executive Order No. 10144 of July 21, 1950,³ amending that order, are hereby rescinded, and the position of United States High Commissioner for Germany, established by that order, is hereby abolished.

The chief of the United States Diplomatic Mission to the Federal Republic of Germany, hereinafter referred to as the Chief of Mission, shall have supreme authority, except as otherwise provided herein, with respect to all responsibilities, duties, and governmental functions of the United States in all Germany. The Chief of Mission shall exercise his authority under the supervision of the Secretary of State and subject to ultimate direction by the President.

The United States Military Commander having area responsibility in Germany, hereinafter referred to as the Commander, shall exercise authority with respect to all military responsibilities, duties, and functions of the United States in all Germany, including the command, control, and stationing of United States forces in Germany, the protection and exercise of their rights and discharge of their obligations, and emergency measures which he may consider essential for the protection or the accomplishment of his mission. The Commander may delegate the authority conferred upon him. If action by the Commander or any representative of the Commander, pursuant to the authority herein conferred, affects the foreign policy of the United States or involves relations or negotiations with non-military authorities, such action shall be taken only after consultation and agreement by the Chief of Mission or pursuant to procedures previously agreed to between the Chief of Mission and the Commander or his representative. Either the Chief of Mission or the Commander may raise with the other any question which he believes requires such consultation. If agreement is not reached between them, any difference may be referred to the Department of State and the Department of Defense for resolution.

The Chief of Mission and the Commander or his designated representatives shall, to the fullest extent consistent with their respective missions, render assistance and support to each other in carrying out the agreements and policies of the United States.

With regard to the custody, care, and execution of sentences and the four-power responsibility in the case of persons convicted by the International Military Tribunal, (B) the Chief of Mission shall exercise responsibility in the case of persons convicted by military tribunals established by the United States Military Government pursuant to Control Council Law No. 10,¹ and (C) the Commander shall exercise responsibility in the case of persons convicted by military tribunals established by United States Military Government in Germany and elsewhere. The Commander shall, on the advice of the Chief of Mission, take necessary measures for carrying out any sentences adjudged against such persons in categories (A) and (B) in whom the Chief of Mission has responsibility and control. The transfer of custody of persons in categories (B) and (C) to the Federal Government of Germany as provided in the Convention on the Subject of the Matters Arising out of the War and Occupation² shall not diminish the responsibility of the Chief of Mission and the Commander with respect to such persons to the extent that the responsibility of the United States for them is thereupon terminated pursuant to the provisions of the said Convention.

6. If major differences arise over matters affecting the interests of the United States Forces in Germany, such differences may be referred to the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the Department of State and the Department of Defense for resolution.

7. This order shall become effective on the date that the Convention on Relations between the Three Powers and the Federal Republic of Germany³ and related Conventions, as amended, come into force.

18. GERMAN-AMERICAN RELATIONS: Statement by the President of the United States and the Chancellor of the German Federal Republic, June 14, 1955⁴

The President, the Chancellor, the Secretary of State and their advisers met this morning and discussed the problems of their two nations. They reviewed the political developments that have taken place since the Chancellor's last visit⁵ and expressed their satisfaction that the bonds of friendship between their two nations have become very close. They are of the opinion that the remarkable developments in Europe are the result of the consistent policies followed by the United States, the Federal Republic of Germany and their allies.

A large part of their discussion was devoted to the problems of the nations of the free world and the Soviet Union.

Union to participate in the four-power conference¹ and the position of the Soviet Government to the Chancellor.² They agreed one of the objectives of the forthcoming four-power meeting will pave the way for early German reunification. It was confirmed in their combined opinion the concept of neutrality is in no way viable to Germany and that only in collective security arrangements can Germany assure its independence. As a result of their discussions, they are reassured that there is a broad field of understanding between them. They are confident that the achievement of the policies upon which Germany and the United States are embarked will continue to require closest cooperation in the future. These policies are based on a common purpose to the furtherance of a just and enduring peace among the peoples of the world.

BERLIN AND EAST GERMANY, 1950-1955

ALLIED RIGHTS IN BERLIN: Statement to the Press by the Foreign Ministers of the United States, the United Kingdom, and France, May 13, 1950³

The three Western Occupation Powers will continue to uphold democratic rights in Berlin. They are resolved now as in the past to promote the democratic rights of the inhabitants and will cooperate with German authorities to improve to the utmost the economic position of the three Western sectors. Meanwhile the three Governments will continue to seek the reunification of the city in free elections in order that Berlin may take its due place in a free and united Germany.

DEMILITARIZATION OF EAST GERMANY: Note From the American Ambassador at Moscow⁴ to the Soviet Foreign Minister, May 23, 1950⁵

I have the honor to express to you the United States Government's concern at a development in eastern Germany which is already known to the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. There has been created in the part of Germany that is subject to ing and equipment, the character of an army. This organization is called the Main Administration for Training (Hauptverwaltung Ausbildung), and it amounts to about 50,000 men. It is an ordinary police force, and it does not have ordinary police equipment. It receives basic infantry, artillery, and armored troops. It is equipped with military weapons, including machine guns, anti-aircraft cannon, mortars, and tanks. It must therefore, as a military force.

The Soviet Union has many times expressed its adherence to the principle of the complete disarmament and demilitarization of Germany. In particular, you will recall the following agreements to which the Soviet Government was a party:

A. Joint Report of February 11, 1945,¹ following the American Conference in the Crimea:

It is our inflexible purpose to destroy German militarism and ensure that Germany will never again be able to disturb the peace of Europe. We are determined to disarm and disband all German armed forces for all time the German General Staff that has repeatedly contravened the principle of German militarism; remove or destroy all German military equipment; . . .

B. Declaration Regarding the Defeat of Germany by the Allied Powers, signed by General Eisenhower, Marshal Zhukov, Field Marshal Montgomery, and General Tassigny on behalf of their respective Governments on June 5, 1945:²

The Four Allied Governments will take such steps, including disarmament and demilitarization of Germany, as they deem required for peace and security.

C. Joint Report of August 2, 1945,³ following the American Conference in Berlin (Potsdam):

3. The purposes of the occupation of Germany by which the Occupation Authorities shall be guided are:

(i) the complete disarmament and demilitarization of Germany for these ends: (a) All German land, naval and air forces . . . and all German and quasi-military organizations . . . shall be completely and finally destroyed in such manner as permanently to prevent the revival or reorganization of German militarization and Nazism.³

D. Agreement between the Governments of the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Provisional Government of the French Republic on Certain Additional Requirements to be Imposed on Germany, dated September 20, 1945:⁴

forms of military training, military propaganda and military activities of every nature, on the part of the German people, are prohibited, as well as the formation of any organization initiated to further any aspect of military activity and the formation of war veterans' organizations or other groups which develop military characteristics or which are designed to carry on the military tradition, whether such organizations or groups purport to be educational, religious, social, athletic or recreational or of any other

Control Council Law No. 34, entitled "Dissolution of the Nacht," dated August 20, 1946:

Article I. . . . all German land, naval and air forces, with all their organizations, staffs, and institutions, . . . and all other military and quasi-military organizations, together with all clubs and associations which serve to keep alive the military tradition in Germany, are hereby considered disbanded, completely dissolved and declared illegal.

Article II. The maintenance, formation and reconstitution of any of the agencies or organizations enumerated in Article I under any name or form whatsoever, and the taking over of all or any of the functions of such agencies or organizations in whole or in part by other agencies is prohibited and declared illegal.¹

It is clear from these agreements that the Government of the Soviet Union is committed unequivocally to the principle that Germany will be demilitarized, that her military forces will be completely and finally destroyed, and that no revival of German military activities will be permitted. The British, French, and American Governments were also committed to these agreements and are equally committed to the same principle. They have, accordingly, taken effective steps to prevent the rearmament or remilitarization in their zones of occupation. The Soviet Union, on the other hand, has directly violated all these agreements. The establishment of a military force, or military police, in Eastern Germany could not have been accomplished without the deliberate approval of the Soviet Government, and it is done squarely in opposition to the efforts being made by the United States and other nations to create a stable and lasting peace. The representatives of the Soviet Government have, on numerous occasions, spoken of the Soviet Government's desire for peace. Such protestations, however, can hardly be expected to receive credence among the free peoples of the world when the Soviet Government is simultaneously creating a military force of considerable size and strength in Germany in violation of its solemn international commitments. By this and other like actions the Soviet Government has destroyed world confidence in the sincerity of its promises and has spread throughout the world widespread doubt as to its pacific intentions. If the Soviet Government wishes to restore in some measure international confidence in its alleged attachment to peace,

21. ALLIED POLICY IN BERLIN: Declaration of the Allied Kommandatura, May 26, 1952¹

Taking into consideration the new relations established between France, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the United States of America, and the Federal Republic of Germany, and wishing to grant the Berlin authorities the maximum freedom compatible with the special situation of Berlin, the Allied Kommandatura makes this declaration:

I

Berlin shall exercise all its rights, powers and responsibilities set forth in its Constitution as adopted in 1950² subject to the reservations made by the Allied Kommandatura on May 26, 1950,³ and to the provisions hereinafter.

II

The Allied authorities retain the right to take, if necessary, such measures as may be required to fulfil their international obligations, to ensure public order and to maintain the peace and security of Berlin and its economy, trade and communications.

The Allied authorities will normally exercise powers in the following fields:

- (a) Security, interests and immunities of the Allied Forces, including their representatives, dependents and non-German employees. German employees of the Allied Forces shall have immunity from German jurisdiction only in matters arising out of or in the course of performance of duties on behalf of the Allied Forces;
- (b) Disarmament and demilitarisation, including restrictions on scientific research, civil aviation, and prohibitions on industry in relation to the foregoing;
- (c) Relations of Berlin with authorities abroad. The Allied Kommandatura will permit the Berlin authorities to assure the representation abroad of the interests of its inhabitants by suitable arrangements;
- (d) Satisfaction of occupation costs. These costs shall be met after consultation with the appropriate German authorities.

at the lowest level consistent with maintaining the security of Berlin and of the Allied Forces located there;
Authority over the Berlin police to the extent necessary to ensure the security of Berlin.

IV

The Allied Kommandatura will not, subject to Articles I and II of the Declaration, raise any objection to the adoption by Berlin under appropriate procedure authorised by the Allied Kommandatura of the same legislation as that of the Federal Republic, in particular relating to currency, credit and foreign exchange, nationality, passport, emigration and immigration, extradition, the unification of the legal system and trade area, trade and navigation agreements, freedom of movement of goods, and foreign trade and payments arrangements.

Over the following fields:

restitution, reparations, decartelisation, deconcentration, foreign interests in Berlin, claims against Berlin or its inhabitants, displaced persons and the admission of refugees, control of the care and treatment in German prisons of persons charged before or sentenced by Allied courts or tribunals; over the carrying out of sentences imposed on them and over questions of amnesty, pardon or release in relation to them,

Allied authorities will in future only intervene to an extent consistent with, or if the Berlin authorities act inconsistently with, the principles which form the basis of the new relations between France, the United Kingdom and the United States on the one part and the Federal Republic of Germany on the other, or with the Allied legislative force in Berlin.

VI

Legislation of the Allied authorities will remain in force until repealed, amended or deprived of effect.

The Allied authorities will repeal, amend or deprive of effect any legislation which they deem no longer appropriate in the light of this situation.

Legislation of the Allied authorities may also be repealed or amended by Berlin legislation; but such repeal or amendment shall require the approval of the Allied authorities before coming into force.

In order to enable them to fulfil their obligations under the Declaration, the Allied authorities shall have the right to request such information and statistics as they deem necessary.

IX

The Allied Kommandatura will modify the provisions of the Declaration as the situation in Berlin permits.

Upon the effective date of this declaration the Statute of Principles Governing the Relationship between the Allied Kommandatura and Greater Berlin of 14th May, 1949,¹ as modified by the Instrument of Revision, dated 7th March, 1951,² will be

22. DISORDERS IN THE SOVIET ZONE: Letter From the United States High Commissioner³ to the Commander-in-Chief of Soviet Forces in Berlin,⁴ November 3, 1952⁵

In your letter of October 1⁶ you felt obliged to inform me that in recent months disorders have occurred in the Soviet zone and to attribute the blame for these occurrences to the activities of the organizations in Western Berlin which, for the purpose of the Declaration, you describe as centers of espionage and sabotage. You maintain, indulge in criminal activities directed against the population of Eastern Berlin and the Soviet zone. I am sorry to hear of these charges, which are baseless and a travesty of the facts.

The organizations which you mention have, with the exception of RIAS,⁷ been voluntarily formed by Germans who have the interest of the German people at heart. So far from committing crimes against the German people of the Soviet zone, these organizations are concerned only with giving help to the refugees in the Soviet zone who, in increasing numbers, flee from persecution; and disseminate evidence about illegal measures and violations of the rights of man, of which so many Germans in the Soviet zone are victims; and to tell them the truth about the free world to which they are separated.

As regards RIAS, the radio in the American sector may recall that the organization was established under the direction of American personnel in 1946 after the Soviet authorities' violation of the principle of Four Power cooperation in Berlin, and to allow any but Soviet influence in radio Berlin. Your assertions that RIAS is a center of espionage and sabotage are without foundation. On the contrary, RIAS fulfills a much needed function in providing factual information not otherwise available in Western Germany and it will continue to do so.

I will not enter into the diverse accusations which you make on the basis of the evidence provided by various "court trials" in the East zone. Public opinion throughout the world is only too well informed of the methods whereby so-called "confessions" may be extracted from those who are accused by such "courts." Moreover, "courts" seem to have acquired the habit of describing as "crimes" acts which in democratic countries are considered to be a normal part of daily life. For example, a person only has to express an opinion contrary to the Government in power or to repeat the truth of news which is already known but which the regime has an interest in suppressing for him to be described as a "spy" or "traitor." This perversion of the accepted meaning of words would be laughable if its consequences were not so serious.

In your letter you refer to "forcible abduction of activities of the American enterprises to West Berlin where they, and the employees of the people's police, and members of the FdJ, were murdered."¹ If there were any truth in this, I would condemn criminal activities with as much kind just as strongly as you do. But you do not cite any instances of abduction and murder. I, however, am in a position to cite instances of abductions from Western Berlin.

I should be obligated if you would give your urgent attention to the case of Dr. Linse who was abducted from Western Berlin on August 8,² and inform me when he will be returned to Western Berlin. In addition, I should welcome information about "a certain Weiland" whom you attribute one of the "confessions" made before a court in East Berlin on August 27, 1952. I assume this to be a resident of West Berlin named Weiland who was kidnaped from the American zone on November 11, 1950, and forcibly taken into the Soviet zone. Nothing has been heard of him since then until I received your letter. I should be glad to have full details about the circumstances of his arrest and an account of what has happened to him since his arrest.

I repeat that the activities of the organizations which have no concern with spying, diversionism, or terror. ganizations would not be necessary and would cease to human rights, such as freedom of speech, freedom of and freedom from arbitrary arrest existed in the Soviet Eastern Berlin. Nor can their activities justify the measures since last May, at the instigation of the Soviet authorities the principal channels of communication between East Germany have been obstructed or curtailed. I take the of reminding you that I have not received a reply to Mr. letter of June 30 ¹ in which your attention was called to matter. I cannot but conclude that the purpose of you to attempt, by its many unfounded allegations, to provide justification of these measures which hinder the reunification of Germany and which, as you are no doubt aware, have aroused spread and fully justified indignation throughout Germany.

23. BERLIN UPRISING: Message From the Allied Command Berlin to the Representative of the Soviet Control June 18, 1953 ²

As Commandants of the French, British and U.S. sectors and in the name of the Allied High Commission we desire to express our grave concern over events which have taken place in Berlin the past few days.

We condemn the irresponsible recourse to military force as its result the killing or serious wounding of a considerable number of citizens of Berlin including some from our own sectors.

We protest the arbitrary measures taken by the Soviet authorities which have resulted in the interruption of traffic between the sectors and free circulation throughout Berlin.

We formally deny that Willi Coettling, executed after a court-martial, was an agent provocateur under the orders of the Soviet service of a foreign power. His condemnation to death and execution on an empty pretext appear to us as acts of brutality which will shock the conscience of the world.

As the highest Soviet authority in the Soviet sector of Berlin we share with us the responsibility of guaranteeing the well-being and freedom of the people of Berlin. We therefore demand of the Soviet Government of Berlin as a whole that the harsh restrictions imposed on the movement of people in Berlin be lifted immediately and that free circulation within the city be reestablished.

24. BERLIN UPRISING: Letter From the Allied Commandants in Berlin to the Soviet Military Commander in Berlin,¹ June 24, 1953

We, the French, British and American Commandants, have received your letter of June 20³ and hasten to reject your allegations that the disturbances of June 17 were the result of action by groups sent from Western sectors of Berlin. The statement in the inclosure to your letter that an American called Heaver who was wearing a uniform with two stars, which are the insignia of a major general, was seen giving the instructions to organize the disorders is, we are sure you will agree, Major General Dibrova, unworthy of serious consideration and must be held to discredit the rest of the informant's testimony. You and the world are well aware of the true causes of the disorders which have recently occurred in East Berlin, and it is therefore unnecessary for us to tell you that the three powers in West Berlin had no responsibility whatever for instigating them.

We must therefore continue to demand that the remaining restrictions imposed on the Berlin population be lifted and that the steps which you have already taken to reestablish circulation within Berlin be carried to their logical conclusions, free and unfettered movement between all sectors.

We on our side shall continue as always to fulfill our responsibility for the maintenance of law and order in our sectors, and we are ready to do our part in reestablishing normal conditions of life throughout the whole city.

25. BERLIN UPRISING: Statement by the Secretary of State at a Press Conference, June 30, 1953⁴

I have long believed and preached that the Soviet was overextended having under its control some 600 million non-Russians representing what had been 15 or more independent nations. I have been confident that these people could not be moulded into the Soviet Communist pattern, particularly if the free peoples kept alive the hope of the captives and showed them that they were not forgotten.

There has now developed extensive unrest within the satellite countries of Europe. It demonstrates that the people do retain their love of God and love of country and their sense of personal dignity. They want to run their own affairs and not be run from Moscow. The unquenchable spirit of the peoples was dramatized in East

The cry everywhere is for "free elections." The people governed by those whom they select as responsive to their desires, rather than to be ruled by those who take from aliens and who give their orders with a view to their own ambitions without regard to the welfare of the people.

In my book War or Peace, written over 3 years ago, I said the Communist structure is over-extended, over-rigid and ill-balanced. It could be shaken if the difficulties that were latent were brought to light. I went on to point out that this does not mean an armed struggle would precipitate a massacre, but that short of this the Communists would demonstrate an independence such that the Soviet leaders would come to recognize the futility of trying to control so many peoples who, by their faith and their patriotism, would really be consolidated into a Soviet Communist world.

The developments of recent weeks show the correct diagnosis.

26. UPRISING IN EAST GERMANY: Letter From the the United States to the Chancellor of the German public, July 23, 1953 ²

MY DEAR MR. CHANCELLOR: During the developments and conversations between the U.S. Secretary of State and the Ministers of Great Britain and France, it occurred to me it might be helpful if I were to write you a letter in amplification of what was so tightly compressed in the final communiqué.³

It seems to me that certain definite patterns are emerging in the situation in East Germany and the Eastern European countries—patterns which will unquestionably have a profound effect upon the future, including the proposed meeting of the Ministers of the Four Powers.

I think, therefore, that it will be useful for me to share these thoughts with you in some detail at this time.

Great historical developments, such as the recent Berlin and German anti-Communist demonstrations,⁴ rarely have precedents. Nevertheless, I am quite certain that future historians, in dealing with the causes which will have brought about the disintegration of the Communist empire, will single out those brave East Germans who dared to rise against the cannons of tyranny with not only their bare hands and their stout hearts, as a root cause. I think that those same historians will record your own extraordinary us. I know that I need not go into any elaborate denial with the fantastic explanation put out by Moscow that the uprising was caused by American provocateurs.¹ No provocateur of rationality can persuade human beings to stand up in front of firing tanks with sticks and stones. Such action comes from the people and not from any foreign purse.

Second, this uprising was not just a momentary flash of desperation. The continuing news of disorders in Eastern Germany indicates a fundamental and lasting determination to be fully and finally free, after long years of stern Sovietization.

Third, nowhere were the rioters "bourgeois reactionaries" or "capitalist warmongers." They were workers. Therefore, the workers who fell before Russian Communist guns were the very workers in whose name the Kremlin has falsely and cynically justified their empire of oppression, their farflung "workers' paradise." Fourth, the fact of the uprising, the conduct of the German Communist leaders during the event and their actions since the event, indicate the complete political bankruptcy of the SED [Sozialistische Einheitspartei Deutschlands].²

Fifth, and to me of utmost significance, when the riots developed in the Russian sector of Berlin, the workers' chant was, "We want free elections." In this phrase, the people clearly and simply summed up their yearning for the alleviation of their grievances and sufferings. The combination of these five facts actually forms the background of that portion of the July 15 Foreign Ministers' communiqué³ dealing with German unification and free elections. And the communiqué itself, as you know, is actually the diplomatic confirmation of our own earlier statements, of my June 26⁴ cable to you, and, most important, of the resolution of the German Bundestag of June 10.⁵

In the past many months there have been endless arguments and debates on both sides of the Atlantic over the respective priorities and the words and phrases as "unification," "peace treaty," "free elections," "withdrawal of occupation troops," etc.

It has always seemed to me—and these recent events, to me at least, clearly confirm the thought—that there can be no solution without free elections and the formation of a free all-German Government, leading to unification. From that point on can flow a logical, orderly sequence of events, culminating in an honorable peace treaty and the re-emergence of a new united German Republic, devoted to the welfare of its own people, as a friendly and peaceful member of the European family of nations.

States will continue to lend the full force of its political and moral support.

There are sincere people in Germany, in the nation of Europe, and even in my own country, who have concluded that free elections, and therefore the unification of Germany, contradict and possibly exclude the concept of the European Community which has been ratified by both your House and Senate¹ and is now before your Constitutional Court. We have never accepted this theory that the EDC and Germany are mutually exclusive. Quite the contrary.

As the three Foreign Ministers stated at the conclusion of their recent meeting in Washington, since the European Community corresponds to the lasting needs of its members and to the peace, security, and welfare, it is looked upon as necessary and not linked up with existing international tensions.

It has long been my conviction that the strengthening of the Federal Republic, through adoption of the EDC, through the agreements and further progress in the integration of Western Europe, can only enhance the prospects for the peaceful unification of Germany, by increasing the attractive power of this prospect. Germany vis-à-vis the Soviet Zone, an attractive power has already been demonstrated by the steady stream of refugees in the months, as well as the demonstrations which began in 1953. This increasing contrast between Western and Eastern Europe, the latter with its bankrupt regime and impoverishment, will in the long run produce conditions which should lead to the liquidation of the present Communist dictatorship and Soviet occupation.

While a future all-German Government must obviously choose the degree to which it wishes to enter into other arrangements compatible with the principles of the United Nations, I can hardly imagine that it would seek the complete and premature disarmament in the presence of the Soviet Union still heavily armed. I believe this is a matter worthy of our attention. Those who in Germany believe they can find a safe solution through defenseless neutralization should ponder the true wisdom and safety of such a course.

Speaking for America, and I believe the rest of the world shares this view, I can say that there has been enough war and enough misery and enough destruction in the past to deter any people or any Government of the West from military aggression. But the peace we all so dearly s started something that will have an important place on the of history. May the concluding chapter of that history record emergence of freedom, of peace, and of happiness.

EAST GERMANY—FRIENDSHIP AND SYMPATHY OF THE AMERICAN PEOPLE: Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 36
(80th Congress, 1st Session), August 3, 1953¹

WHEREAS the brutal suppression by the Soviet Communist regime through the use of armed force and police terror of workers seeking the right of free assembly and other rights assured to all in the free world; persecutions of members of all religious faiths; the continuing brutality enforced upon the captive peoples; the systematic repression of non-Communist political elements in the Soviet-dominated countries and most recently the acts against the people of Soviet-dominated countries, deserves strongest condemnation; and constitute
(a) oppression of individual and human rights, and (b) persecution on account of race and religion; (c) violate the declarations in the Preamble to the Charter of the United Nations; and (d) violate the principles set forth in the American Declaration of Independence of 1776: ". . . that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness. . . . But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, all having invariably the same Object, evinces a design to reduce them under absolute Despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw away such Government, and to provide new Guards for their future

WHEREAS the people of East Berlin, East Germany, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Rumania, Hungary and other Communist-dominated countries have so courageously demonstrated their strong devotion to the principles of freedom and justice by their heroic resistance to terror, murder, imprisonment, reprisals and mass depopulation.

Resolved, That the Congress commends and encourages the struggle of these captive peoples for freedom.

Sec. 2. It is further the sense of the Congress that the United States express in the United Nations and in every other way of indignation of its people against these suppressions of religious persecutions in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the Communist satellites, its sympathy with the tragic victims of these suppressions and religious persecutions, and its demand that international law and individual and human rights be respected in the world.

Sec. 3. That the Congress of the United States in behalf of the American people hereby expresses the firm conviction that the people of East Germany are entitled to their basic, inalienable rights and freedoms for which they are now struggling.

Sec. 4. That the Congress of the United States further expresses the firm conviction of the American people that the people of East Germany, now presently divided, have the right to be a unified nation by their own consent by the free expression of popular will in free elections.

Sec. 5. That the Congress of the United States further expresses in behalf of the American people its friendship and sympathy for the people of East Germany, particularly those who have suffered at the hands of the Communists because of their patriotic defiance of Communist tyranny and denounces the action of the Communists in killing, imprisoning, and deporting those who have opposed their tyrannical rule, and asserts that the sacrifice and suffering will aid the cause of freedom in the Communist enslaved nations and will inspire freedom-loving people everywhere.

Agreed to August 3, 1953.

28. REMOVAL OF INTERZONAL BARRIERS: No. 100-100, United States High Commissioner ¹ to the Soviet High Commissioner, ² August 26, 1953 ³

It has long been the policy of my government to remove in the United States and Soviet zones. The continuation of the system of interzonal passes between our respective zones has in my opinion no justification and I consequently hope that you will agree that we should jointly waive this requirement for German Nationals. I therefore propose to you that we now jointly waive the allied interzonal pass requirement for the travel of German Nationals between and through the United States and Union of Soviet Socialist Republics zones. Simultaneously, the present German Aufenthaltserlaubnis [residence permit] requirement should be abolished by the respective authorities. The responsible German authorities in the United States zone will suspend the requirement of the Aufenthaltserlaubnis simultaneously with the waiver by us of the interzonal pass requirement. I hope that you will accept this proposal and that you will agree to make the necessary administrative arrangements in the Soviet zone so that German Nationals residing in Berlin, the Soviet zone and the United States zone of occupation will be able to travel between and through these zones of Germany and Berlin on the presentation of their identity card. As soon as you have informed me that these administrative arrangements are to be made in the Soviet zone, I shall order the waiver of the interzonal pass requirement for German Nationals traveling between or through our

I am informed that my British and French colleagues are approaching you with similar proposals.

REMOVAL OF INTERZONAL BARRIERS: Letter From the United States High Commissioner¹ to the Soviet High Commissioner,² September 17, 1953³

I have your letter of September 1,⁴ in which you reply to my proposal of August 26, 1953,⁵ that there be waived simultaneously the interzonal pass which is required by occupation powers and the Aufenthaltserlaubnis [residence permit] which is required by German authorities. I regret that instead of accepting my proposal, you have devoted the greater part of your letter to unfounded allegations that the authorities in the Federal Republic are hindering the interzonal travel of German Nationals. These allegations are so manifestly false that I do not propose to answer them. I would however point out that your claim that these obstructions exist should have led you to agree the more readily to my proposal to waive the inter-fact that the inter-zonal pass system was established by agreement and that therefore the waiver of this requirement matter falling solely within the authority of the occupying powers.

As regards the views of the Federal Republic of Germany on this subject, I should like to call your attention to the uncertainties contained in the resolution of the Bundestag on 10 June 1953 calling for free circulation of all Germans throughout Germany in the subsequent decision of the Federal Cabinet of August 1953 asking for removal of all restrictions imposed on international travel by reason of the inter-zonal pass requirement.

By these actions the Federal Republic of Germany has declared its desire and willingness to do everything possible about conditions permitting unrestricted travel throughout Germany of German Nationals irrespective of their place of residence. For this reason the German authorities in the US Zone have already informed you in my letter of August 26, 1953, that they have granted thaltserlaubnis simultaneously with our waiver of the inter-zonal pass requirement, on condition that German authorities in the Soviet Zone do the same.

I wish therefore to reiterate to you my proposal contained in my letter to you of August 26, 1953, that "we now join the Allied inter-zonal pass requirement for travel of German Nationals between and through the US and USSR Zones."

On condition that you will have informed me in advance of your agreement to institute similar measures simultaneously with me, I propose to waive, effective 24:00 hours September 30, 1953, the inter-zonal pass requirement for German Nationals proceeding from established crossing points to the US Zone from the Soviet Zone, whether from many or from Berlin. At the same time, I request that you have those inter-zonal crossing points which were closed on various occasions at various dates prior to the middle of 1952.

Since my British and French colleagues are making a similar proposal, German Nationals would then be able to travel throughout Germany on the simple presentation of their identity papers.

30. REMOVAL OF INTERZONAL BARRIERS: Letter from the United States High Commissioner ² to the Soviet High Commissioner, ³ February 22, 1954 ⁴

At the meeting in Berlin on February 18 of the Foreign Ministers of the U.K., U.S.A., France and the U.S.S.R. it was result for the German people from the present division of Germany. Although such steps are no substitute for the reunification of Germany and the conclusion of a peace treaty, which remain the objectives of its policy, the U. S. Government considers that it should be possible for the four occupying powers in Germany to reach immediate agreement on the elimination of a certain number of unjustifiable obstacles which still prevent freedom of movement between the different parts of Germany. The U.S. Government believes that the Four Powers could in this way bring about an immediate and essential improvement in the living conditions of all Germany. I therefore propose to you that we shall agree that each of us should, as appropriate, take the following measures:

A. The abolition of the requirement for residence permits for Germans residing in the Federal Territory who desire to travel to the Soviet Zone. The maintenance of this formality in fact considerably reduces the effect of the abolition of interzonal passes which was decided at the end of 1953.

B. The opening of the inter-zonal crossing points which have been closed by the Soviet authorities on various dates before the middle of 1952. I would remind you of the proposal on this subject made to you in my letter of January 8.²

C. The improvement of inter-zonal road and rail transport services including the introduction of fast rail services with improved passenger facilities between the principal cities of West Germany on the one hand and East Germany and Berlin on the other.

D. The removal of the prohibited zone, the barbed wire fence and all other barriers placed in the Soviet Zone along the Soviet Zone border.

E. The abolition of all controls and of all impediments to the free circulation of printed matter.

As regards Berlin, we should agree upon suitable methods for re-establishing more normal living conditions for the inhabitants of the city. In particular, I consider it necessary to reach decisions on the two following questions:

A. The abolition of all formalities re movement of persons between Berlin and the Soviet Zone.

B. The removal of all impediments to the free movement of persons and of goods between the Western sectors of Berlin and Western Germany; in particular the abolition of the requirement for the endorsement of Warenbegleitscheine [certificates for goods in transit] for such goods by the authorities of the Soviet Zone and the introduction

If, as I hope, they are acceptable to you, technical may be required concerning proposals B and C in paragraph 3. In that event I shall be prepared to furnish the names of the technical experts authorized to deal with these matters in Western Germany and I would be glad to obtain corresponding information from you.

I have authorized Gen. Timberman¹ to make contact with Dengin² and to transmit to him a proposal dealing with the restrictions which we wish to see eliminated in Berlin.³

31. REMOVAL OF INTERZONAL BARRIERS: Letter from the United States Commandant in Berlin⁴ to the Berlin Representative⁵ of the Soviet High Commissioner,⁶ February 22, 1951

In his letter of February 22⁸ the United States High Commissioner⁹ has drawn Mr. Semenov's attention to the need for establishing more normal living conditions for the inhabitants of the city of Berlin. In particular he has expressed the desire that the occupying powers should reach agreement on the removal of the barriers to the freedom of movement of persons and goods between the Western sectors of Berlin and Western Germany and the abolition of all formalities re the movement of persons between the Western sectors and the Soviet Zone.

In the same spirit and in order to eliminate all restrictions to the freedom of communications between the four sectors of the city, I request you to agree that the following measures should be put into effect:

A. The abolition of police controls at the borders and the removal of all forms of hindrance to the complete freedom of movement of persons and goods throughout the city.

B. The removal of all street barriers between sectors.

C. The re-establishment of direct tram services throughout the city.

D. The re-establishment of the automatic citywide telephone service.

E. The re-establishment of reliable and efficient postal services throughout the city.

² Sergei Dengin, Representative of the Soviet High Commissioner in Berlin.

The abolition of controls over and interference with the free circulation of printed matter, films and other cultural media throughout the city.

I am convinced that an agreement should be reached on these urgent proposals for the common good of the people of Berlin and I am ready, for my part, to discuss with you without delay all the measures required to put them into force.

Should technical discussions be required concerning proposals such as those mentioned above, I am prepared to furnish the names of the German officials authorized to deal with these matters for my sector. I should be glad to receive similar information from you.

REMOVAL OF INTERZONAL BARRIERS: Note From the United States High Commissioner¹ to the Soviet High Commissioner,² March 17, 1954³

I have received your reply of March 6, 1954,⁴ to my letter of January 22 in which I proposed to you that we should agree to work with the British and French High Commissioners in Germany to eliminate immediately a number of unjustifiable obstacles which prevent freedom of movement between the different parts of Germany.

I regret, however, that instead of replying positively to my proposal of dealing with the practical and urgent problems with which we are faced, you have confined yourself in your reply merely to rejecting M. Molotov's proposal for all-German committees⁵ which was rejected by the three Western Foreign Ministers at the Berlin Conference.

The matters covered by my proposal must continue closely to be discussed by the four occupying powers until such time as the reunification of Germany takes place. None of these powers can rightly evade its responsibilities in that respect. It is, therefore, the duty of the four powers to secure the removal of obstacles to free movement of German citizens between the different parts of Germany, and insofar as the continued existence of such obstacles is due to action or inaction on the part of the authorities in Soviet occupied territories, my government will continue to hold the Soviet authorities responsible for this. I intend to further progress in the direction of German reunification. It is for this reason that I have requested you, in my previous letter, to inform me of the Soviet attitude towards the specific pro-

It is clear that certain of the questions mentioned in February 22 require only unilateral decision and action by the authorities of the Soviet Zone. These are:

(A) The abolition of the requirement for residence permits for Germans residing in the Federal territory who desire to travel to the Soviet Zone;

(B) The removal of the prohibited zone, the barbed wire, and all other barriers placed in the Soviet Zone along the border;

(C) The abolition of all formalities regarding movement between Berlin and the Soviet Zone.

If, as I hope, the Soviet authorities share my government's desire to alleviate conditions which are oppressive to the German people, may I ask you to indicate to me at an early date that you are ready to take steps to have the above measures put into effect?

With regard to the further proposals made in my letter of February 22, I suggest that, in every case in which we consider that discussions should take place between German technical experts and Soviet experts, a view to reaching practical solutions which, once they are agreed, should become effective without delay. I shall be ready to inform you already informed you, to furnish you with the names of persons authorized to deal with these matters in respect of West Germany, who would then meet with corresponding experts to be designated by you. If you agree with the foregoing, I suggest that the next step should be for us to meet in order to draw up terms of reference which would enable the discussions between experts to be held.

33. STATUS OF EAST GERMANY: Joint Declaration of the United States, British, and French High Commissioners, April 1955

The Allied High Commission desires to clarify the position of the three governments which it represents toward the statement issued on March 25 by the Soviet Government, purporting to describe its relations with the Government of the so-called German Democratic Republic.² This statement appears to have been intended to create the impression that sovereignty has been granted to the German Democratic Republic. It does not alter the actual situation in the Soviet Zone. The Soviet Government still retains full control there.

The three governments represented in the Allied High Commission

They believe that this attitude will be shared by other states, who like themselves, will continue to recognize the Government of the Federal Republic as the only freely elected and legally constituted government in Germany. The Allied High Commission also takes this occasion to express the resolve of its governments that the Soviet action shall not deter them from their determination to work for the reunification of Germany as a free and sovereign nation.

4. REMOVAL OF INTERZONAL BARRIERS: Letter From the United States High Commissioner ¹ to the Soviet High Commissioner, ² May 24, 1954 ³

I acknowledge receipt of your reply, dated April 17, 1954,⁴ to the second letter I had sent you, on March 17, 1954,⁵ putting forward positive suggestions for the elimination of unjustifiable obstacles which prevent freedom of movement for Germans between the different parts of Germany.

In my letter of March 17, I drew your attention to unilateral measures which the authorities in the Soviet Zone could themselves make to this end without the need for any further consultation between us. I regret to note that no action has so far been taken by the authorities in the Soviet Zone to put these measures into effect and that you do not even refer to them in your reply. I further regret that you have made no response to my suggestion that arrangements should be made which would enable discussions to begin between German technical experts on those proposals in my letter of February 2 on which consultation is required.

Instead you have invoked the Soviet Government's statement of March 26 [March 25] regarding the status of the German authorities in the Soviet Zone and you have once again repeated the Soviet proposal, which has already been rejected by my Government, for the establishment of "all-German Committees".

I must make it clear to you that my Government still regards the Soviet Union as the power responsible for the Soviet Zone of Germany. My Government does not recognize the sovereignty of the East German regime. In this connection, I take the opportunity of drawing your attention to the declaration made on April 8 by the High Commissioners of the United Kingdom and France and myself, a copy of which I enclose.

You have also repeated your charges about alleged criminal organiz-tions and unfounded accusations, does not make a positive contribution to the problem of removing the restrictions on freedom for the German people, and serves only to accentuate the division of Germany.

So long as this division exists it remains the duty of the occupying powers to do everything in their power to lessening the hardships resulting from it. I do not intend to be diverted from the constructive proposals I have already made to you and to take all the measures indicated in my letter of March 1954, therefore that, in order that we may make genuine progress, I am therefore proposing that, in order that we may make genuine progress which are of real importance to the German people, you accept my proposals without further objections.

35. ALLIED POLICY TOWARD BERLIN: Declaration of the Foreign Ministers of the United States, the United Kingdom and France, October 23, 1954 ¹

With respect to Berlin, in addition to the Allied security arrangements for the city in the London communiqué of October 1954, the Foreign Ministers of France, the United Kingdom and the United States have noted with deep satisfaction the close cooperation between the Allied and Berlin authorities. The Allied Powers are determined to ensure the greatest possible freedom of movement for the government in Berlin compatible with Berlin's special needs. Accordingly, the three Governments have instructed their representatives in Berlin to consult with the authorities of that city in order to implementing jointly and to the fullest degree possible the following principles.

36. ROAD TOLLS IN THE SOVIET ZONE: Letter from the United States High Commissioner ³ to the Soviet High Commissioner, March 31, 1955 ⁵

It has been brought to my attention that the East German authorities propose to increase drastically, with effect from April 1, 1955, the tolls which vehicles not registered in the Soviet Zone are charged for the use of roads within the Soviet Zone. In practice, this measure will affect primarily vehicles registered in the Federal Republic of Germany and Berlin.

The reason given for this measure is that tolls will be charged for the use of roads within the Soviet Zone.

butions are already being made by operators of Berlin and West German vehicles for this purpose. If there were actually any new toll in this connection, this could most appropriately be discussed with German experts with the Treuhandstelle fuer den Interzonenhandel.

The proposed increases are, however, so exorbitant that they cannot be justified purely on economic grounds. Increases which would result in many cases to fees of more than ten times the present rate would be so abnormal that this measure can only be regarded as politically inspired and intended to impede the free movement of persons and goods between the Federal Republic and Berlin, as well as between the Federal Republic and the Soviet Zone.

Any action which might have this result would clearly conflict with the obligations contained in the New York and Paris agreements of May and June, 1949.¹ I hope therefore that in view of the responses of the Soviet authorities in such matters you will have the necessary steps taken to have the proposed measure withdrawn without delay.

ROAD TOLLS IN THE SOVIET ZONE: Letter From the United States High Commissioner² to the Soviet High Commissioner,³ April 15, 1955⁴

In my letter of March 31⁵ I drew your attention to the proposed introduction of drastic increases in the fees payable by vehicles not registered in the Soviet Zone for the use of roads in the Soviet Zone. We received no reply to this letter and, despite my request that you should take the necessary steps to have the proposed measures withdrawn, the new fees were imposed with effect from April 1.

I pointed out in my letter to you of March 31, these increases were so exorbitant that they cannot be justified on economic grounds. It is estimated by competent experts that the revenue collected from the road tax in effect prior to April 1, which in 1954 is understood to have amounted to between DM 4,300,000 and DM 5,000,000, was sufficient to provide for the maintenance of highways in the Soviet Zone used by West German traffic. If, however, in view of the economic difficulties of the Soviet Zone, the East German authorities have been unable to provide the necessary funds for road maintenance without increasing their revenues from this tax, this should be a matter for consultation between the experts concerned. Nevertheless, although the West German experts in the Treuhandstelle have expressed representatives have refused to do so. This refusal con- expressed in my letter of March 31 that the increase regarded as politically inspired and intended to im- movement of persons and goods between the Federal Berlin and between the Federal Republic and the Soviet

At the sixth session of the Council of Foreign Minist June, 1949,¹ the Soviet Government gave certain under were set out in a communiqué issued at the close of t These undertakings included the following statement:

In order to improve and supplement this and other arrange- ments as regards the movement of persons and goods and com- tween the eastern and western zones and between the zones and in regard to transit, the Occupation Authorities, each in his own an obligation to take the measures necessary to ensure the nor- and utilization of rail, water and road transport for such move- and goods and such communications by post, telephone and tele-

The arbitrary action of the East German authoritie these exorbitant increases, on which there was no pric with the West German experts, is clearly inconsis Soviet Government's undertakings, since it interfere "normal functioning" of road transport in the Soviet Z

I therefore consider that the Soviet authorities are ensuring that these increases are withdrawn without a continuation of the present situation can only make in interzonal trade, affect the welfare of Berlin and lead in tension within Germany, I propose that the four l sioners should meet in Berlin as soon as possible to disc- ment of this problem.

38. ROAD TOLLS IN THE SOVIET ZONE: Letter Fr States High Commissioner ² to the Soviet High C May 2, 1955 ⁴

I have received your letter of April 30, 1955 ⁵ in which your readiness to accept my proposal for a meeting problem arising from the imposition by the East Germ of exorbitant increases in the charges payable for the the Soviet Zone by vehicles not registered in that zone

I cannot accept that this matter, insofar as it conc- tween the Federal Republic and the Soviet Zone an Federal Republic and Berlin, is solely within the re- the East German authorities. On the contrary, in reof the four-power agreements of May and June, 1949,¹ I must insist on the responsibility of the representatives of the four powers in Germany regarding this matter which directly affects the normal functioning of such traffic.

In the light of the foregoing, I suggest that we meet to discuss this matter on May 7 at 3 p. m. in the Allied Control Authority Building in Berlin or, should you prefer, in your office.²

39. ROAD TOLLS IN THE SOVIET ZONE: Communiqué by the American, British, and French Ambassadors to Germany, May 20, 1955³

The French Ambassador to the German Federal Republic, M. François Poncet, the United States Ambassador, Dr. James B. Conant, and the British Ambassador, Sir Frederick Hoyer Millar met today with the Soviet High Commissioner, Mr. G. M. Pushkin to discuss the question of tariffs on highway traffic to Berlin which have been imposed by the Soviet Zone authorities. The meeting took place at Mr. Pushkin's office in the East Sector of Berlin. The Western ambassadors proposed that German experts be designated to study the problem and agree upon a solution to be recommended. The Soviet High Commissioner rejected this proposal and declared that the matter was solely within the competence of the East German authorities. He stated that the question could be solved only by direct discussions between the West and East German authorities and did not fall within the scope of the Four-Power Agreements of 1949. In view of this attitude, it was decided by the three ambassadors that the question should be referred to their respective governments.

40. THE SOVIET UNION AND EAST GERMANY: Statement to the Press by the Foreign Ministers of the United States, the United Kingdom, and France, September 28, 1955⁴

The Foreign Ministers of the United States, the United Kingdom and France wish to make known their view on certain points in connection with the agreements of September 20, 1955, as reported in the press, between the Soviet Union and the regime in the Soviet zone of Germany.⁵

under agreements and arrangements between the Three the Soviet Union on the subject of Germany and Berlin. Union remains responsible for the carrying out of these Secondly, the three Foreign Ministers reaffirm that Republic of Germany is the only German Government legitimately constituted and therefore entitled to speak for as the representative of the German people in international relations. These three governments do not recognize the East German nor the existence of a state in the Soviet zone.

Finally, as regards a statement which has recently appeared in the Soviet press on the frontiers of Germany,¹ the three Foreign Ministers reaffirm the repeatedly expressed position of their Governments that the final determination of the frontiers of Germany must be the result of a peace settlement for the whole of Germany.

41. THE SOVIET UNION AND EAST GERMANY: Note by the American Embassy at Moscow to the Soviet Foreign Ministry, October 3, 1955²

The Government of the United States of America, in agreement with the Governments of the United Kingdom and France, wishes to make known its position with regard to the agreements concluded on the 20th of September 1955 between Marshal Bulgarin and Grotewohl, as published in the press.³

The three Governments declare that these agreements do not in any respect or in any way the obligations or responsibilities of the U.S.S.R. under agreements and arrangements on the subject of Germany, including Berlin, previously concluded between the United States, the United Kingdom and the U.S.S.R.

The three Governments consider that the U.S.S.R. remains bound by the engagements which it has assumed vis-à-vis the Three Big Powers concerning Germany, and that, in particular, the letter of understanding between Mr. Zorin and Mr. Bolz on the 20th of September 1955 have the effect of discharging the U.S.S.R. from the responsibilities which it has assumed in matters concerning transportation and communications between the different parts of German-occupied Berlin.

DETENTION OF AMERICAN CITIZENS IN EAST BERLIN: Letter From the United States Commander¹ to the Soviet Commander,² November 28, 1955³

AR GENERAL DIBROVA: I wish to bring to your attention the example of the lawless action of the "Peoples' Police" in the East sector of Berlin. This incident occurred yesterday about 10:00 in the vicinity of the Soviet Garden of Remembrance in Treptow. It involved two members of the Congress of the United States of America, the wife of one of the Congressmen, and an officer of the United States Army who is under my command.⁴

The party was about to leave the Garden of Remembrance in an official military vehicle of Berlin Command, a member of the "Peoples' Police" ordered them to remain on the spot. The policeman then demanded that the keys of the vehicle be handed over to him, and on a show of reluctance on the part of the United States Army officer the policeman drew his pistol from his holster and cocked it menacingly.

Under this threat, the officer handed over the keys. When the officer attempted to use the radio telephone in the vehicle in order to inform this Headquarters of the incident, he was prevented from doing so by another policeman who likewise drew his pistol from his holster and cocked it in a threatening manner.

The reason given by the policeman for this ruffianism was that it was forbidden by the laws of the so-called German Democratic Republic for a foreign power to maintain and operate radio transmitters in Berlin.

After approximately three hours of detention by policemen, the party was forced to follow a Soviet official in a Soviet vehicle to your quarters at Karlshorst. They were in turn followed by the Soviet policemen in their vehicle.

At that time the Provost Marshal of Berlin Command arrived at Karlshorst and was received by Colonel Kotsiuba.⁵ According to the Provost Marshal's report, Colonel Kotsiuba affirmed the statement of the policemen that the party had violated the laws of the "German Democratic Republic."

The party was eventually released approximately four hours after their original detention.

I wish you to know, General Dibrova, that of all the incidents which have affected the relations between our two Commands during the past few years, I consider this one by far the most serious. I insist that an explanation be given why the policemen assumed the authority to interfere with the liberty of the United States officials, and, further-

If the report of Colonel Kotsiuba's statement with laws of the "German Democratic Republic" is correct, answer quite clearly that the laws of the "German Republic" can have no applicability whatsoever to the in I have described to you.

On November 29, General Dasher, the United States in Berlin, called on General Dibrova, the Soviet Com protest against an incident which occurred on November incident involved the unwarranted detention in the So Berlin of an American military vehicle of the Berlin c its occupants, including two members of the Congress States of America.

I am informed that General Dibrova refused to a Dasher's protest and that in justification he made cert concerning the applicability to this case of the laws of Democratic Republic" and the relationship between the of Berlin and the "German Democratic Republic".

I must renew the protest made by General Dasher ag ence with the freedom of Allied circulation in Berlin and grossly discourteous and threatening conduct displayed States citizens by persons acting under Soviet authority. I do not consider the attempted justification of this acceptable.

As for General Dibrova's assertions, they are wholl with the quadripartite status of Berlin. continue to hold the Soviet authorities responsible for the welfare and proper treatment of all United States citizens during their presence in those areas, including the Soviet sector of Berlin, which are subject to Soviet authority and control.

44. STATUS OF BERLIN: Remarks to the Press by the Secretary of State, December 6, 1955¹

Q. Mr. Secretary, would you comment on the events in Berlin during the last week?

A. Well, do you refer to the retention, temporarily at least, of these two Congressmen that were there, or the barges?

Q. I was thinking specifically of the barges and the larger issue raised on the status of the city.

A. Well, the action taken about barges, which now is reported very largely in the press, is action that was taken last October. It is nothing that took place last week. So far there has not been any interruption of the normal movement of traffic through the canals and we have no evidence to anticipate that there will be, although that is always a possibility. But we expect that the Soviet will respect, and assure respect for, the agreement that was made in Paris in June, I think it was, 1949 with respect to assuring the normal access, by rail and water, of the West to Berlin.² We take the position, as you know, that nothing that the Soviet itself can do can relieve the Soviet of its international obligations. We expect to hold the Soviet to its international obligations. We have no evidence as yet that those international obligations will be violated.

Q. Mr. Secretary, did the United States concur in that British concession that the East German Government could control the inland waterways? This decision, you say, was reached last October.

A. The announcement that the licenses would be issued by the East German regime, the so-called GDR, with authority in East Berlin, was, I think, acquiesced in by the British, in whose sector is, I think, the barge terminal. That took place, as I recall, last October. Now that did not involve, of course, any recognition of the exclusive authority of those German Communist authorities in that zone over the area, or any waiver of the rights which we have under the Paris agreement of 1949. If the Soviet chooses to carry that out through

C. RELATIONS WITH AUSTRIA, 1950-195545. COMMUNIST DISTURBANCES: Statement to the
the Acting Secretary of State,¹ October 6, 1950

The firmness and determination with which the Austrians have reacted to the recent Communist-inspired disturbances in Austria and the prompt and courageous action taken by the Austrian Government and police to maintain law and order are highly commendable. I am sure, to the American people as a whole. The actions of the Austrian Government in this respect have the full support of the United States Government.

The agreement on control machinery, signed by the four Big Four powers on June 28, 1946,³ provides that the Allied Commission shall assist the Austrian Government to recreate a sound and stable national life based on respect for law and order. This agreement charges the Allied Commission with responsibility for maintaining law and order if the Austrian authorities are unable to do so. It authorizes the High Commissioners to act independently in their respective zones in the absence of the Allied Commission. Needless to say, this Government will take all proper action to fulfill its international commitments with respect to the maintenance of law and order in the areas of responsibility in Austria.

46. COMMUNIST DISTURBANCES: Message From Secretary of State⁴ to the Austrian Chancellor,⁵ October 10, 1950

I have just received your telegram of October 5⁷ addressed to Mr. Acheson in which you refer to the urgent request submitted by your Government to the Allied Council to take immediate and appropriate measures to enable the Federal Government to fulfill its constitutional duties and appeal to the U.S. Government to supply the necessary power to support your Government in its efforts to maintain law and order.

The actions taken by your Government to maintain law and order in the face of recent Communist-inspired and Soviet-sponsored disturbances⁸ have the full support of this Government. I am particularly gratified at the courageous and determined manner issued a statement to the press along the foregoing lines ¹ shortly to the time your telegram came to my attention and I hope that news, and I am sure I speak for the American people as a whole, serve to assure your Government and people of our confidence in and of our deep appreciation of the firmness of purpose which have displayed in their efforts to maintain independence and of action under these trying circumstances.

the course of demonstrations in the Soviet zone of Austria on April 4 and 5, 1950, the Soviet commander in the city of Wiener Neustadt obstructed efforts of the Austrian police to restore general order.

commander ordered the withdrawal of the police sent to Neustadt by the recognized Austrian authorities to maintain order and to protect life and property from the rioters. In these measures, the Soviet commander threatened that the Soviet forces would act against the Austrian police should they fail to comply with his orders.

The law enforcement activities of the Austrian Government have been further hampered by the Soviet officer who commanded the president of the Vienna police immediately to recall to his sector any police forces employed outside that sector, nullifying the orders for dismissal and transfer of Austrian police officers without the consent of the Soviet element of the Interallied Council to forbid the employment of police forces of the Soviet Government in Vienna in any other sector.

As stated above, the Allied Council, by its terms of reference, is called upon to concern itself with the maintenance of law and order in Austria. Thus, article 3 D of the control agreement authorized the Allied Commission to assist the Austrian Government to maintain control of the affairs of state in Austria. Suppression of law and order of police is patently inconsistent with this objective, and the responsibility of the Allied Commission to assist the Austrian Government to recreate the respect for law and order. The actions of elements of the population acting against the authority of the Austrian Government and its police and forcing the seizure of a government building to a rioting mob are contrary to the terms of the control agreement and call for action by the Allied Commission.

The Allied Commission did not consider that any of the provisions set out in article 2 C of the control agreement authorized it to act directly rather than through the Austrian Government was relevant in this case. The Allied Commission, therefore, took no action. Paragraph 2 D of the control agreement authorized in certain circumstances independent action by the Allied Commissioners in the absence of action by the Allied Council. This provision is equally inapplicable in this case. The Soviet commander's justification to maintain law and order at Wiener Neustadt when Austrian authorities had already done so.

Article 1 of the control agreement states unequivocally that the authority of the Austrian Government shall extend fully over Austria with two exceptions, execution of directions from the Allied Commission and questions defined in article 5. In these circumstances the Allied Commission had issued no directives and certain conditions existed in which article 5 would apply. Any move to disarm the police and to establish internal boundaries of their tates, therefore, calls upon the Soviet Government to issue appropriate instructions to the Soviet authorities in Austria to desist from interfering in the police functions of the Austrian Government.

8. TRAVEL REQUIREMENTS: Statement to the Press by the Department of State, November 20, 1950 ¹

The Department of State announced today that effective December 1, 1950, no Allied Force permits will be required of American citizens desiring to enter the United States, United Kingdom, or French zones of Austria. On the basis of a bilateral United States-Austria agreement, citizens of the United States will be able to enter Austria on the basis of a valid American passport only. However, in order to travel into the Soviet zone of Austria and to Vienna, the occupation force travel permit (grey pass) will continue to be required.

The United States, United Kingdom, and French Governments have taken this step in abolishing the requirement of Allied Force permits into their zones of Austria in accordance with their desire to normalize the relations between Austria and the occupation powers and to discontinue as far as possible all restrictive controls in Austria.

9. SOVIET INTERFERENCE IN AUSTRIAN AFFAIRS: Note From the American Ambassador at Moscow ² to the Acting Soviet Foreign Minister, ³ November 22, 1950 ⁴

The Ambassador of the United States of America presents his compliments to the Acting Minister of Foreign Affairs of the U.S.S.R. and has the honor to invite the Ministry's attention to questions which were raised in the Allied Council in Austria on November 10, 1950: unjustified Soviet interference in the administration of Austrian law enforcement agencies since disturbances on October 4, 1950, which were the subject of his government's communication of November 1, 1950.⁵ The Government of the United States has been informed that, contrary to established Four Power agreements and practice, the local Soviet authorities have endeavored arbitrarily to prevent the Austrian Government from implementing disciplinary measures against certain malfeasant police chiefs in the Soviet sectors of Vienna. Information available to this government reveals that, under the protection and orders of Soviet officials, suspended police chiefs have Soviet representative in the Vienna Inter-Allied Commission aggravated this cleavage in the Austrian law enforcement by unilaterally ordering the Federal Police-Commissioner to draw administrative actions of any nature affecting police in the Soviet Zone unless prior approval has been obtained from Soviet authorities. Without regard to the obligation of the Inter-Allied Commission to the parties to the Control Agreement in matters affecting the Austrian police, the Soviet Commander unilaterally ordered the Austrian Government to suspend criminal proceedings against certain Vienna police officers arising from their violation of Austrian laws during occupation in Vienna. Soviet orders further prohibit either criminal or disciplinary actions against any Austrian police officers in the Soviet Zone. Such orders not only constitute a violation of the Control Agreement but a serious impairment of power of the federal police to perform their duty of maintaining law and order.

The Federal Chancellor of Austria in letters of October 1945 presented evidence to the Allied Council of the above ill-considered actions clearly established that the Soviet occupation authorities attempted to prevent the exercise of the legal right of the Austrian Government to suspend the police chiefs of the second, fourth, twentieth, first, and twenty-fifth bezirke of Vienna. The Chancellor's communication verified the report that the execution of instructions by the central police officials was made dependent upon approval by the Soviet authorities.

The position adopted by the Soviet authorities fails to take into account the fact that the Allied Council has entrusted the Austrian Government with responsibility for the maintenance of law and order. Their actions likewise clearly contravened the provisions of Article 2 of the Control Agreement, which sets forth the conditions under which any one of the occupying authorities may act independently.

There is no evidence that the Austrian authorities in the Soviet Zone or their police are or have at any time been unable to maintain law and order except to the extent they have been prevented from doing so by Soviet intervention.

When confronted with the Chancellor's charges in October 1945, the Soviet High Commissioner adopted the attitude that he was entitled under the Control Agreement to exercise his own authority in questions concerning police in the Soviet Zone of Vienna. Despite the joint responsibility of the four High Commissioners for the conduct of occupation affairs, the legal basis for the Soviet position was set forth in this Embassy's note of November 1, 1945, despite a precedent of four years of inaction.

Control Agreement in order to bring to the notice of the Allied Council his disapproval of administrative actions of the Austrian authorities, and thus to enable the Allied Council to take, if it thought necessary, the action foreseen by that article.

These matters, following upon the events communicated in the Embassy's note of November 10, 1950, are brought to the attention of the Government of the U.S.S.R. because of the grave consequences to our common objective in Austria if international agreements continue to be disregarded. In consequence, the Government of the United States is obligated to renew most vigorously its protest against the actions of the Soviet occupation authorities and particularly against their usurpation of the clearly defined powers of the Allied Council. The Government of the United States once again requests the Soviet Government to issue appropriate instructions to its authorities in Austria to conform strictly to the solemn obligations entered into by the Four Powers, with a view to avoiding a serious deterioration of functioning of the quadripartite machinery in Austria.

10. REPLY TO SOVIET CHARGES REGARDING AMERICAN POLICY: Statement Before the Allied Council by the United States High Commissioner,¹ October 12, 1951 ²

At the last meeting of the Allied Council the Soviet High Commissioner³ was prompted to make a statement under the item, "Any Other Business," on a subject which, I should have thought, he would have preferred to avoid in this body: namely, the exploitation of Austria, and remilitarization. As I indicated at that meeting, I also should like to ask the question: "Who is exploiting Austria?" and "Who is supplying visible evidence of militarization" at the time?

It seems to me that our Soviet colleagues would have the Austrian people not believe their own eyes. He referred to jet airplane factories, V-2 plants, and a number of other alleged and mysterious military enterprises which, he charged, were to be found in the American zone of Austria. The charges were so preposterous that I at once extended an invitation to General Sviridov on behalf of General Irwin⁴ to come and see these imaginary installations for himself. Not having heard from General Sviridov, I took pleasure in allowing three Soviet newspapermen to tour the zone in hopes they would present a true picture to General Sviridov. The failure

Today is not the first time that these Soviet charges have been refuted. The U.S. High Commissioner presented assurance to the Allied Council on September 13, 1946, that his zone had been demilitarized in accordance with the control agreement reaffirmed on several subsequent occasions, notably on December 1, 1947. The Allied Council reported to the Council of Ministers on February 8, 1947, that there were no military organizations in existence which were known to be active in the U.S. zone. The Allied Council reported to the Council, that all known military armament and equipment had been destroyed or rendered useless or entirely removed from the zone, that all known military personnel had been taken over by the Occupying Powers, that all known military installations had been destroyed or dispersed except those which were taken over by the Occupying Powers, and that all industrial enterprises and technical, scientific, and research institutions formerly engaged in the production of, or research in, military armament had been demilitarized and placed under the supervision of the Occupying Powers in their respective zones. Again, the Allied Council reported on December 23, 1947, that all former war production facilities were inspected by the Military, Naval, and Air Directorates were found to be entirely in peacetime production.

ECA CONTRIBUTIONS TOWARD AUSTRIA'S REHAB

I would be the first to agree that the Marshall Plan, Soviet Element sees a spectre of disaster for Austria hundreds of millions of Schillings on improving roads, communications, building dams, repairing bridges, and providing dwellings along with the power and light to go into them. Soviet Element, of course, is proud of the extensive contributions people have made toward Austria's rehabilitation—and the use of ECA investments represents the most effective use of Austrian Government has been able to apply this aid. It is that so far, the Austrian authorities have not ment would be pleased to see the discontinuation of ECA with its consequences of impoverishment and unrest, but I can assure you that it is our desire and the desire of the Austrian people that it be continued—and it will be continued.

In the minds of more objective experts, Austrian production including that aided by ECA, is entirely devoted to peacetime goods. In interpreting the Soviet definition of "military-industrial potential" my attention was drawn to a statement by the Soviet Element in an executive committee meeting some years ago, in which a button factory was labeled as "military potential," since it might be converted to producing buttons for military pants. If buttons are militarily dangerous, then so are kitchenware, knitting needles, cosmetics, cigarettes, bicycles, farm tractors, and plows, and all other similar items now being produced in the Western zones—at least to the person who cannot get war out of his mind.

In expressing compassion for the heavy burden borne by the Austrian workers, the Soviet Element neglects to add that first and foremost, they must pay for the continued maintenance of a Soviet field army of upward of 50,000 men in the Soviet zone of Austria. The Austrian worker, farmer, and businessman must also continue to defray in tax payments the cost of housing requisitioned for the Soviet forces—a mass of buildings which has been estimated at amounting to one-third of all the available housing in the Soviet zone.

The Soviet High Commissioner speaks of military installations in Western Austria, which I have invited him to come and inspect. He does not speak of the vast Soviet training area of Doellersheim from which Austrian farmers have been evicted; he says he does not even know the location of it. Here, to refresh his memory, is a map showing the location of Doellersheim—an area larger than the city of Vienna. On it you will also find the Soviet military bastion of Baden. You will find the Soviet maneuver area at Apetlon. You will find the locations of the military airfields used by the Soviets for their fleets of jet and bomber aircraft.

DISMANTLING OF AUSTRIAN INDUSTRY

The Soviet High Commissioner voices his concern about the use of some of the Marshall Plan funds that are being put into Austria. Let me remind him of the extent of what the Soviets, for their part, are taking out of Austria. Let us begin by recalling that dismantling of Austrian industrial equipment upon order of the Soviets reached a total value of over 200 million dollars. Then Soviet removals pay no normal taxes—a fact which has so far deprived Government and people of fully half a billion Schilling. They live outside the law; they ignore all Austrian legislation. They drain off Austrian natural and industrial wealth to the East—billions of Schillings' worth within the country—and bring back nothing in return. It is imperialism of the worst sort. It is not only a monopoly, but a colonial monopoly. It dominates the central part of Europe, and this in the year 1951.

I find that the antiquated Soviet charges of Austrian repression and human rights violations have been well aired in past Allied Council meetings. I believe the U.S. High Commissioner aptly presented the Allied Council viewpoint in the Allied Council meeting of April 28 last. The fact that 5 years after these spurious assertions were made, Austria without a single soldier gives ample proof of the truth and the nature of these empty allegations. I need only refer to the Soviet Element to the speech made by Foreign Minister Grunder in Vienna yesterday for a very effective reply to these charges. The Austrian gendarmerie, to which the Soviets objected, is only the modern police force receives. The Soviet disappointment in the existence of an efficient police and gendarmerie is understandable since these law enforcement agencies constitute the main obstacles to the promotion of internal disorders so near the objectives of Soviet puppets whose loyalty lies not with Austria.

I would like to discuss the kind of peace that reigns in the Soviet zone. In the last 6 years, the Soviet zone and sector have been the scene of hundreds of abductions of Austrians, many of whom have vanished without known charge or trial. The lawlessness of the interior.

Is it "peace" when an Austrian police inspector, suddenly and secretly whisked away—and when 3 years later the Soviet Element casually admits his abduction? Or when Paul Katscher, also seized and deported back in Austria, was in captivity that same year. How do we know? Because the Soviet Element finally got around to admitting it—2 years later. In the Soviet zone last month, a tank company of the Soviet army came out for a shoot and casually blasted a terrified little village, Breitenbrunn.

I was struck with the peculiar similarity of Grunder's statement and that made by the Soviet Element in 1948. From a close comparison, they appear to be the same tirade. Yet in spite of all the dire predictions of Austrian doom, might, we find 3½ years later a country completely demilitarized, its military forces, and instead devoting its energies entirely to the General Sviridov's statement is replete with inaccuracies, misleading statements, and baseless allegations, designed for the sole purpose of trying to further frustrate a good Austrian people who have been subject to Soviet obstructionism and delaying tactics for the past years. The Austrian people are fed up with the occupation. They want the occupying forces to leave the country, and they should have, and they should have left a long time ago. If there is one iota of sincerity in the Soviet statements, then I challenge them to meet with the Western Powers at the earliest possible moment to conclude the State Treaty so that all of the occupying forces may withdraw from this country forthwith. We are sincere in this statement. It is now up to the Soviets to prove their sincerity, and make it possible for the hundreds of prisoners of war and the kidnapped Austrians to return to their families.

U.S.S.R. CHALLENGED TO ACT ON AUSTRIAN TREATY

The United States has full confidence in the Austrian Government and the Austrian people, and it is committed to the policy of cooperating with them in rehabilitating their country and in reestablishing their independence and sovereignty, which was promised them as long ago as the Moscow Conference of 1943.¹ We will not deviate one moment from this policy.

1. SOVIET CHARGES AGAINST AUSTRIA: Instruction From the Secretary of State to the United States Representative on the Allied Council,² May 20, 1954³

The attention of the world is concentrated primarily on the Geneva Conference and Indochina at this time. Because of that, I wish to express my strong feeling that recent events in Austria should not go unnoticed. The preservation of the authority of the freely elected Austrian Government throughout Austria, in accordance with the Allied Control Agreement,⁴ is, I believe, a matter of serious concern to all of us who live under similarly elected democratic governments. As you have reported, the Soviet High Commissioner in Austria on May 17 peremptorily summoned the Chancellor and Vice-Chancellor of Austria to his headquarters and there delivered a lengthy and virulent condemnation of the Austrian Government. The condemnation, which is clearly without foundation, included accusations of hostile and subversive actions against the Soviet occupation missioner intensified the allegations, which the Soviet Foreign Minister made officially at the Berlin conference as an excuse for not to grant Austria her long-promised independence, of Austria for remilitarization and for an Anschluss with Germany. The most revealing of all were the charges against Mr. Helmerle, Austrian Minister of the Interior, and the threat that should the Austrian Government fail to take corrective action, then the Soviets would be forced to take appropriate measures.

These efforts are clearly meant to intimidate the government of a free people. The Soviets had already made plain at the conference that they intend to remain in Austria indefinitely. They are threatening to strengthen and expand their control in the occupied area of occupation. I was gratified to note that the formal charges against the representatives of the Kremlin were denied by the Chancellor, the Vice-Chancellor in the best tradition of the courageous post-war Government coalition. If there have been any expressions of dissatisfaction over the nine-year occupation of an occupied country, surely the Soviet Government should find this surprising nor a threat to its own security.

The Soviet High Commissioner gave the appearance of speaking on behalf of the Allied Council. I know of no foundation for the Soviet charges, but in order to remove any possible Soviet misunderstanding of the United States attitude towards its latest action, I therefore, instruct you to request at the next meeting of the Allied Council consideration of the Soviet allegations and threats. The Allied Council has not only powers in Austria but responsibilities toward her government and people.

Any threat of further limitation to Austrian independence is a matter of grave concern not only to the Austrian Government but also to the other three occupying powers. Indeed such a threat could not but be a cause of concern to the entire free world.

52. AUSTRO-AMERICAN RELATIONS: Joint Communiqué November 26, 1954²

The visit of the Federal Chancellor of Austria, Julius Raab, to Washington has provided a most welcome opportunity for the officials of the United States to become personally acquainted with the Chancellor and to review with him the international situation as a whole. Matters of mutual interest to the governments of the United States and Austria were discussed in detail.

and Secretary of State, John Foster Dulles, on November 22 have been cordial, informative, and constructive.

The prospects for a Treaty for Austria were reviewed and it was agreed that both governments would continue with determination to work together for a State Treaty which would provide for the withdrawal of all occupation troops from Austria at an early and fixed date. It was noted that the United States, Great Britain, and France had on November 18 [19] submitted to the Secretary General of the United Nations a report of their efforts to achieve an Austrian State Treaty.¹

The Chancellor reviewed the political and economic situation existing in Austria today. The stability and progress achieved by Austria, in spite of the devastations of war and the burdens imposed by the continued occupation of the country, were recognized by the representatives of the United States as being a remarkable and concrete proof of the courage, resourcefulness and fortitude of the Austrian coalition government and its people. The Chancellor outlined his plans and hopes for the further development of Austria's hydroelectric potential for the mutual benefit of Austria and neighboring states. Further development of these plans will be followed with great interest by United States authorities.

The Chancellor held useful conversations with the Departments of State and of Defense on the question of further alleviating the burden of occupation by the release of requisitioned housing presently held by the United States authorities in Austria. Plans to this end now under consideration in the Department of Defense were reviewed.

The question of claims by American citizens against the Austrian government stemming from the Nazi occupation of Austria was discussed. It was agreed that a prompt and just settlement of these claims should be sought.

The discussions held during the Chancellor's visit re-emphasized the friendly relationship which exists between the governments of Austria and the United States. By this visit the ties which link the people of Austria to the people of the United States have been further strengthened.

53. AUSTRIAN NEUTRALITY: Note From the Secretary of State to the Austrian Ambassador,² December 6, 1955³

The Secretary of State presents his compliments to His Excellency the Ambassador of Austria and has the honor to acknowledge receipt 1955, the federal constitutional law relative to the Republic of Austria, which entered into force November 5, 1955.¹

The Secretary of State has the honor to inform the Ambassador, in compliance with the request expressed under acknowledgement, that the Government of the United States has taken cognizance of this constitutional law and reaffirms its policy of perpetual neutrality of Austria as defined therein.

D. NEGOTIATIONS WITH OTHER NATIONS REGARDING GERMANY, 1950-1952

54. STATEMENT BY THE UNITED STATES HIGH COMMISSIONER,² FEBRUARY 28, 1950³

I have on two recent occasions in Berlin stated that the unification of Germany on the basis of free all-German elections is a major objective of United States policy.

The aspiration of the Germans for unity and freedom is challenged by the Communists of the Soviet Zone, who offer to form a so-called "National Front" as a means to "democratize" the elections in the East Zone now scheduled for October 1950. Claimed as affording an opportunity of expressing the people's will. But only one kind of freedom will be permitted: freedom of expression. Elections: freedom to vote for a single list of candidates to advance only by the Party elite which executes dictatorial orders of the Union. In contrast to this travesty, the people of Western Germany enjoy the political freedoms so conspicuously absent in the East: the right to engage freely in party activity and the right to vote for any candidate.

We understand the universal German urge for unification and deplore the exploitation of that feeling by dishonest devices.

"Article I

"(1) For the purpose of the lasting maintenance of her independence and for the purpose of the inviolability of her territory, Austria declares on her own free will her perpetual neutrality. Austria will maintain an attitude of neutrality with all means at her disposal."

Soviet-sponsored "National Front" and its proposed plebiscite. These devices fraudulently excite and exploit the natural wish of the German people for unity while denying to them the free and democratic processes by which unity can be attained. The reluctance of the Communist usurpers of East Germany to submit to free elections, or to permit the unification of Germany to proceed thereby, makes abundantly clear that they are unwilling to trust the choice of the German people. My Government stands ready to assist the German people to achieve unity, based on true democratic principles and reflecting the aspirations of the entire German nation.

Unity and freedom can be attained in Germany only if there be full and equal opportunity for all parties throughout Germany to propose candidates, advance programs, and compete for the electorate's favor. All candidates must be assured complete freedom of action without discrimination or official favoritism, together with access to all essential media of communication and material facilities. Every voter must be assured the protection of the law in the free expression of his opinion at the polls. The press must have unhindered access to all areas in order to report the election campaign accurately.

Meanwhile, my Government is extending its full support to the Bundesrepublik, which has evolved from those democratic processes to which all Germans can aspire.

5. DECLARATION BY THE FOREIGN MINISTERS OF THE UNITED STATES, THE UNITED KINGDOM, AND FRANCE MAY 14, 1950¹

In reaffirming the determination of their Governments to work together, in cooperation with the German Federal Government and all like-minded Powers, for the unification of Germany, the three Foreign Ministers agreed that German unity should be achieved on the basis of the following principles:

- (a) A freely-elected all-German government.
- (b) Individual freedom of movement, freedom from arbitrary arrest and detention, freedom of association and assembly, freedom of speech, press and radio throughout Germany.
- (c) Freedom of action throughout Germany for all democratic political parties.
- (d) Independence of the judiciary.
- (e) Prohibition throughout Germany of political secret police and

(g) Surrender and disposal, in accordance with German legislation, of any industrial enterprise in Germany in which ownership or control was acquired after May 8, 1945 by or for a foreign Power, unless such acquisition has quadripartite approval; the interest so approved is subjected to German Law.

(h) Establishment of quadripartite supervision of the German Atomic Energy Commission, exercising its reserve powers in such a way as to permit the German Government to function effectively.

The Foreign Ministers further agreed that the first step in the restoration of German unity should be the holding of free elections to a Constituent Assembly. The Ministers warmly welcome and endorse the resolution of the German Government of March 22, 1950,¹ inviting free all-German elections to a national assembly empowered to frame an all-German constitution. These elections should be held under international supervision on the basis of an electoral law to be agreed between the four Powers which would take into account the principles of democracy. The Constituent Assembly when elected should have the right of drafting a constitution for submission to the German people for ratification.

Finally, the Ministers agreed that with the formation of a German government on the basis of the foregoing principles, the four Powers should immediately address themselves to a peace conference.

56. LETTER FROM THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT TO THE SOVIET GOVERNMENT IN BERLIN ² TO THE CHAIRMAN OF THE SOVIET-AMERICAN COMMISSION, ³ MAY 25, 1950 ⁴

DEAR GENERAL CHUIKOV: Throughout the five years since the end of the war, which our two governments have participated in the reconstruction of Germany, repeated efforts have been made to effect the economic unity of the country. The matter was raised again by the Foreign Ministers of the United Kingdom and the United States at London. Their conclusions on German unification and the manner in which it might be achieved are attached. (See Annex A.)⁵ This document has been forwarded to the Chancellor of the German Federal Republic.

You will note that the Ministers agreed that the first step in the restoration of German unity should be the holding of free all-German elections to a national assembly empowered to frame an all-German constitution. These elections should be held under international supervision on the basis of an electoral law to be agreed between the four Powers which would take into account the principles of democracy. The Constituent Assembly when elected should have the right of drafting a constitution for submission to the German people for ratification.

public communiqué released by the Ministers on May 14,¹ it was stated that the Western Powers did not contemplate the conclusion of a separate peace treaty with the Federal Republic: one consideration in the formulation of this conclusion was that the Western Powers believe that a separate peace treaty with one or more zones of occupation connotes acceptance of a concept of a more permanent partition of Germany. The Western Powers do not wish to associate themselves with any such concept.

You will also note that the Ministers endorsed the resolution of the Federal Republic under date of March 22, which invited all German elections to a National Constituent Assembly under conditions found to be acceptable to my government. A copy of the text of this resolution is attached (See Annex B),² and I direct your attention especially to paragraph 1 thereof, which suggests that the four occupation powers should assume the responsibility of framing an electoral law under which all-German elections might be conducted.

My government would be prepared for me to share in the responsibility of framing an electoral law under which all-German elections pointing toward the formation of an all-German Government in conformity with the principles set forth in the attached statement of the Foreign Ministers, could be held.

Should your government declare its acceptance of these principles and be willing to share such responsibility, it is the belief of my government that any discussions on the subject should be conducted via the following principles:

1. Conversations would initially be undertaken at the level of the four Commissioners for the limited purpose of drafting an electoral law to implement the Federal Republic's proposal of free all-German elections for a National Constituent Assembly. The proposal to limit discussions to the framing of an electoral law proceeds from a belief that it is unrealistic to discuss or arrange the desired peace settlement until it is established that a unified German Government freely elected, can be brought into being.

2. If agreement is reached on an electoral law, the way would be clear for the drafting by the elected representatives of the German people of a constitution for all Germany, within the framework of the principles set forth in the attached statement of the Foreign Ministers, and for the emergence of an all-German Government.

3. A basis would thus be laid for the establishment of a four power commission which should exercise its reserved powers in such a way as to permit the German Government to function effectively.

To all persons concerned in this subject

57. STATEMENT TO THE PRESS BY THE STATE, OCTOBER 25, 1948

I should like to anticipate your questions on the communiqué issued at Praha and the Eastern European Communist Foreign Ministers' meeting to give the impression that a new approach is in the air. I cannot find anything new in the proposals to old and unworkable proposals.

The record shows that we have always been in the search for a plan which would relieve tension, unity, and liquidate the tragic heritage of the last war. It has long since passed when the world can be divided into several phrases from the Soviet Union about democracy and German unity. We, who have striven so long for peace and want actions—we want the threatening East German banding, the capricious restraints on internal freedom, and free democratic elections held in all of Germany—end to threats such as that uttered by the deputy head of the East German regime, on October 1, 1948, declared that the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany what he hoped was going to be the fate of the German people.

The Praha statement makes four proposals. It deflects us from our resolve to proceed to build a new world as the best means of safeguarding the peace.

First, it is proposed that the United States and the Soviet Governments should publish a declaration that they permit the remilitarization of Germany or it is a sign of aggressive plans. Why is this necessary? At Potsdam in 1945 to bring about the complete demilitarization of Germany.³ As a result, Germany is disarmed today. The Praha communiqué shows that the Government of the Soviet Union, which could not enforce the Potsdam Agreement 100 percent completely, is taking the required steps in the Soviet zone. The demilitarization in Germany has occurred in the Soviet zone. The producing armament for Eastern European countries. The soldiers have been organized, trained, and equipped with artillery. And against whom are all these armaments being made? The United States and the free world are watching these developments with increasing anxiety. We are sometimes more reassured by Soviet action to implement the Potsdam conditions than by new declarations, however high rearming of East Germany, the maintenance of so many mobilized Soviet divisions, or the hostile Soviet propaganda with which the world is constantly bludgeoned. These are the reasons why proposals are made today which would permit the Germans to join their own defensive efforts with the common efforts being made to strengthen the defense of the West, while preventing the rebirth of a German national army.

Second, the Praha communiqué urges the removal of restrictions that are obstructing the development of German peacetime economy. If this demand is addressed to Moscow, we will heartily support it. We have spent billions in an effort to develop the German economy on a sound and self-supporting basis. We made innumerable attempts—fruitless because of Soviet opposition—to bring about the creation of central German economic agencies and with hopeful, misplaced, tolerance we long left the Eastern borders of our zone open to the free exchange of goods and persons. If the German economy, as a national whole, is to be restored on a sound basis, what we need is action from the country which blockaded Berlin, which imposes the most arbitrary and erratic restrictions on commerce entering or leaving its zone of occupation, and which has destroyed all economic initiative in its zone by the system of Communist monopoly of enterprise and industry.

The Praha communiqué demands, in the third place, that a peace treaty with Germany be concluded forthwith. We state, as we have so many times in the past, that this cannot be done in the absence of a unified democratic national government in Germany. The peace treaty cake looks very delicious, but to whom is it to be served? There must be a German government with whom a treaty can be concluded. Let the German people freely elect a national government, as we have proposed again and again, and we can then move toward a peace treaty.

As for the fourth proposal, it is even more insubstantial than the first. It suggests that an all-German constitutional convention composed of equal numbers of representatives from Eastern and Western Germany should prepare the way for the formation of a provisional all-German government. Would the East German representatives be appointed by the Communist Party regime or would they perhaps have the added cover of a fake election of the type held in Eastern Germany on October 15? And why should the 18 million captive Germans of the East have equal representation with the 47 million free Germans of the West? This violates the most elementary ideas of democracy. We strongly support the views which have been expressed by Chancellor Adenauer and the Government of the Federal Republic. We have proof. Instead, it abuses, by its perversion of language, hope for peace and understanding, for an end to fear. Against that abuse, I raise a solemn protest.

58. NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN EMBASSY AT MOSCOW TO THE SOVIET MINISTER OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS, NOVEMBER 22, 1950²

1. The Embassy of the United States of America has acknowledged the receipt of the note of November 3, 1950, from the Soviet Minister of Foreign Affairs.³ This note enclosed a declaration published in Prague October 22, 1950,⁴ and a meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers of the United States, United Kingdom, France, and the U.S.S.R. to consider the fulfillment of the clauses of the Potsdam Agreement concerning the demilitarization of Germany.

2. The United States Government has consistently adhered to the principle set forth in the Charter of the United Nations that international problems should be settled by peaceful negotiation.

The United States Government takes this occasion to reaffirm its adherence to this principle. This is in full accord with the spirit of the recent General Assembly resolution⁵ supported by the United States Government which calls attention to the desirability of consultations which would help to allay existing international tensions. Far from having any aggressive intentions toward the Soviet Union, it is inspired by a genuine desire to put an end to the international tension and will spare no effort to achieve so high an end. It is prepared on the basis and in the manner set forth below to explore with the Soviet, British, and French Governments the possibility of finding a mutually acceptable basis for the settlement of the Foreign Ministers of the four countries.

3. The Government of the United States has studied the note of the Soviet Government of November 3, 1950, and is obliged to note with regret that the basis proposed in the note is not such as to afford any prospect of a genuine settlement. The Soviet proposal to examine the question of the demilitarization of Germany will not suffice to remove the causes of the present international tension. The only German military force which exists at present is the force for many months in the Soviet zone has been trained to fight along lines with artillery and tanks. If the participation of Germany in the defense of western Germany is being discussed to examine all means of improving their security. Contrary to the entirely false allegations contained in the Prague communiqué the United States Government in common with the Government of France and the United Kingdom is determined never to permit at any time or in any circumstance western Germany to be used as a base for aggression. The United States Government has no feeling of confidence that the same is true of that part of Germany under Soviet occupation, in view of the rearmament taking place in eastern Germany referred to above.

4. It is furthermore impossible to envisage a just settlement of German problems on the basis of the Prague communiqué. This communiqué contains no new or constructive feature and the solution proposed therein has been rejected by the majority of German opinion. It does little more than reiterate in substance previous propositions which proved after exhaustive examination to afford no basis for a constructive solution of the German problem. For the purpose of ending the present division of Germany the United States Government in conjunction with the French and British Governments has for its part more than once made proposals for restoring German unity by means of free elections held under international supervision. These proposals were sent by letter by the three High Commissioners to the head of the Soviet Control Commission on May 25, 1950,¹ and October 9, 1950.² No reply has been made to these letters.

5. The serious tension which exists at present springs neither from the question of the demilitarization of Germany nor even from the German problem as a whole. It arises in the first instance from the general attitude adopted by the Government of the U.S.S.R. since the end of the war and from the consequent international developments of recent months. The Governments of the four powers would be failing in their full responsibility if they were to confine their discussion to the narrow basis proposed by the Soviet Government. Questions related to Germany and Austria would obviously be subjects for discussion. But the United States Government believes that any discussions should include equally the principal problems whose solution would permit a real and lasting improvement in the relations between the Soviet Union and the United States, Great Britain, and France and the elimination of the causes of present international tensions throughout the world.

6. The United States Government is prepared to designate a representative who, together with representatives of the Soviet, British, and French Governments would examine the problems referred to in the preceding paragraph with a view to finding a mu-

7. The United States Government would appreciate the views of the Soviet Government concerning the proposals set forth in the present note.

59. NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES AT MOSCOW¹ TO THE SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTER
JANUARY 23, 1951³

The Chargé d'Affaires of the United States of America has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the note of December 30, 1950, from the Soviet Minister of Foreign Affairs and, under instructions from the United States Government, to reply as follows:

The purpose of the United States Government is to seek to reduce existing international tensions by discussing all problems which threaten world peace with a view to resolving the differences between nations. It therefore confines itself to a further examination of the question of the basis on which negotiations might take place and refrains from refuting the allegations on a number of points, especially in regard to those which are made in the Soviet Government's note. As the United States Government has repeatedly pointed out, particularly in its note of December 22, 1950,⁵ these allegations are completely without foundation.

With regard to the substance of the Soviet Government's note, the United States Government observes that the Soviet Government does not object to a preliminary conference of representatives of the two governments but, in view of other statements in the note, the United States Government feels it necessary to ask for clarification to avoid any misunderstanding and to make it possible that a preliminary conference should serve a useful purpose.

The United States Government in its note of December 22, 1950, stated that the Soviet proposal for a meeting of the Foreign Ministers confined to considering the demilitarization of Germany in accordance with the so-called Praha Declaration⁶ was not acceptable for the reasons therein given. The note proposed specifically that a meeting of the Foreign Ministers should include in its discussions not only matters related to Austria and Germany but also the principal problems of international peace and security. A successful solution would permit a real and lasting improvement in between the Soviet Union and the United States, Great Britain, and France and the elimination of the causes of present international tensions throughout the world.

In its reply, the Soviet Government limited itself to an indication that it is willing to discuss questions concerning Germany. In this connection, the note of the Soviet Government refers again to the so-called Praha Declaration which the United States Government as well as the Governments of France and the United Kingdom have made clear they could in no circumstances accept as a limitation on discussions as a basis for discussions.

The note of the Soviet Government thus does not reveal whether that government agrees that a meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the four countries would deal with the other questions indicated in the note of the United States Government. The United States Government wishes to emphasize, as was stated in its note of December 22nd, that the tension which exists in the world today does not arise from the German problem. A discussion limited to the question proposed by the Soviet Government would therefore be inadequate and unreal.

Consequently, the United States Government would be glad to know whether the Soviet Government does agree that those further questions and problems referred to above will be among those which the Foreign Ministers may discuss.

In its note of December 22, the United States Government further proposed that representatives of the four governments be designated to meet and examine the problems just referred to with a view to finding a mutually acceptable basis for a meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the four countries and recommending to their governments a suitable agenda.

In the view of the United States Government, these representatives would need to give some consideration to the questions and problems involved in order to determine their formulation for inclusion in the agenda as well as the order in which they would appear so that the mutually acceptable basis referred to could be established. It would not be the function of the representatives to attempt to arrive at solutions of the problems, this function being reserved for the Ministers themselves.

While the note of the Soviet Government states that it does not object to a preliminary conference of representatives of the four governments, it is not clear, in view of other statements in the note, whether the Soviet Government agrees that the function of such a preliminary conference should be as stated above. Consequently, the United States Government would be glad to know whether the bove. If the Soviet Government does agree, the United States Government for its part is ready to set, in agreement with the Governments of the United Kingdom, France, and the Soviet Union, the date of the exploratory meeting of representatives.

50. NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN AMBASSADOR AT MOSCOW¹ TO THE SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTER,² FEBRUARY 19, 1951³

The Ambassador of the United States of America has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the Soviet Government's note of February 5, 1951,⁴ and under instructions from his Government, to reply as follows:

The United States Government regrets that the Soviet Government in its reply repeats and further exaggerates inaccurate statements about the policies and motives of the United States, France, the United Kingdom as well as the German Federal Republic. The Soviet allegations are totally without foundation.

The attempt to eliminate the causes of international tension is a subject which so deeply touches the interests of all peoples that it demands the most serious and honest consideration. Clearly, if these causes are to be eliminated, they must first be correctly identified.

It is obvious that it is not the German problem or the consideration of a German contribution to the defense of Western Europe which lies at the root of the present tension. The United States Government wishes to emphasize, moreover, that in Western Germany there do not exist any German military forces, or any German war industry and that the only fait accompli in this field in Europe is the existence of the huge armaments maintained by the Soviet bloc which include forces raised in East Germany. In short, as the United States Government stated in its note of December 22 the serious tension which exists at present arises in the first instance from the general attitude adopted by the Government of the U.S.S.R. since the end of the war.

The Soviet Government has referred to the defense program undertaken by the United States and the free nations of Europe. It must be as apparent to the Soviet Government, as it is to world public opinion, that the free nations of the world, confronted with the vast armed forces maintained by the Soviet Union and the nations under for their own security the great disparity in armed forces existing in the world.

The United States Government wishes to insure that the discussion at any meeting of the four Ministers shall include these real causes of tension and that a suitable agenda to that end be drawn up. Since the Soviet Government has admitted the possibility of discussing questions other than Germany, and has itself drawn attention to that of armaments, the Government of the United States, which desires to raise this question, assumes that the Soviet Government does not object to the representatives of the four Governments in the preliminary conversations preparing an agenda which will cover the causes of tension in Europe, including the existing level of armaments problems affecting Germany; the Austrian treaty. The formulation of these and other subjects which may be agreed upon, as well as their order on the agenda, will naturally be considered at the preliminary conference.

If the Soviet Government agrees with the basis outlined above for a preliminary conference in Paris, the United States Government suggests that the representatives of the Four Powers meet there on March 5. If, as the Government of the United States hopes, the preliminary conference of representatives finds a mutually acceptable basis for a meeting of the ministers, the Government of the United States suggests that the Foreign Ministers of the United States, France, the United Kingdom, and the Soviet Union meet in Washington on a date to be recommended by the representatives. The Government of the United States is informed that these arrangements would be convenient to the Governments of France and the United Kingdom.

61. NOTE FROM THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO THE SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTER,¹ MAY 31, 1951²

The Secretary of State presents his compliments to His Excellency the Foreign Minister of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and has the honor to refer to the current Four Power negotiations in Paris.

Since March 5 the representative of the United States, together with the representatives of France and the United Kingdom, has been engaged in discussions with the representative of the Soviet Union in a preliminary conference in Paris. This preliminary conference was agreed upon as a result of an exchange of notes which ended with the note of the United States Government dated February 19, 1951³ and the reply of the Soviet Government dated such an agreement has not yet been reached.

In the course of the discussions, the views of the four delegations were brought out and clarified. Considering that the discussions have provided all the elements necessary for agreement on an agenda, the representatives of the United States, United Kingdom and France presented to the Soviet representative on May 2 a new proposal containing three alternative agenda.¹ The purpose of these three alternatives was to assure the possibility of the meeting of the four Foreign Ministers. It has been, and remains, the view of the United States Government that such a meeting is desirable in the interest of strengthening peace, which is the constant objective of the foreign policy of the United States.

In the course of the examination of these three alternatives the representatives in Paris were unable to reach full agreement. As regards the first alternative, the only difficulty was that the wording proposed by the three delegations for the sub-item concerning armaments was not acceptable to the Soviet delegation. The third alternative was not accepted by the Soviet delegation as a basis for agreement. In the second alternative, however, modifications were made in Item 1 and there is now agreement among the four delegations on the presentation of this item as well as on the inclusion of four other items in the agenda and on their wording. Apart from the final order of these four items, which remains to be determined, but which was thought not to present major difficulties, agreement could have been reached on the second alternative if the Soviet delegation had not insisted on the acceptance of their proposal relating to the North Atlantic Treaty.

The United States Government for its part considers that the amount of agreement so far reached on the agenda makes possible a meeting of the four Foreign Ministers which would permit discussion among others of all topics proposed by the Soviet Government in the exchange of notes preceding the Paris conference and on the 5th and 6th of March at the outset of that conference. Accordingly, the United States Government is pleased to invite the four Foreign Ministers to meet in Washington and suggests that the meeting begin on July 23. The United States Government is prepared to participate in such a conference not only on the agenda (alternative B) described above, but also on either of the two other agenda (alternatives A and C). The texts of these three proposals are enclosed.

The United States Government hopes to receive an early reply from the Soviet Government indicating its readiness to accept the invitation and stating which of the three agenda it finds acceptable for the purpose of holding a meeting of the four Foreign Ministers. Any further arrangements for the meeting could be worked out on receipt of a favorable reply from the Soviet Government.

The Secretary of State presents his compliments to His Excellency the Foreign Minister of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and has the honor to refer to the current four-power negotiations in Paris.

1. The United States Government communicated on May 31³ to the Soviet Government a note designed to remove the deputies conference from the deadlock in which it has been for some weeks. To this end the United States Government proposed, together with the Governments of France and the United Kingdom, that a conference of Ministers should meet on the basis of whichever one of the three agenda which had been submitted to it the Soviet Government should prefer.

The negative reply of the Soviet Government has put the deputies conference back to the point at which it was before May 31.

The Soviet Government stated in its note of June 4⁴ that in its view it would be inexpedient to interrupt the work of the conference. The United States Government took account of this recommendation. As a result the deputies have held further meetings. These meetings have shown again that it is impossible to make any progress. The Soviet representative in fact continues to make the meeting of Ministers of Foreign Affairs conditional on a demand which it knows to be unacceptable to the other delegates although the Soviet delegate has obtained satisfaction insofar as concerns the inclusion in the agenda of all the questions which the Soviet Government stated that it wished to have discussed in its notes leading up to the conference or in the proposals which it made for the agenda at the beginning of the conference.

2. If the insistence of the Soviet Government on including in the agenda some mention of "the Atlantic Treaty and the American military bases" is to be explained by its desire thus to secure directly or indirectly a decision of the Ministers calling into question a treaty concluded by twelve powers for the purpose of ensuring their common defense and to which the U.S.S.R. is not a party, it is clear that this insistence is entirely unjustified since such a decision does not come within the competence of the meeting of Ministers.

If on the other hand the purpose of the Soviet Government is solely to reserve the right of the Soviet Foreign Minister fully to give his interpretation of the causes and effects of international tension, this insistence is unnecessary since it has been agreed that the agenda should contain a general heading which would permit each Minister to express his point of view on these matters.

3. Considering that the further discussions between the deputies on this question which the Soviet Government proposed in their note of June fourth have not advanced the prospect of agreement the United States Government proposes that the Foreign Ministers of the four powers without further efforts by the deputies to complete an agreement on the agenda should meet on the basis of the large measure of agreement already reached by the deputies in Paris. Taking into account agenda B¹ and the notes which have been exchanged between the Soviet Government and the other governments in which their respective points of view are recorded, the four Foreign Ministers should be able to proceed without delay to their task of seeking to reduce the existing tensions in Europe.

63. DECLARATION BY THE DEPUTIES OF THE FOREIGN MINISTERS OF THE UNITED STATES, THE UNITED KINGDOM, AND FRANCE, JUNE 21, 1951²

1. On June 15 the three western governments communicated a renewed invitation³ to the Soviet Government to attend a meeting of the four foreign ministers on the basis of the large measure of agreement reached at the Paris conference on an agenda and taking into account the views of the Soviet Government and the three western governments concerning the chief point in disagreement.

2. As has been fully explained by the three representatives today the Soviet Government's reply of June 19 constitutes a rejection of this invitation since it is a reaffirmation of the position previously taken up by the Soviet Government. The experience of the deputies in resuming their meetings in accordance with the proposal made in the Soviet note of June 4 shows that the continuation of this discussion has no practical utility.

3. The invitation to the Soviet Government for a meeting of the four foreign ministers, in accordance either with the notes of the three western governments of May 31 or those of June 15, 1951,⁴ remains open and the three governments express the hope that the Soviet Government, after further consideration, will find it possible to transmit through the diplomatic channel its acceptance of this invitation. In this case, if necessary, representatives of the four governments could meet immediately in order to settle the date and other detailed arrangements for the meeting of ministers.

Your letter 202-04 II 11375/51 of October 4² was transmitted to the three Governments represented on the Allied High Commission and has been considered by them.

In your letter you repeated the proposals made by the Federal Government on March 22 and September 14, 1950³ and on October 10, 1951⁴ for the holding of free, general, equal, secret, and direct elections in the whole of Germany. You also requested the Governments of the four Occupying Powers to give the German people the opportunity to elect under international supervision and under legal and psychological conditions specified in the various laws of the Federal Government, a constituent and legislative assembly. The three Governments, who have always supported and continue to support the unification of Germany as soon as it can take place along democratic lines insuring the creation of a free and many able to play its part in a peaceful association of free nations, now renew their support for the idea of elections under safeguarding conditions which have been specified, as necessary, to protect the individual and national liberties of the German people. They refer among other things to the letters sent by the French, British, and United States High Commissioners in Germany on May 26 [May 25], 1950⁵ and on October 10, 1950 to the Soviet Union by Chuikov,⁶ to the statements issued by the British, French, and United States Foreign Ministers in London on May 14, 1950, in New York on September 19, 1950⁷ and to the proposals made by the British, French, and United States Deputies at the Four Big Powers Conference on March 5, 1951.⁸

In your recent letter you have made an additional proposal. I have just written you and wrote:

The Federal Government feels obliged to do all in its power in order that the actual conditions for holding of all-German elections, proposed, are given. Vis-à-vis the territory at large, this can only be done by an international commission—under United Nations control—carrying out investigations in the Soviet Zone and in the Federal Republic, to establish under prevailing circumstances make the holding of free elections possible. The Federal Government requests that such an international enquiry be immediately set out for the territory of the Federal Republic and would ask the Governments represented in the Allied High Commission to propose the establishment of a commission to the United Nations without delay. The Federal Government will in every way facilitate the execution of the tasks of such a commission and will in particular allow it access to all Federal and Land Administration as well as to all official papers and documents which it may require to see in order to complete its task.

The three Governments warmly welcome the constructive initiative which you have taken in making the proposal for a United Nations commission to investigate the extent to which prevailing circumstances allow the holding of free elections in the Federal Republic and in the Soviet Zone of Germany. They have not failed to note the desire of the Federal Government that such an inquiry take place immediately in its territory. The three Governments desire to inform you that they will, at the first suitable opportunity put your views before the United Nations and will propose that the United Nations undertake an investigation over the whole area of Germany as is suggested in your letter. They consider that only by such means can it be expeditiously and satisfactorily determined whether or not conditions exist in the entire area of Germany which would make it possible to consider as a practical matter the holding of general elections.

65. GENERAL ASSEMBLY RESOLUTION 510 (VI),
DECEMBER 20, 1951¹

Whereas the Governments of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the United States of America and France, acting on a proposal made by the German Federal Chancellor,² have brought before the General Assembly a request³ for the appointment of an impartial international commission under United Nations supervision to carry out a simultaneous investigation in the Federal Republic of Germany, in Berlin, and in the Soviet Zone of Germany in order to determine whether existing conditions there make it possible to hold genuinely free elections throughout these areas,

Whereas the statements made by the representatives of the Federal Government of Germany, of Berlin, and of the Soviet Zone of Germany before the Ad Hoc Political Committee⁴ reveal differences of opinion with regard to the conditions existing in these areas, which make it essential that such an investigation shall be carried out by an impartial body,

The General Assembly,

Having regard to the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations as set out in the Charter, taking due account of the responsibilities of the four Powers regarding Germany, and desiring to make its contribution to the achievement of the unity of Germany in the of Brazil, Iceland, the Netherlands, Pakistan and Poland will carry out immediately a simultaneous investigation in the Federal Republic of Germany, in Berlin, and in the Soviet Zone of Germany to ascertain and report whether conditions in these areas are such as to make possible the holding of genuinely free and secret elections throughout these areas. The Commission shall investigate the following matters in so far as they affect the holding of free elections:

(a) The constitutional provisions in force in these areas and their application as regards the various aspects of individual freedom, in particular the degree to which, in practice, the individual enjoys freedom of movement, freedom from arbitrary arrest and detention, freedom of association and assembly, freedom of speech, press and broadcasting;

(b) Freedom of political parties to organize and carry out their normal activities;

(c) The organization and activities of the judiciary, the executive and other administrative organs;

3. Calls upon all authorities in the Federal Republic, in Berlin, and in the Soviet Zone to enable the Commission to travel freely throughout these areas; and to allow the Commission freedom of access to such persons, places and relevant documents as it considers necessary in the course of executing its task and to allow it to summon and examine witnesses whom it wishes to examine;

4. (a) Directs the Commission to report at the earliest possible date to the Secretary-General, for the consideration of the Council and for the information of the other Members of the United Nations, on the results of its efforts to make the necessary arrangements with all the parties concerned to enable it to undertake its work in accordance with the terms of the present resolution;

(b) Directs the Commission, if it is able to make the necessary arrangements throughout the areas concerned, similarly to report on the findings resulting from its investigation of conditions in these areas, it being understood that such findings may include recommendations regarding further steps which might be taken in order to bring about conditions in Germany necessary for the holding of free elections in these areas;

(c) Directs the Commission, if it is unable forthwith to make the necessary arrangements, to make a further attempt to carry out its task as soon as it is satisfied that the German authorities in the Federal Republic, in Berlin, and in the Soviet Zone will admit the Commission as it is desirable to leave the door open for the Commission to carry out its task;

(d) Directs the Commission in any event to report, not later than make possible the holding of genuinely free and secret elections, to offer its assistance in order to guarantee the freedom of the elections.

6. Requests the Secretary-General to furnish the Commission with the necessary staff and facilities.

66. NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN EMBASSY AT MOSCOW TO THE SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTRY, MARCH 25, 1952¹

The United States Government, in consultation with the Governments of the United Kingdom and France, has given the most careful consideration to the Soviet Government's note of March 10, 1952, which proposed the conclusion of a peace treaty with Germany. They have also consulted the Government of the German Federal Republic and the representatives of Berlin.

The conclusion of a just and lasting peace treaty which would end the division of Germany has always been and remains an essential objective of the United States Government. As the Soviet Government itself recognizes, the conclusion of such a treaty requires the formation of an all-German Government, expressing the will of the German people. Such a Government can only be set up on the basis of free elections in the Federal Republic, the Soviet zone of occupation and Berlin. Such elections can only be held in circumstances which safeguard the national and individual liberties of the German people. In order to ascertain whether this first essential condition exists, the General Assembly of the United Nations has appointed a Commission to carry out a simultaneous investigation in the Federal Republic, the Soviet zone and Berlin.³ The Commission of Investigation has been assured of the necessary facilities in the Federal Republic and in Western Berlin. The United States Government would be glad to learn that such facilities will also be afforded in the Soviet zone and in Eastern Berlin, to enable the Commission to carry out its task.

The Soviet Government's proposals do not indicate what the international position of an all-German Government would be before the conclusion of a peace treaty. The United States Government considers that the all-German Government should be free both before and after the conclusion of a peace treaty to enter into associations compatible with the principles and purposes of the United Nations.

In putting forward its proposal for a German peace treaty, the Soviet Government expressed its readiness also to discuss other proposals. The United States Government has taken due note of participate in such discussion has been formed. There are several fundamental questions which would also have to be resolved.

For example, the United States Government notes that the Soviet Government makes the statement that the territory of Germany is determined by frontiers laid down by the decisions of the Potsdam conference. The United States Government would recall that in fact no definitive German frontiers were laid down by the Potsdam decisions, which clearly provided that the final determination of territorial questions must await the peace settlement.

The United States Government also observes that the Soviet Government now considers that the peace treaty should provide for the formation of German national land, air, and sea forces, while at the same time imposing limitations on Germany's freedom to enter into association with other countries. The United States Government considers that such provisions would be a step backwards and might jeopardize the emergence in Europe of a new era in which international relations would be based on cooperation and not on rivalry and distrust. Being convinced of the need of a policy of European unity, the United States Government is giving its full support to plans designed to secure the participation of Germany in a purely defensive European community which will preserve freedom, prevent aggression, and preclude the revival of militarism. The United States Government believes that the proposal of the Soviet Government for the formation of German national forces is inconsistent with the achievement of this objective. The United States Government remains convinced that this policy of European unity cannot threaten the interests of any country and represents the true path of peace.

67. FIRST REPORT OF THE UNITED NATIONS COMMISSION TO INVESTIGATE CONDITIONS FOR FREE ELECTIONS IN GERMANY, APRIL 30, 1952 (Excerpt)¹

Section 1. Preparatory work in Paris and Geneva

27. The United Nations Commission to investigate Conditions for Free Elections in Germany, . . . held its first meeting on 11 February 1952 in the Palais de Chaillot, Paris. The Commission held two more meetings in Paris, one informal and the other formal before its move to Geneva. At these meetings, the Commission decided on its name, the procedure governing its chairmanship and its headquarters. It also decided, while in Paris, that its first task

Allied High Commission for Germany and to the Chairman of the Soviet Control Commission for Germany were tentatively considered and it was decided to postpone further action to a later meeting to be held in Geneva.

8. At meetings held in Geneva on 21 and 22 February, the Commission approved the texts of its letters to the Chairman of the Allied High Commission for Germany and to the Chairman of the Soviet Control Commission for Germany. It decided that it would send the letters by telegram as well as by air mail and would make the texts available to the Press forty-eight hours after their despatch by telegram.

9. In its letter dated 22 February 1952 to the Chairman of the Allied High Commission,¹ the Commission sought his good offices to transmit to the appropriate authorities in the Federal Republic of Germany and in the Western Sectors of Berlin the wish of the Commission to discuss with those authorities the arrangements deemed necessary by it to enable it to undertake its work. The Commission stated further that it would appreciate it if arrangements could be made to hold a meeting on 17 March with the authorities of the Federal Republic, and another on 21 March with the authorities of the Western Sectors of Berlin. In its letter dated 22 February 1952 to the Chairman of the Soviet Control Commission,² the Commission similarly sought his good offices to transmit to the appropriate authorities in the Soviet Zone of Germany and in the Eastern Sector of Berlin the wish of the Commission to discuss with those authorities the arrangements deemed necessary by it to enable it to undertake its work. The Commission stated further that it would appreciate it if arrangements could be made to hold a meeting on 17 March with the authorities of the Soviet Zone of Germany and another on 21 March with the authorities of the Eastern Sector of Berlin. The Commission asked to be informed of the places designated by the authorities concerned for the meetings it had suggested. It stated that both the Commission, on the one hand, and all the authorities in Germany and the German people, on the other, had common objectives and indeed a good deal of common ground on the basis of which they could all co-operate to set up the edifice of a free united and democratic Germany.

10. The Commission was anxious, if possible, to meet simultaneously with the authorities in the Federal Republic as well as in the Soviet Zone of Germany on the same date, and similarly to meet with the authorities in the Western Sectors and in the Eastern Sector of Berlin divide itself into two groups so as to be able to meet simultaneously with those authorities.

31. After considering its rules regarding the quorum required for its meetings and its voting procedure, the Commission adjourned to meet again on 10 March. It was decided that during the period of the adjournment a draft memorandum would be prepared concerning the arrangements deemed necessary by the Commission to enable it to undertake its work which would serve as a basis for discussion at the projected meetings of the Commission with the authorities in Germany. It was hoped that, by 10 March, replies would have been received from the Allied High Commission and the Soviet Control Commission.

32. The Commission next met from 10 to 15 March to consider the situation. To its letter dated 22 February 1952 to the Chairman of the Allied High Commission, the Commission had received a reply dated 1 March 1952,¹ to the effect that the Chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany and certain of his colleagues in the Federal Cabinet would be glad to meet with the Commission on 17 March in Bonn and that the Federal Government was further prepared 'to afford the members of the Commission every possible assistance in the performance of their important task'. The Commission was further informed that representatives of the (West) Berlin Senat proposed to meet with the Commission on 21 March 1952 in Berlin.

33. Not having received a reply from the Soviet Control Commission by 10 March, the Commission decided to write again to General Chuikov, Chairman of the Soviet Control Commission for Germany. In its second letter to General Chuikov dated 10 March,² the Commission again stated its wish to meet with the appropriate authorities in the Soviet Zone of Germany and in the Eastern Sector of Berlin to discuss with them the arrangements deemed necessary by it to enable it to undertake its work, and requested that this fact be conveyed to those authorities. The Commission again suggested that it would appreciate it if arrangements could be made to enable it to meet with those authorities on 17 and 21 March respectively. The Commission informed General Chuikov that it was confirming arrangements to meet with the authorities in the Federal Republic of Germany and in the Western Sectors of Berlin on 17 and 21 March respectively. It requested a reply from General Chuikov by 12 noon of 14 March, in view of the necessity to make final its travel arrangements by Friday 14 March. This letter was sent both by telegram and air mail, and was later released to the Press. The Commission did not receive

The Commission, therefore, arranged to have a meeting in Bonn with the Allied High Commission on 17 March 1952.

35. During the period 11 to 14 March, the Commission considered the draft memoranda that it was to submit to the authorities in Germany that had expressed their willingness to receive the Commission. On 14 March, the Commission unanimously approved their texts.¹ The memoranda were identic in substance, excepting only for such changes as were necessary in view of the fact that they were addressed to different authorities in Germany. They specified among other things, that during the period of the Commission's work

(a) The Commission and its secretariat be granted by the authorities concerned the right to travel freely throughout their respective areas and that the Commission and its secretariat be granted normal and recognized diplomatic privileges and immunities;

(b) The Commission and its secretariat be granted by the authorities concerned the right of free access to such persons, places and relevant documents as the Commission might consider necessary, that the Commission be granted the right to summon any witnesses it might wish to examine or obtain testimony from; and, further, that the Commission be given specific assurance by the authorities concerned that such witnesses would not be impeded from meeting with it, that such persons or their relatives would be immune from any manner of punishment for their having met with and given evidence before the Commission, and that the witnesses would not be forced to reveal the contents of their testimony;

(c) The Commission and its secretariat be granted the right by the authorities concerned to communicate freely and without hindrance with the people in their areas; that the Commission be assured by the authorities concerned that communications to and from the Commission and its secretariat would be immune from censorship, delay or suppression; and that the Commission be given assurance that persons communicating with it or receiving communications from it would not be punished in any manner for having such contact.

36. On 14 March, the Commission also approved the text of a statement to be delivered by its Chairman on its behalf at the forthcoming meeting of the Commission with the authorities of the Federal Republic of Germany,² and the text of an address to the German people to be broadcast from Bonn by Mr. Kohnstamm on behalf of the Commission.³

the representative of Pakistan, was unable to join the Commission on its visit to Germany due to his indisposition, and the Government of Pakistan appointed Mr. Omar Hayat Malik, its Ambassador to the Federal Republic of Germany, to take his place pending his return to the Commission. The Commission would like to record its appreciation of the services rendered by Mr. Malik, who was called at very short notice to assist it.

38. On 17 March, the Commission met with the Allied High Commission and submitted to it the memorandum already mentioned. In submitting it, the Chairman stated that the memorandum was couched in broad and general terms, as it was the Commission's view that at the present stage it might not be necessary to go into details. If agreement on the terms of the memorandum was reached, then it would be the Commission's view that, within the broad scope of that agreement, any detailed arrangements which might be deemed necessary could be made with the responsible authorities in Germany. He added that he and his colleagues felt that the arrangements they were seeking from the responsible authorities in Germany were of very great and fundamental importance for the successful completion of the task entrusted to the Commission by the United Nations. The Commission could hope to fulfil its mission faithfully and only if the German people, as a result of the assurance given by the Commission, felt assured that they could co-operate with the Commission without fear and in perfect freedom. In reaching this conclusion, therefore, that it would be necessary to reach an agreement regarding the subject matter of the memorandum with the responsible authorities in Germany. The Commission would be able to make uniform arrangements with and secure the necessary assurances from all those authorities. It considered that in all parts of Germany all the people should have the same facilities, and that the United Nations Commission should represent all of Germany identic facilities. The Chairman stated that he and his colleagues would also like to discuss with the Allied High Commission the question whether it would not be in the view of the fact that the Governments the Allied High Commission represented exercised supreme responsibility in Germany that the Commission should conclude an agreement, at least in respect of the issues raised in the memorandum which possibly fell within the powers that were reserved to itself by the Commission. The Allied High Commission might also wish to inform the United Nations Commission formally that it was willing to grant it the facilities and assurances it required.

GERMANY, AUSTRIA, AND EUROPEAN SECURITY

High Commission would grant the United Nations Commission the guarantees and facilities it had specified in its memorandum. Allied High Commission sent a formal reply on these lines the day.¹ At a meeting held on 19 March, the Commission took note of the reply, expressing its satisfaction therewith.

40. Immediately following its meeting with the Allied High Commission, the Commission met with the Chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany and a number of his colleagues in the Federal Cabinet at the Haus Schaumburg in Bonn. The Federal Chancellor stated that the United Nations, by setting up the present Commission, had shown its readiness to investigate whether conditions existed for the holding of free elections throughout Germany and that it had provided an assurance that an objective and conscientious enquiry would be made into that problem of vital importance to the German people. He gave the assurance that the Federal Government would give the Commission all the assistance it could to help it carry out its investigations, and expressed the hope that the Commission would achieve complete success, and that the delays that might arise would not persuade it to abandon the pursuit of its objective, which was the objective of the United Nations, of the Federal Government and of the German nation, namely, the re-establishment of Germany in peace and freedom.

41. The Chairman of the Commission, in his reply² to the statement of the Federal Chancellor, after outlining the events that led to the setting up of the Commission by the United Nations, stated that the German people, the different German authorities, and the occupying Powers had all declared as their common objective the bringing into being of a free, united, democratic and peaceful Germany, essentially by means of genuinely free and secret elections. That was also the purpose which the Commission would seek to achieve to the extent that it was empowered to do by its terms of reference. In the discharge of its task, it was most anxious to assure all the German people and all the German authorities of its complete objectivity and impartiality. Under its terms of reference, the Commission was required to carry out its investigation simultaneously in all zones of Germany. The Commission could carry out its task, therefore, only when it was enabled to enter and travel freely in all parts of Germany and when it was granted by all the authorities concerned the facilities deemed necessary by it. The object of its present mission to Germany, however, was to meet those authorities who had expressed their willingness to do so in order to discuss and try to make arrangements, such as the Commission deemed necessary, for the to enable it to undertake its work, the Chairman of the Commission stated that it would be necessary to publish at an early date the agreement the Commission hoped to reach with the Federal Government in order to assure the people of the Federal Republic that they could co-operate with the Commission with complete and perfect freedom.

43. The Federal Chancellor, after stating his belief that the Federal Government would provide the Commission with all the facilities it had requested, replied that, as soon as possible after the Government had had an opportunity of considering the memorandum, a formal reply would be provided.

44. The Commission further met with the authorities of the Federal Republic on 18 March to discuss the contents of its memorandum. Following the clarifications offered by the Commission, representatives of the Federal Republic stated that a formal reply to the lines agreed at the meetings would be given to the Commission on 19 March and that the Federal Government would, in the interim, initiate such legislative measures as were necessary to secure the facilities and assurances required by the Commission.

45. The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany issued its reply² to the Commission's memorandum at 12 noon on 19 March. The Chairman of the Commission, in a statement with appreciation, stated that the Commission was satisfied with the therewith.

46. During its stay in Bonn, the Commission held a press conference at which over a hundred correspondents were present. This was the main object of its visit to Germany.

47. On 20 March, the Commission left Bonn for Berlin by a commercial airline. At a meeting held in Berlin on the day of its arrival, the Commission decided that it would submit its proposals to representatives on the Inter-Allied Kommandatura, with whom it had already arranged to hold a meeting the next day, and to the Federal Republic, to try and secure an agreement regarding the facilities it would need for its work. At the same meeting, the Commission approved the text of a statement to the German people to be delivered on behalf of the Commission by Mr. Kohnstamm.³

48. The Commission met on 21 March with representatives of the Inter-Allied Kommandatura and submitted to them the proposals

Berlin), Chairman of the Inter-Allied Kommandatura, stated that, in so far as he, the United Kingdom and the United States Commanders in Berlin were concerned, he could give the Commission the assurance that, within the limits of their competence and resources, they would be prepared to do everything they could to provide the Commission with the guarantees and facilities it needed. General Carolet confirmed his statement in a formal reply¹ he sent the Commission the same day. The Commission took note of this reply and expressed its satisfaction therewith.

49. After its meeting with the Inter-Allied Kommandatura, the Commission met with Mr. Reuter, Governing Mayor of West Berlin and other representatives of the Berlin Senate to submit a memorandum similar to the ones it had submitted earlier to the Inter-Allied Kommandatura, the Allied High Commission and the Federal Republic. Mr. Reuter, in welcoming the Commission, stated that the people of Berlin earnestly wished to be reunited with their fellow countrymen in the area of Germany occupied by the Soviet Union authorities under a single Government by means of genuinely free elections, and assured the Commission of his Government's co-operation in its work. He said that representatives of his Government desired to discuss the Commission's memorandum with it at another meeting, and he hoped to present his Government's official reply to the Commission the following day.

50. The Chairman of the Commission, in submitting the memorandum, thanked Mr. Reuter for his assurances of co-operation. Thereafter, speaking in German, he stated that the impossible situation in which the citizens of Berlin were forced to live was a daily reminder to the world that such division could not and must not last indefinitely. He conveyed the sympathy of the Commission to the Berlin population that was enduring hardships on account of the division of the city.

51. The Commission held a second meeting the same afternoon with the representatives of the (West) Berlin Senate. Following an exchange of views, Mr. Reuter stated to the Commission that his Government's answer to its memorandum would be exactly the same as that of the Government of the Federal Republic, and that the reply would be delivered to the Commission the next day.

52. On 22 March, Mr. Reuter handed over to the Commission the reply² of his Government to the Commission's memorandum. The Chairman of the Commission, in acknowledging it with appreciation, stated that the Commission was entirely satisfied with the reply.

the results of its efforts to make with the authorities concerned the arrangements deemed necessary by it to enable it to undertake its work.

4. In the seven days the Commission spent in Bonn and Berlin, it completed the work it had set out to do. It had concluded agreements that it regarded as satisfactory with the Allied High Commission for Germany, the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany, the Inter-Allied Kommandatura (in so far as the authority of this body extended over those areas of Berlin over which the French, United Kingdom and United States Commanders in Berlin exercised authority), and with the Government of West Berlin.

5. Before its return to Geneva, however, the Commission met in Berlin on 23 March to decide on its next step. It agreed that another appeal should be addressed to General Chuikov soon after the Commission's return to Geneva and instructed its Chairman to despatch it not later than 26 March. The Commission thereafter left Berlin on 23 and 24 March, proposing to reconvene on 8 April or earlier if necessary, to consider the situation.

Section 3. Work of the Commission after its return from Germany

6. In its third letter to the Chairman of the Soviet Control Commission for Germany dated 26 March 1952,¹ the Commission drew General Chuikov's attention to its two earlier letters to him dated 12 February and 10 March respectively, and pointed out that it had not received a reply from him to those letters. The Commission further informed General Chuikov that it had concluded satisfactory agreements with the responsible authorities in the Federal Republic of Germany and in West Berlin, and that its ability "to undertake the work entrusted to it by the United Nations is now entirely dependent on the willingness of the responsible authorities in the Soviet Zone of Germany and in the Eastern Sector of Berlin to conclude similarly satisfactory arrangements with the Commission". The Commission again sought General Chuikov's good offices to arrange a meeting between it and the appropriate authorities in the Soviet Zone of Germany and in the Eastern Sector of Berlin to enable the Commission to make with those authorities the necessary arrangements to undertake its work. It transmitted to General Chuikov for his information the texts of the memoranda it had submitted to the authorities in the Federal Republic and in West Berlin and the replies received from them. This letter was sent both by telegram and by air mail and was later released to the Press. The Commission did not could, if possible be submitted by the end of April. The Commission further decided that it should make one more appeal to General Chuikov, requesting him to facilitate it in the discharge of its duties.

58. In its fourth and last letter to the Chairman of the Soviet Control Commission for Germany dated 9 April 1952,¹ the Commission drew General Chuikov's attention to its three earlier letters to him dated 2 February, 10 March and 26 March respectively, and pointed out that it had not received a reply from him to those letters. Stating again that the Commission's ability to undertake its work was entirely dependent on the willingness of the responsible authorities in the Soviet Zone of Germany and in the Eastern Sector of Berlin to conclude agreements with the Commission similar to the ones already concluded with it by the authorities in Western Germany, the Commission again requested General Chuikov to facilitate it in the discharge of its duties. It further informed him that it felt obliged under its terms of reference, to report before long to the Secretary General on the results of its activities so far, and that it intended to submit a report by the end of April 1952. In view of this conclusion it requested an answer before 27 April 1952. In concluding its letter the Commission stated that "in the event of the Commission not receiving a reply from you by the time indicated, the Commission would, to its regret, be obliged to conclude that at present there is little prospect of its being able to pursue its task of investigation". This letter was sent both by telegram and by air mail and was later released to the Press. Up to the date of the signing of this report the Commission has not received a reply from General Chuikov to any one of its four letters to him.

59. The Commission met from 28 April to 30 April to consider the present report. At its twenty-first meeting held on 30 April 1952, the Commission unanimously approved and signed the report.

PART III

RECAPITULATION OF THE COMMISSION'S WORK AND CONCLUSIONS

60. The United Nations Commission to investigate conditions for free elections in Germany, constituted by General Assembly resolution 510(VI), submits the following recapitulation of its work and its conclusions.

61. The Commission, composed of the representatives of Brazil, Iceland, the Netherlands and Pakistan (Poland having declined to participate in its work), was convened to its first meeting on 11 February 1952 in Paris. Shortly thereafter it moved its headquarters to Geneva from where it began its substantive work as from 21 February. It decided that, under its terms of reference, its first task was to make with all the parties concerned such arrangements as it deemed necessary to enable it to undertake its work.

2. In its efforts to carry out its preliminary task, the Commission addressed a letter on 22 February to the Chairman of the Allied High Commission for Germany requesting his good offices to arrange meetings between the Commission and the appropriate authorities in the Federal Republic of Germany and in the Western Sectors of Berlin, suggesting that the meetings take place on 17 and 21 March respectively. The Commission addressed a similar letter on 22 February to the Chairman of the Soviet Control Commission for Germany requesting his good offices to arrange meetings between the Commission and the appropriate authorities in the Soviet Zone of Germany and in the Eastern Sector of Berlin, suggesting that the meetings take place on 17 and 21 March respectively.

3. On 1 March 1952, the Commission received a reply from the Allied High Commission to the effect that the meetings requested had been arranged. No reply having been received from the Soviet Control Commission of Germany by 10 March, the Commission wrote a second letter on 10 March 1952 to the Chairman of the Soviet Control Commission reiterating the request it had made in its first letter. The Commission did not receive a reply to its second letter.

4. After having prepared a set of identic memoranda concerning the arrangements deemed necessary by the Commission to enable it to undertake its work and which the Commission decided to submit to the authorities in Germany that expressed their willingness to meet with it, the Commission left Geneva on 15 March 1952 for Germany. The Commission stayed in Germany from 16 to 23 March. During this period, it was able to conclude satisfactory agreements concerning the arrangements it required to do its work with the following authorities: (a) the Allied High Commission for Germany; (b) the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany; (c) the Inter-Allied Kommandatur in Berlin (in so far as the authority of this body extended over those areas of Berlin over which the French, United Kingdom and United States Commanders in Berlin exercised authority); and (d) the Government of the Western Sectors of Berlin.

5. Following its return to Geneva, the Commission addressed a third letter on 26 March 1952 to the Chairman of the Soviet Control Commission for Germany and a fourth on 9 April. In its last letter the Commission stated that it would appreciate receiving a reply as early as possible and in any event before 27 April.

6. The Commission, bearing in mind the direction given to it by paragraph 4(a) of General Assembly resolution 510 (VI), decided on 9 April 1952 that it should report before long to the Secretary-General.

While the Commission has been successful in carrying out its primary task in the Federal Republic of Germany and in the Western Sectors of Berlin, it has not thus far been able to establish local contact with the authorities in the Soviet Zone of Germany or in the Eastern Sector of Berlin even by correspondence. The Commission consequently has not thus far been able to make with the authorities concerned in the Soviet Zone of Germany and in the Eastern Sector of Berlin the arrangements deemed necessary by it to enable it to undertake its work in accordance with its terms of reference. Bearing in mind the infructuous efforts it has made on four separate occasions to appeal to the Soviet Control Commission for assistance to facilitate it in the discharge of its duties, the Commission, to its regret, is obliged to conclude that at present there is little prospect of its being able to pursue its task.

However, in view of the fact that sub-paragraph 4 (c) of General Assembly resolution 510 (VI) "directs the Commission, if it is unable to proceed with its task at such time as it is satisfied that the German authorities in the Federal Republic, in Berlin, and in the Soviet Zone permit the Commission, as it is desirable to leave the door open to the Commission to carry out its task", the Commission will remain at the disposal of the United Nations and the parties concerned, and will make a further attempt to implement its mandate at such time as it seems likely to the Commission that new steps may lead to favorable results.

The following four representatives on the Commission, whose signatures are appended below, unanimously adopted the report at the twenty-first meeting of the Commission held on 30 April 1952 in the Palais des Nations, Geneva.

NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN EMBASSY AT MOSCOW TO
THE SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTRY, MAY 13, 1952¹

In reply to the Soviet Government's note of the 9th of April,² to achieve these objectives on terms that will insure unity with freedom and peace with security.

2. It is ready to begin negotiations with the Soviet Government on these issues; and it desires to do so just as soon as it is clearly apparent that it is also the intention of the Soviet Government to avoid the fruitless negotiations of the past. The United States Government and the Governments of the United Kingdom, France and the Soviet Union must therefore first reach a clear understanding upon the scope of the negotiations and upon the fundamental problems to be examined. Proper preparation is essential to success and to avoid long delays. The Soviet Government's note of the 9th of April throws little new light on what it considers should be the means of insuring the success of any such negotiations.

3. In its latest note the Soviet Government now stipulates that Germany must not be included "into one or another grouping of powers directed against any peace-loving state". Germany's proposed membership in the United Nations should surely make any such provision unnecessary. In any case the United States Government could not accept any provisions forbidding Germany to enter into association with other states which one of the signatories of the peace treaty might arbitrarily choose to regard as "directed against any peace-loving state". It cannot admit that Germany should be denied the basic right of a free and equal nation to associate itself with other nations for peaceful purposes. It must assume that the Soviet Government likewise cannot object to Germany's right to enter into defensive agreements.

4. In its note of March 25,¹ the United States Government pointed out that it is giving full support to the efforts which the free states of Western Europe, including the German Federal Republic, are making to bring into being a peaceful European community and thus to begin a new era in which international relations will be based on cooperation and not on rivalry and distrust. The United States Government welcomes the development of such a European community in which Germany will participate. Germany is divided because Europe is divided. This policy of European unity cannot threaten the interests of the Soviet Union or of any country whose policy is devoted to the maintenance of peace. The United States Government will, therefore, not be deflected from its support of this policy. It is more than ever convinced that it represents the true path of peace.

5. The United States Government has no responsibility for the failure to extend this cooperation beyond its present limits. It of a German peace treaty. The U.S. Government has known its views on some of the Soviet Government's, especially its erroneous interpretation of the territorial provisions of the Potsdam protocol and its intention to confine Germany to a state of permanent isolation from Western Europe while she seeks to provide for her defense solely through her own armed forces. The Soviet proposals would mean perpetuation upon Germany's rights of international association and a state of tension and insecurity in the center of Europe.

7. The all-German government resulting from free elections must itself be free. Such freedom is essential both before and after a peace treaty has been negotiated. It must be able to assume a genuinely representative character; to assume its role as the government of a reunited Germany and to play its part in the discussion of the peace-treaty. This question is therefore, inseparable from the problem of elections. The Soviet Government has still failed to give any indication of its views on this subject. The United States Government must make clear whether the Soviet Government considers that an all-German government, resulting from free elections, would be under Soviet control until after the conclusion of a peace treaty. The United States agrees that it should have the necessary freedom of action in the conduct of government.

8. The United States Government is happy to note that the Soviet Government now agrees in principle that there should be free elections throughout Germany. Such free elections can only be held if the necessary conditions exist in all parts of Germany and will be maintained not only on the day of voting, and not only in the east, but also thereafter. An essential first step is, therefore, the creation of the conditions. Otherwise, no progress can be made. The situation in the eastern part of Germany has evolved in a direction which is divergent from the main path of German progress. The principal reason why an impartial inquiry is needed before any final decision can be taken.

9. The Soviet Government does not agree, however, that an international commission set up by the General Assembly of the United Nations should carry out such an inquiry. The United States agrees that many. It bases this refusal on its interpretation of the United Nations Charter. But this reads as follows: "The present Charter shall invalidate or preclude action in any state which during the Second World War has been an enemy of any signatory to the present Charter, taken or not taken."

Nations Commission in order to determine the conditions under which genuinely free elections could be held throughout Germany.

10. The Soviet Government suggests instead that the inquiry could be entrusted to a commission of four occupying powers. Before the United States Government could feel assured that this suggestion would result in an immediate decision, it would need to know what would be the composition and powers of such a body. A commission composed solely of the four occupying powers would have no direct responsibilities in Germany and would be both unjustified and impractical. Experience during the period of four-power control of Germany suggests that it would not be able to reach useful decisions quickly and elections would be greatly delayed. Nor can the Soviet Government overlook the fact that the appointment of such a commission might be interpreted as a step towards the re-establishment of four-power control in Germany. This would be a major move, out of keeping with constitutional developments in the German Federal Republic.

11. For these reasons the United States Government expresses its preference for the United Nations Commission: It is already in existence, its functions have been laid down and it can take action without delay. Nevertheless, the United States Government will continue to examine every possibility of determining whether conditions exist throughout Germany for the holding of genuinely free elections. The United States Government in agreement with the United Kingdom and French Governments and after consultation with the German Federal Government and the German authorities accordingly makes the following proposals:

(i) An impartial commission should immediately determine whether there exist in the Soviet Zone of Germany, as well as in the German Federal Republic and in all sectors of Berlin, the conditions necessary for the holding of free elections and, if not, should recommend for consideration by the Four Powers exercising responsibilities in Germany what step should be taken to create such conditions. The Four Powers should give the necessary facilities for the establishment of such a commission in the German Federal Republic, the Soviet Zone, and in all sectors of Berlin. The three Western Powers and the German Federal Government have already stated their willingness to do so.

(ii) The Four Powers should utilize for this purpose the United Nations Commission which is already available. This is the quickest and most practical course.

(iii) Despite its strong preference for the procedure

French and Soviet Governments would meet to consider it, with a view to reaching agreement on:

(A) The early holding of free elections throughout Germany including the creation where necessary of the appropriate conditions and

(B) The assurances to be given by the Four Powers that the all-German government, formed as the result of these free elections will have the necessary freedom of action during the period before the peace treaty comes into effect.

69. NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN EMBASSY AT MOSCOW TO THE SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTRY, JULY 10, 1952 ¹

In its note of May 13 ² the United States Government made various proposals in the hope of facilitating four power conversations which could lead to the unification of Germany and to the negotiation with an all-German Government of a German peace treaty. It observes with regret that the Soviet Government in its note of May 24 ³ does not answer these proposals. The United States Government fully maintains the views and proposals in its note of May 13. On this basis it wishes in its present note primarily to concentrate attention upon the immediate practical problem of the procedure for setting up, through free elections, an all-German Government with which a peace treaty can be negotiated.

In its note the Soviet Government once more proposes simultaneous discussions on a peace treaty, the unification of Germany and the formation of an all-German Government. For its part the United States Government maintains its position on this question, namely, that an all-German Government must participate in the negotiation of a peace treaty, and that, therefore, before undertaking such negotiations Germany must be unified and an all-German Government established. Unification of Germany can be achieved only through free elections. The essential first step is obviously the determination that conditions necessary for such free elections exist. The second step would be the holding of those elections. In regard to the first step, the United States Government proposed in its note of May 13 that an impartial Commission should determine whether there exist throughout Germany the conditions necessary for the holding of free elections. While pointing out the great advantages of using the United Nations Commission, the United States appointment of a Commission to carry out this verification by agreement among the four Powers. It is not clear to the United States Government whether the Soviet Government considers that the Commission should be composed of representatives of the four Powers or merely that the four Powers should agree on its composition and the United States Government would be pleased to receive clarification on this point. The United States Government remains convinced that a Commission composed solely of nationals of the four Powers would be unable to reach useful decisions since it could only reflect present differences of opinion among the four Powers as to conditions existing in the Federal Republic, in the Soviet Zone and in Berlin. The United States Government considers that if the Commission is to carry out its work effectively, it should be composed of impartial members, should not be subject to veto or control by the four Powers and should be empowered to go freely into all parts of Germany and investigate conditions bearing on the possibility of holding free elections.

In regard to the second step, the United States Government similarly proposed that as soon as the Commission's report was ready there should be a meeting of representatives of the United States, French, Soviet and United Kingdom Governments to discuss the early holding of free elections throughout Germany, including the creation where necessary of appropriate conditions. The United States Government maintains this proposal to which the Soviet Government has not yet replied.

70. SECOND REPORT OF THE UNITED NATIONS COMMISSION TO INVESTIGATE CONDITIONS FOR FREE ELECTIONS IN GERMANY, AUGUST 5, 1952¹

1. The United Nations Commission to investigate Conditions for Free Elections in Germany submits to the Secretary-General the present report covering its work during the period from May to August 1952 in pursuance of the direction given to it by the General Assembly of the United Nations.

2. In compliance with the direction given to it under the terms of paragraph 4 (a) of the resolution adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1951 (resolution 510 (VI))² on the agenda item entitled "Appointment of an impartial international commission under United Nations supervision to carry out a simultaneous in-necessary arrangements with all the parties concerned to enable it to undertake its work according to the terms of the said resolution.

3. This first report of the Commission contained an account of its activities from 11 February 1952, the date when the Commission first met and organized itself, to 30 April 1952, the date by which the Commission considered it was obliged to submit its first report after having made in that preliminary period every reasonable effort to make the necessary arrangements with all the parties concerned to enable it to undertake its work.

4. The present report, which supplements the first and is in a sense a postscript to it, contains a brief account of the work of the Commission in the three-month period subsequent to the submission of the first report, including a brief summation of the views of the Commission as regards developments in the German situation in so far as they may be regarded as having had a bearing on the specific task the Commission was required to carry out.

5. The report is being submitted in accordance with the direction to the Commission contained in paragraph 4 (d) of General Assembly resolution 510 (VI), which "directs the Commission in any event to report, not later than 1 September 1952, on the results of its activities to the Secretary-General, for the consideration of the four Powers and for the information of the other Members of the United Nations".

6. At its 24th meeting held on 31 July 1952 in Geneva, the Commission decided that the final report it was required to submit according to the terms of paragraph 4 (d) of the resolution quoted above should not be delayed any longer, as, in its view, there appeared at the time hardly any further possibility of its being able to carry out its task of simultaneous investigation throughout the whole of Germany of conditions for free elections in that country. Throughout the period of three months during which the Commission has had to remain in Geneva at no little sacrifice to the Member Governments concerned, in constant session and ready to go into action at any time it could do so or it appeared feasible to make an attempt to do so, it had become increasingly evident that the unwillingness to co-operate with and assist the Commission to discharge its task displayed at the sixth session of the General Assembly by the representatives of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and of the German authorities in the Soviet Zone of Germany, remained unaltered.

7. It will be recalled that the Commission in its first report stated that ence. The Commission consequently has not thus far been able to make with the authorities concerned in the Soviet Zone of Germany and in the Eastern Sector of Berlin the arrangements deemed necessary by it to enable it to undertake its work in accordance with its terms of reference. Bearing in mind the efforts it has made on four separate occasions to appeal to the Soviet Control Commission for Germany to facilitate the discharge of its duties, the Commission, to its regret, is now obliged to conclude that at present there is little prospect of its being able to pursue its task.

"However, in view of the fact that sub-paragraph 4 (c) of General Assembly resolution 510 (VI) 'directs the Commission to make arrangements forthwith to make these arrangements, to make every effort to attempt to carry out its task at such time as it is satisfied that the German authorities in the Federal Republic, in Berlin, and in the Soviet Zone will admit the Commission, as it is desirable that the door open for the Commission to carry out its task and that the mission will remain at the disposal of the United Nations and the parties concerned, and will make a further attempt to carry out its mandate at such time as it seems likely to the Commission that new steps may lead to positive results'".

8. In all the period that the Commission has had to remain in Geneva since the submission of its first report in order to make every effort to implement, if feasible, the directions given to it in paragraphs 4 (c) and 4 (b) of General Assembly resolution 510 (VI), the Commission had hoped that the authorities of the USSR and the German authorities in the Soviet Zone of Germany would eventually see their way clear to co-operate with the Commission, an impartial, international body set up by the United Nations, and to give it the positive support of forty-five out of its sixty Members, and that it had already received every assurance of co-operation from the authorities representing by far the greater portion of the German people. This hope was entertained by the Commission because of its understanding that the authorities of the USSR as well as the authorities in the Soviet Zone of Germany, were as anxious as the Western Powers and the authorities in the Federal Republic of Germany and the Western Sectors of Berlin to bring about a peaceful solution to the German question by way of the formation of a democratically elected all-German government with which the four occupying Powers could proceed to negotiate a peace treaty. It was also to the Commission that the four occupying Powers were expected to give an essential preliminary to the formation of an all-German government.

repose faith in a body that had been set up by an overwhelming majority of its colleagues in the United Nations.

9. In the period between the submission of its first report and before it could make a further attempt to carry out its task, the Commission considered that it would have to be reasonably certain that, at whatever time it did make the further attempt, it would be attended with some prospect of success. The Commission, therefore, was perforce concerned to consider closely developments in the German situation arising out of the exchange of Notes between the USSR on the one hand, and France, the United Kingdom and the United States of America on the other, as well as significant developments inside Germany itself.

10. The series of Notes on the German question exchanged between the USSR and the three Western Powers, it will be recalled, commenced with one from the USSR dated 10 March 1952,¹ by which date the Commission had been in existence and at work for a month. By the time the Commission submitted its first report on 1 May 1952, the USSR had addressed two Notes to the three Western Powers (on 10 March and 9 April² respectively), and the three Western Powers had replied on 25 March³ to the first Soviet Note. Between 1 May and 5 August 1952, the date on which the present report was adopted by the Commission, three further Notes⁴ were exchanged between the four occupying Powers. In none of the six Notes could the Commission discern any agreement whatsoever between the USSR and the three Western Powers as to utilization of the Commission in carrying out an investigation in all of Germany to determine whether existing conditions there made it possible to hold genuinely free elections in that country. Indeed, what became more obvious as a result of the exchange of the series of Notes was the following: (1) that the three Western Powers, while they continued to maintain more or less strongly their preference for the present United Nations Commission, were nevertheless prepared at the same time "to consider any other practical and precise proposals for an impartial commission of investigation which the Soviet Government may wish to put forward, on the one condition that they are likely to promote the early holding of free elections throughout Germany,"⁵ and (2) that the USSR, continuing to maintain its objection to the competence of the United Nations to concern itself with the German question, rejected investigation by the present Commission, while it was agreeable to an investigation by another impartial commission formed by the four Powers occupying Germany.

11. The Commission, at this point, would like to make certain observations. While on the one hand, the Commission derives its authority solely from the General Assembly of the United Nations, on the other hand, entirely dependent on the willingness of all concerned to co-operate unreservedly with it for the execution of its mandate. It has so far been unable to secure this co-operation from the authorities in the Soviet Zone of Germany, and it could not expect to do so in the near future. The Commission, as a United Nations body, is anxious above all for an early, just and equitable solution of the German question, regardless of whether the efforts contributing to such a solution are to be worked out under the auspices of the United Nations or not. The United Nations Commission is confident, would at all times be prepared to appeal for its assistance in the finding of a peaceful solution to the German question. This being its view, the Commission would not suggest that it alone affords the only impartial means of investigating the existing conditions in all of Germany. The Commission does not consider its existence and its work hitherto justified, and its mandate in substance fulfilled, if, by agreement among the four Big Powers, another equally impartial body were to be set up which could and would carry out the essentials of the mandate entrusted to the present United Nations Commission.

12. Apart from its consideration of the situation arising from the exchange of the series of Notes between the USSR and the Western Powers, the Commission, during the last three months, has also been watching with concern reports of internal developments in Germany. These have been such as to afford no hope to the Commission that the German authorities in the Soviet Zone of Occupation will co-operate with it in the execution of its task.

13. At its 23rd meeting held on 11 July, the Commission might perhaps be well for it to wait to consider the USSR's Note of the three Western Powers dated 10 July before submitting the present report and adjourn its session sine die. However, after further prolonged deliberation, it decided that the events provided any indication of the nature of things to come, there was little prospect of its being able to carry out its task beyond what it had been able to do in the preliminary preparatory activity. At its 24th meeting held on 31 July, the Commission decided, therefore, to submit its final report and adjourn its session sine die, desiring, however, to maintain its headquarters in Paris, in the Palais des Nations, Geneva, until the expiry of its mandate.

at such time as it seems likely to the Commission that it can do so with a prospect of positive results.

14. The following four representatives on the Commission, whose signatures are appended below, unanimously adopted the report at the 25th meeting of the Commission held on 5 August 1952 in the Palais des Nations, Geneva.

71. NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN EMBASSY AT MOSCOW TO THE SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTRY, SEPTEMBER 23, 1952¹

The United States Government has carefully considered the Soviet Government's note of August 23 about Germany.² It had hoped that the note would have marked some progress towards agreement on the essential question of free all-German elections. This is the first question which must be settled among the four powers so that Germany can be unified, an all-German Government formed and a peace treaty concluded.

Possibly in order to divert attention from this issue, the greater part of the Soviet note of August 23 is, however, devoted to wholly unfounded attacks upon the Atlantic Pact, the European Defense Community³ and the conventions signed at Bonn on May 26.⁴ As the United States Government has often emphasized, these agreements are purely defensive and threaten no one. The Bonn conventions and the Epc treaty, far from being imposed on the German people, are a matter for free decision by freely elected Parliaments including of course that of the German Federal Republic. Insofar as the Bonn conventions reserve certain strictly limited rights to the three Western powers, a fundamental consideration has been specifically to safeguard the principle of German unity and to keep the door open for agreement with the Soviet Union on the unification of Germany.

The United States Government must insist on the necessity of starting four-power discussions at the only point where they can in fact start, which is the organization of free elections. In its note of July 10,⁵ the United States Government drew attention to the obvious fact that this is the first point which must be settled if any progress Republic, which constitutes the greater part of German first note, as in its last, the Soviet Government has evaded issue. Instead of putting first things first, it now relegates to the background the problem of elections and proposes that a four-power conference "should discuss in the first place such issues as a peace treaty with Germany and the formation of a German Government". But until elections are held, no all-German Government can be formed, nor can Germany be unified. Until an all-German Government is formed which will be in a position to negotiate freely, it is impossible to discuss the terms of a German peace treaty.

In complete accord with the views of the United States, the United Kingdom Governments, the Soviet Government originally held that "the preparation of the peace treaty should be effected by the participation of Germany in the form of an all-German Government". The Soviet Government has now shifted its ground. It substitutes for this, the participation of representatives of the Soviet zone and the Federal Republic in the four-power meetings "for the discussion of relevant questions". The United States Government cannot accept this proposal. A peace treaty for the whole of Germany cannot be negotiated with, and accepted by, any German representatives other than the all-German Government which would carry it out. Such a government can only proceed from free elections. It is moreover well known that the East German administration is not representative of the German population of the Soviet zone. This fact is not controverted by the assertion in the Soviet note of August 23 that this administration acted "at the request of the German population in enforcing recent measures further dividing Germany". West Germans in defiance of their clear desire for unity.

The United States Government is compelled to remind the Soviet Government that conditions have altered radically since the Potsdam Agreement of 1945,² which laid down certain political and legal principles to govern the initial control period. The Soviet proposal of a peace treaty drafted by the four powers and imposed on Germany is entirely unsuitable in 1952. The United States Government could never agree to a peace treaty being drafted or imposed without the participation of an all-German Government. Such a procedure would mean a dictated treaty. That indeed is "an insult to the German nation".

The United States Government again insists that general elections with a view to the formation of an all-German Government must come first. It has however learned by hard experience in recent years that terms such as "free elections" have one meaning

GERMANY, AUSTRIA, AND EUROPEAN SECURITY

German people to choose between these alternative ways. But they must be able to make their choice in genuine freedom and full responsibility. Only genuinely free elections can reflect the will of the German people and permit the formation of an all-German Government with the necessary freedom of action to discuss and accept a peace settlement.

In order to create the conditions necessary for free elections, there has been a four-power agreement that there should be a commission of investigation. The Soviet Government has now proposed that this commission should be composed of representatives of the Presidium of the Assembly of the "German Democratic Republic" and of the Bundestag of the German Federal Republic. A commission of this kind must, however, be genuinely impartial. A German commission would be no more able than a four-power commission to meet this requirement. The underlying principle of the present Soviet proposal was contained in one which emanated from the Soviet Union on September 15, 1951.¹ This was rejected by the Bundestag. The Soviet then suggested investigation by a United Nations Commission. This was thus the freely elected representatives of fifty million German people who themselves proposed the creation of a commission of investigation under United Nations supervision. Nevertheless, the United States Government repeats its readiness to discuss any practical and precise proposals, as stated in its note of July 10 of July.

The United States Government continues to seek a way to achieve a peaceful division of Germany. This will not be accomplished by continuing discussions about a peace treaty with a Germany not yet unified and lacking an all-German Government. The United States Government therefore renews the proposal made in its note of July 10 of July at the four-power meeting—which could take place in October—concerning the composition, functions and authority of an impartial commission of investigation with a view to creating the conditions necessary for free elections. The next step would be to discuss the arrangements for the holding of these elections and for the formation of an all-German Government, as proposed in paragraph 11 (IV) of the United States Government's note of May 13. When free elections are held and an all-German Government formed, the peace treaty can be negotiated. The United States Government, in consultation with the French Government and the United Kingdom Government, and after consultation with the German Federal Government, the German Democratic German authorities in Berlin, most earnestly urges the Soviet Government to reconsider its refusal to join the other powers in a

E. AUSTRIAN STATE TREATY NEGOTIATION, 1950-1953

72. DECLARATION BY THE FOREIGN MINISTERS OF THE UNITED STATES, THE UNITED KINGDOM, AND FRANCE MAY 19, 1950¹

The Governments of the United States, the United Kingdom and France reaffirm that their policy with respect to Austria requires the earliest possible completion of an Austrian treaty which will lead to the restoration of a free and independent Austria in accordance with the pledge given in the Moscow Declaration of November 1943,² and to the withdrawal of the forces of occupation.

To this end the three Governments are ready at any time to settle without delay all outstanding issues of the treaty, provided that this will definitely bring about agreement on the treaty as a whole. If, however, the unwillingness of the Soviet Government to settle all outstanding issues continues to prevent the conclusion of the treaty, the occupation will have to be maintained for the present. But the three Governments are themselves prepared to carry out such measures as may properly be taken to strengthen within the framework of existing quadripartite agreements the authority of the Austrian Government and to lighten the burden of the occupation on Austria.

In accordance with the provisions of Article 9 of the control agreement of June 28, 1946,³ the three Governments have decided to proceed at any early date to the appointment of civilian High Commissioners.

73. NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN AMBASSADOR AT MOSCOW⁴ TO THE SOVIET MINISTER OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS, JUNE 12, 1950⁶

I have the honor to refer to the situation in which the deputies for the Austrian treaty negotiations have been unable to reach agreement on the terms of an Austrian state treaty. It will be recalled that Austrian independence was pledged in the Moscow Declaration of 1943,⁷ and my Government regrets exceedingly the failure to reach an agreement which would result in the fulfillment of this pledge.

The Foreign Ministers of the United Kingdom, France, and the United States at their meeting in London on May 18 reaffirmed that their policy with respect to Austria requires the earliest possible of a free and independent Austria in accordance with the pledge given in the Moscow Declaration and to the withdrawal of the force of occupation. The three governments further agreed that they are ready at any time to settle without delay all outstanding issues of the treaty, provided that this will definitely bring about agreement on the treaty as a whole.¹

In the absence of a treaty, the three governments agreed that they are prepared to carry out such measures as may properly be taken to strengthen, within the framework of existing quadripartite agreements, the authority of the Austrian Government and to lighten the burden of the occupation on Austria to the greatest extent possible as requested by the Austrian Government in recent notes to the occupying powers.² The three Foreign Ministers further agreed to proceed at an early date to appoint civilian high commissioners in Austria in accordance with the provisions of Article 9 of the Control Agreement of June 28, 1946.³

My Government would be pleased if the Government of the Soviet Union, pending final decision on the treaty, would associate itself with the program determined upon by the three Foreign Ministers. In the meantime, my Government will, on its part, as a first step in such a program, proceed at an early date to designate a civilian high commissioner to replace its present military commander in Austria and hopes that the Soviet Government will take similar action.

74. STATEMENT TO THE PRESS BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE, JULY 12, 1950 ⁴

The deputies for the Austrian treaty negotiations met in London on July 10 for their 256th meeting. In obvious preparation for this meeting, the Soviet Government on July 8 sent to the American Embassy in Moscow a second note⁵ regarding the Allied position in Trieste. This second note merely repeats the unfounded allegation in the Soviet note of April 20.⁶

This Government's reply of June 16⁷ adequately answered those allegations. There is, of course, no valid reason for linking the two questions, but, true to the Soviet propaganda pattern, the Soviet deputy for the Austrian treaty negotiations, at the July 10 meeting instead of discussing the remaining unagreed articles of the Austrian treaty, utilized the meeting to read a prepared statement on Trieste.

This Soviet action once again emphasizes that the Soviet Government does not wish to conclude an Austrian treaty despite the pledge which it made in the Moscow Declaration to reestablish Austria as a free and independent nation. of the Western deputies to negotiate and conclude the unsuccessful and, in view of the impasse, the deputies with the Western deputies agreeing to meet again on September 7. The Soviet deputy stated that it would be necessary for to his Government for consideration the Western proposal again on September 7.

The British, French, and United States Foreign Ministers at their meeting in London last May² that their respective Governments are ready at any time to settle without delay all issues of the treaty provided that this will definitely agree on the treaty as a whole. The principles agreed the three Foreign Ministers were communicated to the Government on June 12³ in the hope that the Soviet would agree to associate itself with the program and definite progress in the solution of the Austrian problem be achieved. No reply has been received from the Soviet Government to this approach.

The only true basis on which Austria can exercise full is by four-power agreement and the withdrawal from Austria all forces of occupation. It is fundamental that the Government of the United States desires the achievement of this objective.

Soviet actions designed to prevent conclusion of the treaty must necessarily result in a delay in the fulfillment of our desire, with which this Government is in full sympathy, complete independence. Under these circumstances Western Governments are endeavoring, within the framework of existing four-power agreements, to carry out such measures properly be taken to strengthen the authority of the Austrian Government and to lighten Austria's occupation burdens.

It should be borne in mind, in this connection, that the heretofore taken or to be taken by this Government to lighten Austria's occupation burdens are not regarded as a substitute for a treaty. Our actions, in this respect, are endeavors only to take such constructive measures as may properly be taken pending conclusion of the treaty, to fulfill our obligations under the Four Big Powers Agreement of 1946⁴ which provides that the Allied Control Authority in Austria shall assist the freely elected Government of Austria to recreate a sound and democratic national life and to assure as possible full control of its own affairs of state.

75. STATEMENT RELEASED TO THE PRESS BY THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE, DECEMBER 15, 1950¹

Once again, the deputies for the Austrian treaty have failed to make any progress because the Soviet representative persists in introducing irrelevant issues in order to avoid discussing the few and relatively minor articles of the treaty which remain unagreed. For over a year, the Soviets, by a series of stalling devices, have refused to discuss concrete issues. Again, they have used the Austrian discussions to talk about Trieste, an entirely unrelated matter.

This development was hardly a surprise, in view of past Soviet tactics. The report, spread earlier this week, that the Soviets had requested the meeting, was incorrect—they merely agreed to a meeting proposed weeks ago by the Western deputies.

The United States remains determined to do all in its power to conclude an Austrian treaty but such a treaty is impossible until the Soviets agree and withdraw their occupation forces. Until they do so, the United States will be forced to keep its troops in Austria and will continue to live up to its obligations there. Unfortunately, the Austrians are still denied the freedom and independence which were long ago promised to them.

76. STATEMENT TO THE PRESS BY THE UNITED STATES HIGH COMMISSIONER,² OCTOBER 31, 1951³

The suggestion of the Austrian Government⁴ that the Deputy Foreign Ministers of the four occupying powers meet as early as possible to reach a definite agreement on the state treaty is particularly gratifying to me. It is consistent with the unswerving policy of the United States Government to terminate the occupation of Austria by means of a state treaty and is also in keeping with the statement of the Foreign Ministers of the United Kingdom, France, and the United States in Washington on September 14.⁵

The United States Government remains firm in its conviction that the four occupying powers should sign and implement the state treaty without further delay and restore Austria to its rightful position as a sovereign nation. The people of Austria can continue to count upon the unqualified support of the United States Government in fulfilling the pledge undertaken at Moscow on November 1, 1943 for the restoration of a free and independent Austria.

I personally feel that the Soviets again have the opportunity to restored to his full independence and occupation is to be or this unfair occupation will continue.

There can be no doubt in the minds of the Austrian people that the United States Government has and will continue to press for the conclusion of the state treaty and withdrawal of troops from Austria. But, as I have said before, the United States will not withdraw its troops until all of the occupying powers are prepared to do likewise.

77. NOTE FROM THE SECRETARY-GENERAL OF THE AUSTRIAN TREATY DEPUTIES TO THE SOVIET EMBA- SY IN LONDON, JANUARY 24, 1952¹

I have the honor to state that I have been requested by the Austrian Treaty Deputies for the United Kingdom, the United States of America to inform you as follows:

The three Deputies have taken note that the Soviet Government wishes to give further study to their communication of January 18, 1952, and that in the meanwhile a Soviet representative is unable to attend a meeting of the Deputies for the Austrian Treaty.³

The three Deputies recall that a representative of the Soviet Government was invited on December 28, 1951 to attend such a meeting on January 21, 1952. On the eve of the proposed meeting the Soviet Government sent a reply⁴ making the attendance of the Soviet Deputy dependent on an assurance by the Western Deputies that they would agree to discuss certain issues having no bearing on the conclusion of the Treaty. For nearly two years the Soviet Government has delayed agreement on the Treaty by his insistence on the consideration of these issues. The situation has now become further aggravated by the Soviet Government making acceptance of these conditions a prerequisite to a meeting.

The three Deputies regret that the failure of the Soviet Government to take part in the proposed meeting is continuing to delay the conclusion of the Austrian Treaty. Persistence of the Soviet Government in its present attitude would inevitably lead to the conclusion that the Soviet Government is deliberately seeking to obstruct the completion of the Austrian Treaty and the restoration of independence to the Austrian people.

The three Deputies still hope that a Soviet representative will be able to attend a meeting at an early date for the purpose of concluding the Treaty. The chairman remains ready to call a meeting of the Deputies as soon as this can be mutually agreed.

78. STATEMENT BY THE GOVERNMENTS OF THE UNITED STATES, THE UNITED KINGDOM, AND FRANCE, FEBRUARY 28, 1952¹

The Governments of France, the United Kingdom, and the United States of America are seriously concerned that arrangements which had been made for discussion by the deputies for the Austrian treaty to take place on the 21st of January for the purpose of concluding the treaty, were frustrated owing to the failure of the Soviet deputy to attend.²

The three Governments recall that Austria, the first country to be occupied by Hitler, was promised her freedom and independence in a declaration made in Moscow in the name of the Governments of the United Kingdom, the United States of America, and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in 1943.³ France associated herself with this declaration on the 16th of November 1943.⁴ The Government then announced their determination that Austria should be liberated from German domination and reestablished as a free and independent country. Yet 8 years afterwards and despite 258 meetings of the deputies to conclude the treaty, Austria has not yet regained her full independence. Her laws are submitted to a foreign body before being passed, her communications are controlled and censored, and, above all, her territory is divided into zones occupied by foreign troops with all the economic and moral hardship on the Austrian people that this implies.

The Austrians ardently desire to see terminated a state of affairs which should rightly have ended long ago. The three Governments fully share this aspiration and consider that renewed efforts should be made to solve a problem with which the world ought no longer to be confronted. They are, therefore, urgently examining new proposals so that the Four Powers may be enabled to fulfill their pledge made in the Moscow Declaration to restore to Austria her full freedom and independence.

¹ Department of State Bulletin, Mar. 10, 1952, pp. 379-380. In releasing the above statement at Washington, the Department of State emphasized that no consideration is being given to the conclusion of a separate treaty for Austria without Soviet participation. [Footnote in Bulletin.]

79. NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN EMBASSY AT M THE SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTRY, MARCH 1

On February 28 the Governments of the United Kingdom, the United States of America, and France publicly expressed concern that the discussions of the Austrian Treaty by the plenipotentiaries planned for January 21, for the purpose of concluding a settlement, were frustrated owing to the failure of the Soviet Deputies to attend. They recalled that Austria, the first country to be occupied by the Soviet Union, was promised full independence in the Moscow Declaration, but that nearly 9 years afterwards this promise has not been fulfilled.

Responsibility for this state of affairs lies squarely on the Soviet Government. The Four Foreign Ministers reached Geneva on June 20, 1949 on the basic issues involved in the settlement and instructed their Deputies to complete negotiations by the draft Treaty no later than September 1, 1949.⁴ Since that time the Soviet Government has studiously evaded its obligations under the Austria undertaken in the Moscow Declaration. The Soviet Government has refused to engage in constructive negotiations concerning the outstanding issues in the draft Treaty, has introduced new issues, and did not send its representative to attend the meeting of the Deputies.

The Government of the United States considers that the failure to reach an Austrian settlement has placed a heavy and unnecessary burden on the Austrian people and has contributed materially to the maintenance of the dangerous tensions which unhappily prevail in international relations. It is the most earnest desire of the United States to do everything within its power to remove these tensions. The conclusion of an Austrian Treaty would constitute an important step toward the consolidation of peace in Europe.

This Government, in concert with the Governments of the United Kingdom and France, has now examined the Austrian proposal. The three Governments are in agreement that the paramount consideration of the powers occupying Austria is to restore Austria to full and complete independence in accordance with the Moscow Declaration. The three Governments are also agreed that this fundamental principle to the Austrian people is vastly more important than any other and extraneous considerations which have since June 1945 been advanced in connection with the agreement on the Treaty. Accordingly, the Government of the United States desires to propose to the Soviet Government that it should sign an instrument which will give Austria full independence.

posal should be examined in the light of the impasse in negotiation on the draft Treaty and the progress of Austria toward democratic self-government during the prolonged occupation. The Soviet Government will note that it conforms to the Moscow Declaration and contains the essentials which are required to reestablish Austrian independence.

The Government of the United States earnestly recommends that the Soviet Government give this proposal most careful and serious consideration and inquires if the Soviet Government is prepared to instruct its Deputy to renew negotiations.

81. NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN EMBASSY AT MOSCOW TO THE SOVIET MINISTRY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS, MARCH 13, 1952¹

The Government of the United States refers to its note of March 13² in which it proposed that the four powers immediately reach a settlement which would fulfill the pledge made to the Austrians in 1943 that their independence would be restored.

A draft abbreviated treaty³ was proposed as a basis for the continuation of the negotiations which have been in progress since March 13, 1952, which, despite several hundred meetings of the representatives of the four powers, have not succeeded in reaching final agreement.

This Government considers that its proposal provides a basis for an immediate and equitable settlement in Austria which would remove a source of constant tension in Europe and render justice to the Austrian people.

The Government of the United States requests, therefore, that the views of the Soviet Government on the proposal for an Austrian settlement, as contained in its note of March 13, be made known at the first opportunity.

82. NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN EMBASSY AT MOSCOW TO THE SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTRY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1952

The Government of the United States is pleased to receive the reply of the Soviet Government to its note of March 13, 1952, in which it offers to the Soviet Government a simple instrument which will guarantee the full independence of Austria.

of the proposal made on March 13, 1952. This suggestion is based on four objections, namely, that it fails to provide for free elections as specified in Article 8 of the long draft of the State Treaty, that it fails to guarantee human rights and basic freedoms as specified in Article 7 of the long draft, that it fails to eliminate Nazism as specified in Article 9 of the long draft, and that it fails to provide for the establishment of Armed Forces.¹

With reference to the first three of these points, it is the position of the Government of the United States that none of these provisions in the note of the Soviet Government are required in a settlement designed to terminate the prolonged occupation and to establish the independence of Austria. These points are not required in the Austrian Constitution or in Austrian legislation now in force. Nonetheless, appreciating the careful consideration given by the U.S.S.R. during these past five months to the proposal of March 13, 1952, and anxious, as it has been since the Moscow Declaration of 1943, to restore to Austria full independence, the Government of the United States therefore proposes that there be added to the proposal of March 13, 1952 articles 7, 8, and 9 of the long draft as agreed upon by the four powers.

With reference to the Soviet Government's objections to the proposal of March 13, 1952 in that it passes over the right of Austria to maintain its own national armed forces necessary for the defense of Austria, the Government of the United States considers that the right of a free and independent Austria to maintain armed forces belongs inherently to a free and independent Austria and should not have to be specifically granted to a country that has been considered to have been an enemy. The Soviet Government's objection implies by its reference to the long draft of the State Treaty that the United States wishes to place limitations upon Austria's right to have its own national armed forces for its self-defense. While seeing no need to limit Austrian sovereign rights, the United States Government is prepared in order to reach early agreement and to terminate the occupation of Austria to accept, although reluctantly, the addition of Articles 7, 8, and 9 of the long draft to its proposal of March 13, 1952.

The Government of the United States therefore believes that the way is now clear for the conclusion of an Austrian settlement. The Government of the United States is now prepared to accept the Soviet suggestions regarding the removal of the objection to the proposal of March 13, 1952. The Government of the United States is accordingly prepared for a meeting of the Deputies with the object of initialling the proposal of March 13, 1952 as amended as above in accordance with the suggestions of the Soviet Government's note. Since the United States Delegation is in the chair at the forthcoming meeting, he has requested

83. GENERAL ASSEMBLY RESOLUTION 613 DECEMBER 20, 1952¹

The General Assembly,

Recalling the terms of resolution 190 (III) of 3 November 1948 whereby an appeal was made to the great Powers to renew their efforts to compose their differences and establish a lasting peace;

Recalling the terms of the Moscow Declaration of 1 November 1943 whereby the Governments of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the United States of America recognized that Austria should be re-established as a free and independent State,

Recalling further that the Government of France joined the above-mentioned Governments in the said declaration on 28 November 1943,⁴

Considering that, in the spirit of the said declaration, the great Powers accepted the responsibility of re-establishing a free and independent Austria, and, to that end, have entered into negotiations towards the conclusion of an Austrian treaty,

Noting with concern that those negotiations, which have been in progress since 1947, have hitherto failed to bring about the proposed objective,

Taking into account that such a state of affairs, still prevailing a lapse of seven years since the liberation of Austria at the end of the Second World War, and arising from the inconclusive results of the aforementioned negotiations, does constitute a source of grave disappointment for the Austrian people, who have by their successful efforts towards the restoration and democratization of their country,

Recognizing that only through the unhampered exercise of the free will of the Austrian people of their freedom and independence can the full attainment of the above-mentioned objective be realized,

Taking further into account that such a state of affairs constitutes a serious obstacle to the full participation by Austria in the normal and peaceful development of the community of nations and the full exercise of the powers of the Austrian people in its sovereignty,

Having in mind that the solution of this problem would constitute an important step towards the elimination of other areas of international tension and therefore towards the creation of conditions favourable to the accomplishment of world peace,

Desiring to contribute to the strengthening of international peace and security and the developing of friendly relations among all peoples in conformity with the Purposes and Principles of the Charter of the United Nations, a renewed and urgent effort to reach agreement on the terms of an Austrian treaty with a view to an early termination of the occupation of Austria and the full exercise by Austria of the powers inherent in its sovereignty.

THE SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTRY, JANUARY 12, 1953 ¹

The United Nations General Assembly on December 20, 1952 adopted a resolution addressing an earnest appeal to the Government of the Four Powers which occupy Austria to make a renewed and urgent effort to reach an agreement on the terms of an Austrian Treaty with a view to an early termination of the occupation.²

The United Nations General Assembly resolution emphasizes the world-wide support for Austria's plea for the restoration of her full freedom and sovereignty. The United States Government which has in the past urged and continues to urge full Austrian independence and sovereignty not only welcomes this resolution but also considers that it imposes an additional and immediate obligation on each of the Four Powers to give renewed and urgent consideration to the fulfillment of their pledge made in the Moscow Declaration of 1943.

The United States Government for its part urges that every effort be made now to conclude a Four Power Treaty. It is proposed therefore, rather than to continue the sterile exchange of notes, the most recent of which is the Soviet Government's note of September 27, 1952,³ that a meeting of the Austrian Treaty Deputies be held at an early date for the purpose of concluding an Austrian Treaty. Since the United States Deputy⁴ will be in the chair at this meeting he will request the Secretary General of the Austrian Treaty Deputies to issue invitations for an early meeting of the Four Deputies in London.

THE SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTRY, JANUARY 29, 1953 ⁵

The United States Government acknowledges the receipt of the Soviet note of January 27⁶ and wishes to reaffirm its desire to comply with the United Nations General Assembly resolution of December 20, 1952⁷ which called upon the Four Powers to make a renewed and urgent effort to reach agreement on the terms of an Austrian treaty.

with a view to an early termination of the occupation of the full exercise by Austria of the powers inherent in her.

With this purpose in mind, the United States Government meeting of the treaty deputies for January 30 in London conclude an Austrian treaty. The United States Government that the Soviet Government declares its readiness subject to certain conditions, to take part in a meeting to discuss the problem. The United States Government for its part does not consider it appropriate to impose prior conditions, as proposed by the Soviet Government, as to the scope of these discussions. It declares its readiness to discuss, without prior conditions, any and all matters relevant to the speedy conclusion of a treaty. To that end, it extends the invitation to the Soviet deputy to attend a meeting on January 30 but is prepared if the Soviet Government should prefer, to postpone the meeting until February 6.

86. STATEMENT TO THE PRESS BY THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE, FEBRUARY 10, 1953¹

[In answer to questions concerning the meetings of the treaty deputies at London on February 6 and February 9, 1953, Mr. McDermott, Special Assistant for Press Relations, made the following statement:]

Andrei Gromyko furnished further proof that the Soviet Government has no intention of concluding an Austrian treaty and of allowing Austria continue as an occupied country. During yesterday's meeting, the Western deputies had repeated the simple fact that they had met to agree on an Austrian treaty. The French chairman [Mr. de Crouy-Chanel] suggested that anything could be done to reach an agreement would lead to a treaty. He proposed that the long draft be discussed inasmuch as he assumed that the Soviet Government had expressed its readiness to conclude a treaty on the basis of the draft only.

Mr. Gromyko, however, again insisted that no discussion take place until the so-called abbreviated treaty² was completed. He refused to be budged even after the Western deputies threatened that they might withdraw the abbreviated treaty if a just and honorable treaty could be concluded on any other basis, including the draft, without further delay. The Western deputies in fact proposed that discussion begin by going through that draft. When the Soviet representative said no more could be done,

87. JOINT NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN, BRITISH, AND FRENCH DEPUTIES FOR THE AUSTRIAN TREATY¹ TO THE SOVIET DEPUTY,² MAY 26, 1953³

In his letter of the 25 May⁴ to the Secretary General of the Deputies for the Austrian Treaty, the Soviet Deputy alleged that a meeting of the Treaty Deputies could be called only at the request of the Council of Foreign Ministers, and asserted that there were no grounds for believing that the meeting called for the 27 May would be successful. The Deputies of France, the United Kingdom and the United States fail to understand the Soviet Deputy's position. It is the assigned task of the Deputies to draft an Austrian Treaty. All but a few of their 260 previous meetings were called without specific instructions from the Council of Foreign Ministers. Moreover, at the last meeting of the Deputies on February 9, 1953, the Soviet Deputy agreed to an adjournment with the understanding that the next meeting would be called by the United Kingdom Chairman at an early date.

The three Deputies consider unwarranted the assumption by the Soviet Deputy that the meeting proposed would not lead to the conclusion of an Austrian Treaty. At the last meeting they made it perfectly clear they were prepared to accept any treaty in terms which would ensure Austria's political and economic independence. They are convinced that, given goodwill on the Soviet side, it would still be possible to conclude such a treaty.

The three Deputies deeply regret the refusal of the Soviet Deputy to meet and are reporting the position to their respective governments.

88. NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN AMBASSADOR AT MOSCOW⁵ TO THE SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTER,⁶ JUNE 11, 1953⁷

The Ambassador of the United States presents his compliments to the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and, under instructions from his Government, has the honor to communicate the following:

The United States Government has learned with regret of the refusal of the Soviet Deputy to attend the meeting of Deputies for the Austrian Treaty called for the 27th of May by the United Kingdom Chairman.¹ The United States Government concerned that it is now nearly ten years since the Austrians promised the restoration of their freedom and independence in the Moscow Declaration.² It is more than eight years since the hostilities in Europe made possible the fulfillment of the promise. The United States Government cannot accept as a condition this further delay in the conclusion of an Austrian Treaty on which the Soviet Deputy has based his refusal to attend the meeting.

In 1949 the United States Government, together with the United Kingdom Governments, agreed to meet for discussion on major outstanding issues of the treaty provisions. A decision could be reached on it as a whole.³

Since that time, the Soviet Government has put forward many obstacles which have prevented substantive negotiations. The Governments of the United Kingdom, the United States and France have repeatedly made it clear that they will not accept any treaty which would ensure Austria's political and economic independence.

It was in that spirit that the representatives of the United Kingdom, the United States and France were ready in the early 27th of May to attend the meeting called in the early 27th of May as agreed at the previous meeting. The Soviet Deputy did not attend and proposed instead that consideration of the Treaty be continued through diplomatic channels.

The conclusion of an Austrian Treaty is not a question of procedure but rather of good will. To avoid further delay and to enable the Deputies to complete the work of the Treaty the United States Government requests the Soviet Government to inform it of the exact text of the treaty which the Soviet Government is prepared to conclude in order to ensure the political and economic independence of Austria.

F. NEGOTIATIONS REGARDING GERMANY AUSTRIA, AND EUROPEAN SECURITY, 1953-1954

89. NOTE FROM THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT TO THE SOVIET GOVERNMENT, JULY 15, 1953¹

The development of the international situation and the recent events in Eastern Germany and in Berlin have intensified the universal desire to see peace more firmly established and to ease existing tensions in a way consistent with the fundamental right to freedom.

While recognizing the fact that enduring peace can only be ultimately assured when certain basic problems, such as controlled disarmament, can be dealt with, the United States Government desires to dispose now of those problems which are capable of early solution.

The conclusion of the German and Austrian treaties which are long overdue clearly constitutes an essential element of the European settlement which the United States Government regards as a major contribution to peace.

A German peace treaty can only be negotiated with the participation of a free and representative all-German Government in a position freely to discuss such a treaty. Such a government can only result from free elections.

The conditions under which such a Government should be formed and enjoy full liberty of action, constitute a problem which is capable of early solution if there is good will on all sides. It is equally clear that no real progress can be made toward a general relaxation of tension in Europe so long as this problem remains unsolved.

In its notes to the Soviet Government, the last of which is that of September 23, 1952,² to which no answer has yet been received, the United States Government made constructive proposals, which were fully reflected in the resolution of the German Bundestag of June 10th of this year.³ These proposals are designed to satisfy the unanimous desire of the German people for unity in freedom.

Mindful of the even greater urgency which the recent events have given to German unification, the United States Government is determined to make a new effort so as to bring to an end the abnormal situation to which the German people is subjected. It has therefore decided, after consulting the German Federal Government and the German authorities in Berlin, to propose to the Soviet Government at the meeting of Foreign Ministers of France, the United Kingdom, United States, and the Soviet Union, this question of finding a solution might begin about the end of September at a place to be agreed. The subjects for discussion should be the following:

(1) The organization of free elections in the Federal Republic of Germany, and in Berlin. This would include discussion inter alia of the necessary guarantees for free movement, freedom of action for political parties, free press, and the enjoyment of the basic freedoms by all Germans before, during and after elections.

(2) Conditions for the establishment of a free all-German Government, with freedom of action in internal and external affairs.

These are essential steps which must precede the opening of discussions with the Soviet Government for a German peace settlement itself a major element of a general settlement.

The United States Government also considers that a meeting agreement should finally be reached on the Austrian question.

90. NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN EMBASSY AT MOSCOW TO THE SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTRY, AUGUST 12, 1953

The United States Government has examined with interest the note of July 30² in which the Soviet Government indicated that it was prepared to resume discussion of a treaty for Austria if the Soviet "proposed treaty"³ were withdrawn from consideration.

In their notes of June 11⁴ the Governments of the United Kingdom, the United States and France stated clearly, as they have already done on a number of previous occasions, that they were prepared to accept any treaty which would insure Austria's political and economic independence and requested the Soviet Government to inform them of the exact text of the treaty which the Soviet Government was prepared to conclude. The Soviet Government has not responded to this request. Furthermore the Soviet Government has declined to attend the meeting of the Austrian Treaty Conference called for May 27, in London.

The United States Government suggested in its note of July 30 that the Austrian treaty should be discussed at the meeting of the four Foreign Ministers. But in view of the Soviet Government's note of July 30, and so as to conclude an Austrian treaty as soon as possible, the United States Government proposes that a meeting of Deputies be convened in London on August 31, 1953, to discuss and discharge their obligation to report on this matter to their respective Governments.

a treaty for Austria which will insure Austria's political and economic independence, the United States Government undertakes not to introduce for consideration the abbreviated treaty. In making this proposal the United States Government assumes that the Soviet Government will be prepared in fact promptly to conclude an Austrian treaty and accordingly that the reference to a relationship between a German peace settlement and an Austrian treaty in the final paragraph of the Soviet Government's note of August 4¹ should not be construed as deferring any hope of an Austrian treaty until other unrelated conditions are met.

91. NOTE FROM THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT TO THE SOVIET GOVERNMENT, SEPTEMBER 2, 1953²

1. The United States Government, in its customary close consultation with the Governments of the United Kingdom and France, has carefully studied the Soviet Government's notes of August 4 and 15, 1953,³ which were in reply to proposals presented on July 15⁴ by the three Western powers. The Government of the German Federal Republic and the German authorities in Berlin have also been consulted.

2. The United States Government has no intention once again to refute the Soviet Government's criticisms of policy followed by the three powers, nor of thus prolonging a sterile discussion which can only be harmful to the cause of peace.

3. The United States Government therefore fully reserves its position in regard to the various allegations in the Soviet notes of August 4 and 15, and will confine its comments to the problems of an urgent nature which arise in connection with the meeting of the Foreign Ministers proposed in its note of July 15.

4. Real progress toward peace and toward a lessening of international tension would be achieved were it possible to find an early solution of some of the existing problems concerning Germany and to conclude the Austrian state treaty. It therefore appears desirable that the meeting of the Foreign Ministers should devote itself to these problems; whereas to inject into the discussion a series of other complex questions, as proposed by the Soviet Government, could only delay and prejudice the success of the talks. A solution of the German and Austrian problems could be expected to pave the way for fruitful discussion of other major questions. The United States Government also wishes to point out that the study of some of these

Republic will be represented.¹ The latter's participation posed meeting of Foreign Ministers of the four powers therefore be justified.

5. The Soviet Government has suggested a procedure with the German problem which appears complicated, and such a basis could, at best, only be long drawn out. Government's note of August 15 envisages, in effect, a series of free elections in the Federal Republic, in the East Germany, and in Berlin. An All-German Government would be based on the will of the people as expressed in free elections. It would not be qualified to take vital decisions affecting the future of the United Germany. The problem of free elections is thus separated from any all-German settlement. The United States Government therefore considers that the meeting of the Foreign Ministers should concentrate itself to the German problem, the solution of which is a part of a world settlement, and concentrate in the first place on the question of free elections and the status of the future German Government.

6. Furthermore, it must be pointed out that when the United States Government proposed, in its note of July 15, that the question of free elections be considered first, it did not make any promise that an investigating commission be established. It seems that on this point the Soviet Government has misinterpreted the terms of this note.

7. The United States Government has never considered the re-establishment of freedom and independence of Austria on the terms of the Moscow declaration of November 1943.² Austria, considered as a liberated country, should be dependent upon the United States toward a solution of the German problem. It considers that the two problems are quite distinct. In its view nothing should prevent the conclusion of an Austrian treaty. It therefore considers the failure of the Soviet Government to accept its proposal for an Austrian treaty deputies should meet on August 31. It remains the hope of the United States Government that the Foreign Ministers will be able to agree on the Austrian state treaty and that they themselves meet.

8. The United States Government is convinced that a settlement more likely to be made by discussion of these problems will require further exchange of notes. Consequently, it renews its invitation to the Soviet Government to participate in a meeting of Foreign Ministers which could take place on October 15. It understands that this would be agreeable to the Swiss Government.

92. STATEMENT TO THE PRESS BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE, SEPTEMBER 3, 1953 ¹

The continued partition of Germany is a scandal. It is more than that. It is a crime. Originally, there were four zones of occupation, one each for Britain, France, the United States, and the Soviet Union.² This was designed as a convenient way for the Allies to administer the first phases of the surrender terms.³ It was never intended that Germany should be indefinitely partitioned. Britain, France, and the United States over 4 years ago put their zones together. The Soviet Union has stubbornly held on to the part of Germany it occupies.

This is not only wrong to the Germans; it is a menace to the peace. The Germans in the Soviet zone, now cut off from their fellows for over 8 years and subjected to the despotic rule of Soviet puppets, are becoming increasingly restless. Their pathetic economic plight is shown by the eagerness with which they seek the food packages made available to them in West Berlin. They have sought these by the millions, even at great personal risk. Their growing resentment at their rulers is shown by the riots and strikes which led even unarmed Germans with stones to seek to resist the Red Army tanks which were sent to subdue them.

Now, in an effort to curry favor with the Germans, particularly having in mind the coming elections,⁵ the Soviet leaders have made another of a long series of propaganda gestures in giving lip service to the idea of German unity. However, they have surrounded this with conditions which would effectively nullify any practical result. For example, in their note of August 4,⁶ the Soviet Union proposed that Communist China should be brought into Foreign Ministerial consultations dealing with such proposals as that of German unity. It is hard to conceive of any proposition better calculated to prevent any constructive result. Surely the solution of Germany should not be subordinated to a solution of China nor should the fate of Germany be left to Chinese Communists.

The Soviet Union has also said that before there could be German unity, there must be a German peace treaty and that its own puppet regime in East Germany must participate in the making of that peace treaty.

A peace treaty with the Allies, including the Soviet Union, when German sentiment was purportedly represented by the Soviet puppet regime in East Germany, would hardly be a peace treaty which gave genuine expression to the wishes of the Germans. Such a treaty

It is the view of Great Britain, France, and the United States that the first step for the solution of the problem of Germany is to have all-German free elections to bring about unification. When that has happened, then there will be a truly representative German government and then the Allies can make a peace treaty which, if accepted by the all-German Government, will have a true endorsement on the part of the German people which they can be expected to honor.

In the hope of bringing this matter to a prompt solution, the three Western allies have proposed a meeting with the Soviet Union on October 15 to discuss in the first instance the establishment, by all-German free elections, of a government which would unify Germany. We also hope at that meeting to conclude an Austrian peace treaty.

In the interest of speed the three Western allies have eliminated from their note ¹ all controversial matter and have not attempted to submit the vast series of arguments and implications contained in the two preceding Soviet notes of August 4 and August 15.² Our proposal is simple—a meeting on October 15 which would concentrate in the first instance on the question of free elections and the status of the future German government. This is what the Germans themselves want, as shown by the Bundestag resolution of June 10,³ adopted with the support of all political parties, except the Communists.

The response of the Soviet Union to this proposal will be another test of whether the Soviet Union desires in good faith to solve outstanding problems which threaten international peace and which create grave international tension. We hope for a favorable response.

3. NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN AMBASSADOR AT MOSCOW ⁴ TO THE SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTER,⁵ OCTOBER 18, 1953 ⁶

1. The United States Government in its customary close consultation with the Governments of the United Kingdom and France, has carefully studied the Soviet Government's reply of September 22 to the proposals of the three Western powers for a four-power meeting at Lugano on October 15. The Government of the German Federal Republic and the German authorities in Berlin have also been consulted.

2. A satisfactory settlement of the problems relating to Germany and Austria is clearly essential for any real and lasting relaxation of international tension and is vital to the future of the people of those countries. The United States Government, recalling its earlier no-of July 15¹ and September 2,² is firmly of the opinion that real progress towards a solution of major international questions, including the problem of European security, can be made by frank discussions of Germany and Austria at a meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the U.S., U.S.S.R., U.K. and France and not by embarking upon a further exchange of notes. The U.S. Government trusts that the Soviet note reflects a willingness promptly to discuss these subjects.

3. Such a meeting will enable the Soviet Government to state its views on any aspect of the German and Austrian questions which it may wish to present. For its part, the U.S. Government welcomes the opportunity to put forward its views concerning questions dealt with in its previous notes.

4. As regards the Soviet proposal that the Austrian question be discussed in the ordinary diplomatic way, it is the view of the U.S. Government that diplomatic channels are always available and this government will continue to give its most careful consideration to any Soviet proposal regarding the treaty which may be thus submitted. However, as no progress has been made through such channels during the past few years, the United States Government is of the opinion that discussion by the four Foreign Ministers themselves represents the most practicable way to end the present stalemate and reach agreement on a treaty.

5. A solution of the German and Austrian questions is long overdue. The Foreign Ministers of the United States, United Kingdom and France, conscious of the special responsibilities which their governments together with the Soviet Government share in regard to Germany and Austria, therefore, desire to consider these questions together with the Soviet Foreign Minister as soon as possible. Since the date of October 15 originally suggested has now passed, the United States Government proposes that the Foreign Ministers should meet at Lugano on November 9. They sincerely hope that the Soviet Government will agree to participate.

6. The Soviet note also proposes an additional five power conference to consider measures to lessen tension in international relations. The United States Government is always ready and willing to discuss the underlying causes of such tension with a view to their removal. But it wishes to do so under conditions which offer reasonable prospect for positive results and assure that the views of the directly interested governments are properly represented. Accordingly, the United States Government has already agreed to the political conference on Korea in the form proposed by the Communist side in the Korean armistice negotiations and recommended in the armistice agreement.

major sources of tension in the Far East, thus opening the way for an early peaceful settlement of other international problems in this part of the world. Other matters mentioned in the note, such as the disarmament question, are under either direct or projected discussion in the United Nations General Assembly. Several of the subjects mentioned in the Soviet note were inscribed on the agenda of the current General Assembly¹ and are of interest to the Soviet Union. In addition, the United States Government remains ready to discuss through ordinary diplomatic channels any points which any government may wish to raise.

7. Thus, on these various questions, the way is open for discussion. If in addition a fruitful discussion can now take place at the level of the Foreign Ministers, a way would be paved for discussion of other major questions, thus restoring the necessary conditions for peaceful and friendly relations among nations.

94. NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES IN MOSCOW² TO THE SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTER BERLIN, 16, 1953⁴

In close consultation with the Governments of France, the United Kingdom, the United States Government has carefully considered the Soviet Government's note of November 3⁵ in reply to the U.S. note of October 18⁶ in which the U.S. Government proposed that the Ministers of Foreign Affairs should meet at Lugano on November 10. The Government of the German Federal Republic and the authorities in Berlin have also been consulted.

The U.S. Government notes with regret that the Soviet Government has for the third time within the past four months refused an invitation to discuss the most urgent international problems. The U.S. Government is still of the opinion that the best way of reducing international tension is to persevere in constructive efforts for the progressive solution of outstanding problems, starting with those which most urgently require an early settlement. With this in mind, the United States Government proposed a meeting of the four Foreign Ministers in order to reach agreement on outstanding issues, especially on its reunification in freedom, and on the Austrian Question. In the same spirit, it is continuing its efforts to bring to the political conference on Korea to take place.⁷

To judge from its note of November 3, the Soviet Government contemplates a meeting of the Foreign Ministers, "with the participation of the Ministers of Foreign Affairs of the Chinese Republic," of such a different character that it would not only become involved in futile and endless debate, but would also prevent all progress in the settlement of questions which are both urgent and concrete.

The United States Government laid down no conditions in its invitation and made every possible effort to take into account the views of the Soviet Government. But the latter has made a meeting of the Foreign Ministers conditional upon the acceptance of a number of demands. Some of these have no relation to Europe, but must in the Soviet view be met before even the study of European problems could be initiated. Others would entail the abandonment by the U.S., U.K. and France of all their plans to safeguard their own security. A defenseless Western Europe appears to be the price demanded by the Soviet Government for participation in a conference. The Soviet Government must be well aware that such demands are totally unacceptable.

The United States Government can only conclude from the latest Soviet note that the Soviet Government does not wish at the present time to enter into any negotiations which might have positive results. The U.S. Government nevertheless remains determined to seek by all appropriate means agreement on the most urgent questions the solution of which is essential to the lessening of international tension. Therefore it leaves open the invitation addressed to the Soviet Government on October 18. The U.S. Government is convinced that negotiations on these vital problems would open the way to broader agreement and would thus improve the chances of re-establishing real peace in the world.

95. NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN EMBASSY AT MOSCOW TO THE SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTRY, NOVEMBER 25, 1953¹

In its note of November 3,² the Soviet Government ignored the U.S. Government's invitation to discuss the Austrian State Treaty at a meeting of the four Foreign Ministers at Lugano. It said that it awaited a reply to its note of August 28³ on this subject and confined itself to recalling the suggestion contained in its earlier note for pursuing this question through diplomatic channels, without however putting forward by this means any proposal on the Austrian problem.

Ten years after the Moscow Declaration⁴ the Austrian people have still not obtained their complete political and economic independence.

ernment has not relaxed its effort for the conclusion. During the present year it has three times proposed that be discussed by the Deputies,¹ and since August 28 it has suggested that this question be taken up at the proposed conference in Lugano.²

It is all the more surprising that the Soviet Government has been willing to resume discussions on Austria in that the two Governments, in order to meet Soviet wishes, had in August 17 withdrawn the short draft treaty,³ the sole object was to achieve the earliest possible restoration of Austria's unity and independence. In order to remove any possible misunderstanding, the U.S. Government wishes once more formally to state that this draft is withdrawn.

The U.S. Government believes that nothing stands in the way of the resumption of discussion on the Austrian State Treaty on the basis of the attitude of the Soviet Government. The U.S. Government is prepared to study any Soviet proposal which would promote a speedy settlement and which does not raise extraneous issues. The U.S. Government does not feel able to participate in the very preliminary discussions in a conference of the Foreign Ministers, the U.S. Government believes that it will see no objection to the resumption of the discussions by the Deputies at a date which the Soviet Government finds convenient. If, however, the Soviet Government would prefer to make preliminary discussions through diplomatic channels and, in particular, would like to discuss the question of the basis on which it would be prepared to accept a draft treaty, the U.S. Government would give any such proposal the most serious and careful consideration.

96. NOTE FROM THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT TO THE AUSTRIAN GOVERNMENT, JANUARY 12, 1953

With reference to the Austrian Government's note of January 5,⁵ the Government of the United States has shared for many years the deep desire of the Austrian nation for an early conclusion of the Austrian State Treaty. To this end the Government of the United States has, on July 15, 1953,⁶ in proposing a meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the United States, the United Kingdom, France, the U.S.S.R. and the United Nations, declared that an Austrian Treaty clearly constitutes an important element of European settlement which the United States regards as a major contribution to peace, and that a settlement of such a treaty should be reached finally whenever the Foreign Ministers might meet. Again in its notes to the Government of the United Kingdom and the Government of France, the U.S. Government has expressed its strong desire that the Austrian State Treaty be concluded as soon as possible.

25,¹ and December 8,² the Government of the United States expressed the earnest belief that an Austrian Treaty should be concluded at the earliest meeting of the Foreign Ministers.

The Government of Austria may be assured that there has been no change in the intention of the Government of the United States to seek and take every opportunity of restoring to Austria its well-deserved political and economic independence by agreement among the occupying powers on the terms of an Austrian Treaty. The meeting of the Foreign Ministers at Berlin will be such an opportunity and the Government of Austria may be confident that its aspirations will there be given every support by the Government of the United States.

G. DISCUSSION OF THE PROBLEMS OF GERMANY, AUSTRIA, AND EUROPEAN SECURITY AT THE BERLIN MEETING OF FOREIGN MINISTERS JANUARY 25-FEBRUARY 18, 1954

97. NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN AMBASSADOR³ AT MOSCOW TO THE SOVIET MINISTER OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS DECEMBER 8, 1953⁵

The United States Government is glad to learn from the Soviet Government's note of November 26⁶ that it is now prepared to take part in a meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the United Kingdom, United States, France and the Soviet Union. It is its hope that this meeting will lead towards the reunification of Germany in freedom and to the conclusion of an Austrian State Treaty.

The United States Government is confident that real progress towards the settlement of the German and Austrian questions, which are especially urgent, will contribute to the solution of other major international problems, including that of European security. In this connection, the United States Government reaffirms that the voluntary association of the free countries of the Atlantic alliance and the action of certain European states for developing their prosperity and ensuring their joint security are exclusively defensive and a collective contribution to peace.

The Soviet Government has stated its desire to discuss the possibility Foreign Ministers will enable any participating government to express its views on this question.

The United States Government, having consulted with the Federal Government and the German authorities in Berlin, has decided that the meeting of the four Foreign Ministers should be held on January 4, 1954, in the building which was used by the Allied Control Council in Berlin.

98. STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE JANUARY 30, 1954 (Excerpt) ¹

This second item of our agenda deals with the German question, which also the problem of insuring European security. History teaches us to treat these two matters together.

From this very city where we are, still largely in ruins, we have launched two world wars. Two of our four countries, France and the Soviet Union, have suffered land invasion both in World War I and World War II. The United Kingdom was invaded by a foreign power. We of us have twice had to marshal to the full our human and material resources in order to withstand and finally to throw back the force of German aggression.

Surely we have a vital interest to do all that is in our power to make sure that such aggressions should never occur again. This concern is shared by the German people themselves, who have suffered cruelly from militarism and tyranny from some of their own people.

The sacrifices which have been made during these two world wars have now placed in our hands a large measure of power to shape the future, for better or for worse, and to determine whether the coming years will preface a durable peace or another disaster.

Nine years have now elapsed since the German Armistice was signed, and yet the problem of German reunification is still unmade. In many ways, that delay is a reproach to us. But there is another side to the matter. The immediate aftermath of a bitter and exhausting war usually finds that reason is submerged by the sentiments of hatred and revenge. The instinctive reaction at first is to turn to repression as a means to future safety. As time lapses, the lapse of time restores reason to its proper place and now, nine years having passed, we should be able to invoke wisdom and statesmanship to be our guides.

The problem that we face here has two major aspects. The first is the task of uniting Germany; and secondly, there is the task of insuring European security. The German people have a right to be united, and the world has a right to be secure.

I am firmly convinced that a free and united Germany is essential to stable peace in Europe and that it is in the interest of all four nations which are represented here around this table.

How did it come to pass that there is this disunity, this disunity of Germany which is, as I say, a danger to peace? We here are not free from responsibility in that respect, because it is the disagreement of our four nations which has created the present division of Germany. It is the disagreement of our four nations which perpetuates the present division of Germany, and it is only we who can end this division of Germany.

As I pointed out in some earlier remarks that I made, that fact—the fact that we four have a unique responsibility in Germany—should make this German problem a central theme of our work here. It can be the test as to whether or not we are really qualified to work together for peace.

There exists this partition of Germany which is a threat to the peace. It is in our power to end it. All that is needed to end it is that we should have the will to end it. If we do not have that will, then I say we may be peace-loving nations, but we are not peace-seeking nations.

Mr. Eden yesterday submitted a precise and a detailed plan¹ to achieve the unification and freedom of Germany by an orderly series of actions that would start with free elections. It seems to us that this British proposal is clear, is reasonable, and is well designed to achieve at the earliest practical moment a full German settlement, including a German peace treaty.

I have no doubt that our discussions here around the table, as we deliberate this intricate matter, may suggest the desirability of some modifications in detail of the plan which Mr. Eden has submitted and perhaps some clarifications. Certainly, I think we must all have an open mind on that, and I certainly have an open mind. But I do say that in general I endorse the proposal that has been submitted on behalf of the United Kingdom and associate myself with it.

There are one or two observations which I would make, particularly suggested by some remarks that have been made by Mr. Molotov. Mr. Molotov has, for example, suggested that the proposal of the United Kingdom would be in essence an attempt on the part of the four Occupying Powers to impose unification upon Germany rather than to let the Germans work out their own affairs.² As I read Mr. Eden's project, it would be just the contrary.

Under his proposal, the essential steps in the entire unification process, including their timing, are left up to the freely elected representatives of the German people. Who is it under this plan who will it shall assume? Again, the national assembly and the government.

As I read the plan, the entire emphasis seems to be freely elected German authorities to make the crucial decision along the road to a final German settlement.

That observation brings me to comment on another which Mr. Molotov has commented, namely, this problem of elections.

Any proper plan for German unification must provide safeguards of election freedom. This, it seems, is covered by the proposal that we are considering. Conditions of genuine election must exist not only on election day itself, but for a reasonable period of time before the votes are cast, and also after the election to insure that there shall be no reprisals and that everyone can vote his convictions.

To take care of this latter point, the United Kingdom will maintain the supervisory machinery in operation until the German government assumes full control and is able to assure democracy throughout Germany in accordance with its constitution.

We can be sure that the 50 million inhabitants of Western Germany are willing and anxious to cooperate to insure such freedom. The same can be said for my Government and also, I believe, for the French and British Governments. The 18 million inhabitants of the Soviet Zone deserve the same kind of assurances, and I trust my Soviet colleague will agree to the importance of providing such assurances.

Mr. Molotov has made some observations about the proposal which seem to me to imply a lack of full understanding of the proposal, or possibly, I might suggest, the need of further clarification of the proposal. I will not attempt to go into those matters now because I am confident that Mr. Eden, who submitted the plan, will himself deal with these matters. But as I read the plan, I am subject to the type of objections which Mr. Molotov has indicated. I hope that, on the basis of further clarifications, he would find the plan itself, at least in its broad outlines, is reasonable and that we could proceed to adopt as providing a way of bringing about an end to this dangerous condition of the continued partition of Germany.

The basic impression which strikes me is this: Mr. Molotov is afraid of genuinely free elections in the East Zone. He is afraid that the 18 million Germans in the East Zone, if given a chance to speak, would overwhelmingly reject the present imposed regime. Mr. Molotov has good reason to be afraid.

Consequently, the Soviet Foreign Minister has categorically rejected the proposals for genuinely free elections which have been put forward by the Western Powers. In its place he proposes his own blueprint. In the name of peace, he proposes a method for extending the solid Soviet bloc to the Rhine. In the name of what he calls democracy, he has set forth the classic Communist pattern for extinguishing democracy as that word has been understood for 2,000 years.

The cornerstone of the Soviet proposal is the so-called government of the German Democratic Republic. That government was put in office by Soviet power. It was confirmed in office by Soviet power. If it had not been for elements of 22 Soviet divisions, including tanks and armored cars, it would have been forcibly ejected from power by the workers who in their desperation rose up against it in East June.

It is that regime which under the Soviet plan would negotiate on a basis of equality with the government of the German Federal Republic. However, the scales are to be still further weighted in favor of the Soviet puppet regime, because it is provided by the Soviet plan these initial negotiations shall also involve "wide participation of democratic organizations."

In the Soviet dictionary the words "democratic organizations" have a clear, precise meaning. They mean those front organizations—captive trade unions, youth organizations, women's organizations—which promote the Communist purposes without openly presenting themselves to the people in their true guise.

It is under these auspices that there would be prepared the "all-German electoral law," and the establishment of election conditions.

We can visualize in advance the type of elections upon which the East German regime would insist, because we already know those conditions from its past. I have already told of the election conditions which were established in East Germany where the voters were compelled by armed force and penalties to go to the polls and, when there were compelled to put in the ballot box a list of names which had been previously prepared for them and which was made public only on election day.

Indeed, the Soviet plan expressly stipulates in Communist language

Europe in the wake of the Red armies, it does not require much wit to see what that means. It means that anyone who dares to express the slightest doubt concerning communism is automatically deemed Fascist or a militarist or a monopolist.

If this system were to be applied to Western Germany, no organization opposing the Communists or the policies of the Soviet Communists, which are the same thing, would be permitted to take part in the elections.

It would only be the Communist Party and the Communist front organizations which under Mr. Molotov's plan would participate in the elections.

I have no doubt that the Soviet Foreign Minister would protest that his plan does not really involve the sovietization of Western Germany.

I recall that, in the October 1939 speech ¹ to which I have already referred, the Soviet Foreign Minister explained that the mutual assistance pacts which he had recently negotiated with Estonia, Latvia,³ and Lithuania ⁴ "no way implies any interference on the part of the Soviet Union. . . . as some foreign newspapers are trying to make out. . . . We declare that all the nonsensical talk about the sovietization of the Baltic countries is only to the interest of our common enemies and of all anti-Soviet provocateurs."

The memory of what happened within a few months to Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania, and of having seen that same pattern extended to the countries of Eastern Europe by the use of the methods which the Soviet proposal prescribes for Germany, will, I hope, explain some skepticism at the Soviet proposals for restoring freedom to Germany.

Mr. Molotov is too intelligent to believe that the people or government of West Germany would accept his proposals or that the three Western Powers would suggest that they do so. The Western German Bundestag, representing 70 percent of the entire German people, has unanimously refused to accept the East German regime as having any legitimate status or right to speak for the people of East Germany.

One can only conclude that the Soviet Foreign Minister does not submit his proposal with any expectation that it might be acceptable. His purpose is quite different. He is actually attempting to hold on to the Soviet position in East Germany by preventing free elections.

We can well understand the dread with which Soviet leaders view any prospect of really free elections in East Germany, elections of the kind set out in the proposals which have been presented and supported by the three Western Powers. Those proposals call for "freedom of movement throughout Germany"; "freedom of presentation and television and free circulation of newspapers, periodicals, etc.' "secrecy of the vote"; "security of polling stations and ballot boxes."

Thus, could anyone doubt the effect of elections of that kind on the future of the East German regime? Clearly the Soviet proposal is a maneuver designed to protect this puppet regime in Eastern Germany from being subjected to the test of what the 18 million people who live there would say if they were ever given the right to say it.

The four of us came together 2 weeks ago for the first time in 4 years.¹ We met before the whole world, a world to whom a certain promise was implicit in our meeting. That promise was that world tensions should somehow be eased by the good will and common sense of the participants. The three of us accepted the Soviet proposal that we should meet in Berlin, a city which symbolizes the division of Germany. We hoped that solutions could be found here for the problem of German unity.

So far at this Conference, Mr. Molotov has adopted a different approach. First, he devoted his efforts to delaying, for as long as possible, our discussion of German unity.

Now, his proposal shows that he has no intention of seriously seeking German unity with freedom.

I would say to Mr. Molotov that it is late, but not too late to redeem the promise of Berlin.

100. STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE, FEBRUARY 10, 1954 (Excerpts)²

Since Mr. Molotov has been kind enough to say that the United States can be an "observer," I thought it would be in order to make some observations on his plan.

The proposals submitted are in two parts, one of which deals primarily with Germany³ and the other of which represents the draft of a proposed European treaty on collective security.⁴

The paper with reference to Germany contains the statement: "that we shall continue our efforts to seek a settlement of the German problem," and that, of course, the United States is disposed to do.

Then the paper in its paragraph 2 goes on to repeat the proposal which has heretofore been made a number of times by the Soviet Union with reference to the withdrawal of so-called occupation forces from East and West Germany.

[Discussion concerning translation.]

It makes it relevant, therefore, only for me to repeat what I said before by me and others around this table: that we would leave West Germany and consequently much of Western Europe exposed to any threat of external aggression.

The second paper is the text of a proposed general European collective security treaty in Europe. Since the United States is presumably not a part of that treaty, my observations are primarily to the actual text of the treaty, although there are implications in it which do affect the United States. I am implicit in the draft, although not entirely clear, that it is to replace the North Atlantic Treaty. I assume that the provisions of article 7 and perhaps 10 and the fact that the Soviet Foreign Minister, in introducing his text, made a serious comparison of the North Atlantic Pact as resembling in many ways the Comintern Pact¹ which led to the unleashing of the Second World War.² He went on to say that "there are no reasons to doubt that the fate of the North Atlantic Pact shall be any better than the fate of the Anti-Comintern Pact."²

So I presume, although the Soviet Foreign Minister cannot say so if I am wrong, that his proposed treaty for European collective security would be in reality a replacement of the North Atlantic Treaty.

The United States certainly cannot take offense at the suggestion of the Soviet Foreign Minister that the European countries get together for their own collective security without the participation of the United States. The United States, I think, has not intruded itself as an unwanted participant in European collective security. We do not have any intentions of doing so in the future.

The American people have a very deep and legitimate interest in Europe. Most of us derive from Western Europe. We share the culture and traditions and religion of Western Europe, and we have many bonds which tie us very closely together. But we do not think that on that account we have any right to demand participation in European affairs.

The United States sent its armed forces to Europe in the First World War when the West was threatened by German militarism under the Kaiser. We delayed somewhat in doing so. But at the urging and desire of the threatened peoples of Western Europe, and for our own interests became involved, we did participate and we contributed to the final defeat of the German militarists under the Kaiser.

When that war was over, we took our troops home and then the same story was repeated under Hitler in the Second World War, and again, after some delay and when the danger

After the Second World War we withdrew all our forces from Europe, except a relatively small number who were required for occupation purposes in Germany.

Now, for the third time in this century we have sent forces back to Europe and again the reason was that there were many in Europe who were afraid and who asked us to do so.

That fear is, I imagine, a fear which cannot be allayed by new threats and new promises, because the fear was inspired by a country which was already bound by the United Nations Charter not to use force against the territorial integrity or independence of any state. I believe that that fear will be allayed by any repetition of that pledge, but it is for me to decide.

It has been suggested that our participation in the present defense of Western Europe to which I now refer caused the division of Europe. This is one of these strange reversals of history—the upside-down world—to which unfortunately we have had to accommodate ourselves. Everyone knows that the division of Europe was created before the action to which I refer and that our action was taken only because of the division of Europe.

Nevertheless, I cannot, I think, be forgotten that, when the United States proposed the Marshall plan,¹ which involved the contributions of many billions of dollars to the rehabilitation of Europe, that plan was immediately made available to all of the European states. It was at that time that the Soviet satellites, under the direction of the Soviet Union, were not permitted to share in that plan. Perhaps if that plan had been carried out in its original scope, it would have prevented the division of Europe—or at least mitigated the division of Europe—which unfortunately was intensified by the Soviet action.

The division of Europe, I am afraid, comes from causes which considerably antedate the organization of the North Atlantic Treaty² and the proposed European Defense Community.³ It goes back to the time when the Soviet control, initially confined to the Soviet Union, was extended to a vast area which now includes one-third of the human race.

I recall the pacts of mutual assistance which the Soviet Union made in 1939 with Estonia,⁴ Latvia,⁵ and Lithuania⁶ which the Soviet Foreign Minister at the time described in language which is almost exactly the same as the second preamble of the proposed new European treaty. In the pacts with Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania, Mr. Molotov said on October 31, 1939, "strictly stipulate the inviolability of the sovereignty of signatory states and the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of others."⁷ the independence and sovereignty of States and noninterference in their internal affairs."

What quickly happened to Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania on and on and has, I suggest, created the division to which the Foreign Minister refers.

It is a division between those who have been absorbed and others who do not want to be absorbed.

Whether or not the Soviet proposal of today will oblige this division in Europe is, as I say, something which is presently being considered by other states than the United States.

So far as the United States is concerned, we are determined that we will not be absorbed.

101. STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE FEBRUARY 13, 1954¹

Yesterday afternoon the Soviet Foreign Minister presented a rather peculiar sandwich.² The top and the bottom of the sandwich stressed the necessity for the early conclusion of an Austrian State Treaty, which would reestablish a free and independent Austria. In between the top and bottom he inserted some poisoned meat. They meant that the treaty, instead of reestablishing a free and independent Austria, should establish an Austria without independence.

I earnestly hope that these new proposals will be withdrawn. We may in fact conclude an Austrian State Treaty at this time as promised in 1943.³

The Soviet Foreign Minister's statement completely contradicted the view I expressed yesterday⁴ that, if we adhere to the principle of the Austrian State Treaty, there remain only minor differences between us. As the Soviet proposals state, that draft treaty was the main agreement among the Four Powers in 1949." Only a few articles remain partially unagreed, and I am confident that with those articles could quickly be agreed upon. It will not take the Soviet Union suggests, 3 months to reach that agreement. It can be reached in 3 days or even less, so that we can in fact conclude the treaty at this Conference in accordance with the proposal made yesterday by the three Western Powers.⁵

However, the Soviet Union has now introduced new proposals which would totally alter the situation. They would cut out a part of the proposed treaty and turn the clock back, not to 1947, not even to 1943, but to the darker earlier period.

Hitler's action Austria seemed hopelessly doomed to be forever the victim of alien occupation.

The Soviet Union proposes to continue military occupation of Austria "pending the conclusion of a peace treaty with Germany."

Since the Soviet Union has rejected all proposals for the unification of Germany on the basis of free elections, and by its own latest German proposal treats the division of Germany as a semipermanent condition,¹ the Soviet Austrian proposal would mean an indefinite occupation of Austria. By requiring the withdrawal of all allied troops from Vienna, while retaining Soviet forces in the Soviet Zone the capital of Austria would thus be left as a defenseless island, surrounded by a sea of Russian soldiers.

That occupation of Austria could never be terminated by any action of her own. It would be wholly within the power of the Soviet Union to prolong the occupation forever merely by perpetuating the division of Germany and blocking an all-German peace treaty.

If the Soviet proposal were adopted, it would pervert the Austrian State Treaty and require its being rewritten from the preamble to the end.

How could we any longer in the preamble describe the treaty as being one designed to liberate Austria and to make it a free and independent state?

How could we any longer stipulate by article 1 that Austria shall be "reestablished as a sovereign, independent and democratic State"?

How could we any longer declare as in article 2 that we "will respect the independence and territorial integrity of Austria"?

Article 33 entitled "Withdrawal of Allied Forces" would be obliterated and have to be replaced by an article entitled "The Indefinite Military Occupation of Austria."

The treaty would thus become not a treaty for the liberation of Austria but a treaty for the subjection of Austria.

A second major and related change in the treaty is proposed by the Soviet Union in terms of subjecting Austria to "neutralization."

A neutral status is an honorable status if it is voluntarily chosen by a nation. Switzerland has chosen to be neutral, and as a neutral she has achieved an honorable place in the family of nations. Under the Austrian State Treaty as heretofore drafted, Austria would be free to choose for itself to be a neutral state like Switzerland. Certainly the United States would fully respect its choice in this respect as it fully respects the comparable choice of the Swiss Nation.

However, it is one thing for a nation to choose to be neutral. It is another thing to have neutrality forcibly imposed on it by other nations as a neutral condition.

tion, should now propose provisions which would basicall entire character of the treaty and which would violate the Declaration on Austria of November 1, 1943, whereby the Four Powers with the subsequent adhesion of France undertook to reestablished a free and independent Austria." If the Soviet proposal were accepted, there would be not a free Austria, but a subject Austria; not an independent Austria, but a subject Austria.

If this Four Power meeting accepted the Soviet proposal, we would expose ourselves before the world as being morally and financially bankrupt. We would have forfeited all right to the cooperation of others in our willingness to fulfill our solemn pledges.

We do not know, we can only suspect, the reasons which have led the Soviet to make its present proposal. The reasons given are grotesquely inadequate.

It is given as a reason that there is lacking a treaty whereby Germany undertakes to respect the independence of Austria. It is said that, until that undertaking is given, Austria must remain occupied.

The Soviet Foreign Minister would have us believe that during the period when Germany is occupied and totally disarmed—the Western Zones, the danger to Austria from Germany is so great that Austria must be occupied to protect it against this danger; but that, once Germany is restored to a unified and independent status with a national army of its own, then it will be possible to end the occupation of Austria. Such reasoning will not hold water in any vicviction anywhere.

A plausible explanation is the fact that article 22 of the Treaty of Peace with Hungary¹ and article 21 of the Treaty of Peace with Rumania² provide that the Soviet Union may maintain its armed forces on the territory of these countries so long as this is necessary for the maintenance of the lines of communication of the Soviet Union with the Soviet Zone of occupation in Austria.

I can understand that the Soviet Union fears a withdrawal of its forces from Austria which would also require it to withdraw its Red Army from Hungary and Rumania.

Is it, however, really decent that little Austria should continue to be an occupied state so that the Soviet Union can use as a pretext for continuing to occupy also Hungary and Rumania? Such a cynical attitude will surely shock the conscience of the world.

We have heard from the Soviet Foreign Minister many times of the danger of "militarism." But everything which he proposes is in relation to Germany or in relation to Austria, or in relation to Hungary and Rumania, where dependence proposal is unacceptable to the United States. In any event, it has no proper relationship to the Austrian question. I hope that its introduction does not mean that it is the intention of the Soviet Foreign Minister to make a conclusion of a State Treaty with Austria dependent upon the prior solution of all other European questions so that the first victim of Hitlerite aggression would automatically be the last to be relieved of the consequences of that aggression.

I earnestly plead with the Soviet Foreign Minister to withdraw the two Austrian proposals which he made yesterday, which, as I say, would completely revolutionize not only the text but also the character of the Austrian State Treaty. If he will make that withdrawal then I have every confidence that the remaining differences, which are very slight, can be composed. Then we could in fact conclude the Austrian State Treaty at this meeting of the Foreign Minister and crown our efforts here with an honorable success.

102. STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE, FEBRUARY 15, 1954 (Excerpt)¹

I would like first of all to answer the last questions which the Soviet Foreign Minister put. He said, "Do we want collective security in Europe?"² The answer to that is, "We want collective security everywhere in the world."

We have tried to get that security during the war and postwar years in many different ways.

We tried to get it by the Atlantic Charter,³ to which all of our governments subscribed. I am afraid none of us can feel that the provisions of the Atlantic Charter have been lived up to, provisions which assure the right of all peoples to choose the form of government under which they will live and to see sovereign rights and self-government restored to those who have been deprived of them.

We tried to get it by the Declaration of Yalta,⁴ which provided among other things, a Declaration on Liberated Europe which provided for the establishment of free governments by free election throughout Europe.

And then we tried to get it by the U. N. Charter, which requires all of us—and most of the nations of the world—not to use force against the political independence or territorial integrity of other states.

Why have we not gotten European security and world security out of these documents we have signed? Nothing is wrong in the wording

There has followed a great sense of insecurity in the world because of lack of trust and confidence in men's and nations' will to live up to their pledged word.

That is why there has grown up in the world, in addition to the proposed universal system of the United Nations, other regional collective security arrangements exercising what the charter calls "the collective right of self-defense."

These special security arrangements do not have any words that add anything not already in the United Nations Charter. The addition which they provide is that they are agreements between nations which, over long periods of time, have come to trust and have confidence in each other. They provide the element of confidence which unfortunately has not been present on a universal basis.

The Soviet Foreign Minister has asked ¹ why, if the 21 American nations had made a Rio pact,² is it not equally logical that the mysterious "32" nations of Europe should not make a pact.

The Rio Pact, the pact of the Americas, is not just a regional pact. It is a pact which, as the treaty itself provides, contains this declaration:

"Peace is founded on justice and moral order and . . . the protection of human rights and freedoms."

These are not mere words in the case of the pact of the Americas. That is an expression of reality which has been demonstrated by close association for 150 years. And the ingredient which makes the Rio Pact a dependable reality is the fact of confidence which is based upon 150 years of peaceful association.

And so it is that groups of countries have sought to augment the words of the United Nations Charter with the essential element of confidence based upon long historic association.

That is true of the British Commonwealth of Nations. It is true of the nations which are bound together by the North Atlantic Treaty.

The North Atlantic Treaty is based upon the expressed determination of their peoples to safeguard the freedom, common heritage, and civilization of their peoples, founded on the principles of democracy, individual liberty, and the rule of law.

And those words, again, are not just ink on paper. Those words are the expression of a reality which has been demonstrated over many generations and which are bound not by ink, but by blood which has been shed in protecting that common heritage.

It is suggested that this North Atlantic Treaty is a cause of division. It is clearly evident that history has revealed that the coming into closer association of the Western nations is not a cause of disunity. It is caused by the fear and apprehension which, to an increasing that that was preceded by the Communists' armed efforts to overthrow the lawful government of Greece¹ and by the forceable coup d'état whereby the Czech Government was overthrown and a Communist government installed in its place.²

Then I recall that there was the blockade of Berlin,³ which brought war very close to Europe.

And it was during that period that the idea of strengthening the Brussels Pact by bringing in the United States, Canada, and other countries first was conceived, and that treaty, the North Atlantic Treaty, was then realized in 1949.

Even then, however, it was not thought to be necessary to implement that treaty with any large military organization.

I recall that I was in the U. S. Senate at the time of the ratification of that treaty, and we did not think it would be necessary actually to implement any large military organization under the Atlantic Treaty.

But then came the armed aggression in Korea, in June 1950, followed by the Chinese Communist aggression of November 1950.⁴

And these events created fear to such a degree that it seemed necessary to build a sufficient strength in Europe to create a respectable balance of power.

General Eisenhower came over at the end of December 1950 to be the Supreme Commander of the Allied Powers, and under his inspiration there was developed military strength in Europe.

Now that there is at least a reasonable defensible posture in sight that expense is being leveled off.

I think it would be very difficult for any impartial observer to say that the North Atlantic Treaty or the organizations under it have created the division of Europe. It has been responsive to a division of Europe which already existed and the danger of which was accentuated by such events as I have outlined.

The Soviet Foreign Minister has asked us to study and analyze the precise words and drafting of his project. I must say in all frankness that I am not interested in the words.

I could heap this table high with past words that are just as fine as the human hand and mind can pen. I have referred to some of them this afternoon.

What I ask is, will these words bring with them confidence? The words already exist; they exist in the United Nations Charter.

They have existed in many other documents.

The essence is not the words but whether in fact the proposal will bring a confidence which will end the disunity of Europe.

to be our wish, because the lack of that has cost us very very heavily in the past.

I have, however, grown skeptical of the possibility of so problems merely by repeating old words or inventing new. I do not believe, myself, that the division of Europe, which desperately needs to be cured, can be cured by a formula of words. I believe there are some things which need to be done first.

One of the things that needs to be done is to end the division of Germany.

Here is a problem which is our own particular problem here on this table; it is symbolized by the city in which we are yet we seem unable to even make that start in ending the division of Europe.

103. STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE FEBRUARY 16, 1954¹

For about 2,000 years now there has been a figure in Greek mythology which symbolizes tragic futility. That was Sisyphus, who, according to the Greek story, was given the task of rolling a great stone to the top of a hill. Each time when, after great struggle and effort, the stone was just at the brow of the hill, some evil force manifested itself and pushed the stone down. So poor Sisyphus had to start his task over again.

I suspect that for the next 2,000 years the story of Sisyphus will not be forgotten, when generation after generation is told the story of the tragic story, of the Austrian State Treaty. Austria was granted its independence 11 years ago. When our forces moved into Austria 9 years ago they announced that they were there only to help Austria. Now, year after year has gone by, when we have repeated the story almost at the point of concluding an Austrian State Treaty, always some evil force manifests itself and pushes the tragedy back again. So we have to start again from the bottom of the tragedy. It is again the tragedy being repeated here today.

I recall that when we were in Moscow in 1947,² 7 years ago, the Austrian State Treaty was almost concluded as the result of which the Deputies had been carrying on in London some time previously, and we thought then that an Austrian State Treaty was in sight.

in 1949¹ it was so near to completion that it seemed that the Deputies could conclude it within a few days.

Then began again the series of efforts, and first one excuse after another one was brought forward—Yugoslavia, Trieste, the Soviet claim for payment for the dried peas, and finally, when no more excuses could be thought of, the Soviet Union suddenly realized that it was wrong to work on the treaty at all through deputies and that it all had been a great mistake that the task had been referred to deputies for some 4 years, and, therefore, the whole task had to be withdrawn from the deputies and had to be negotiated through diplomatic channels.

Now, when we came here with real hope that the Austrian State Treaty could at last be concluded, we were completely taken by surprise to find major new proposals put forward by the Soviet Union.

The most serious of those proposals, because it cuts the heart out of the treaty, is that providing for an indefinite perpetuation of armed forces of alien nations on the territory of the Austrian State.

It is suggested that the reason is, or one of the reasons is, the fact that a European Defense Community is proposed.

As I recall, the EDC treaty was signed in May 1952.² I do not believe that even the Soviet Foreign Minister would claim that the treaty signed in May 1952 explains the failure for the 3 preceding years to conclude an Austrian State Treaty.

And if the European Defense Community Treaty of May 1952 was an obstacle to the removal of Soviet troops from Austria, it is indeed surprising and hardly explained why that was kept such a close secret for 2 years, to be sprung on us here just a day or two ago.

It was indeed a rather cruel performance, if in fact that event of 2 years ago completely undermined the proposed Austrian State Treaty, that no inkling of that should be given during this 2-year period. Indeed, that is so incredible that, in the light of all that has transpired during the past 9 years, we must conclude that all we are faced by is another pretext, another excuse, for not carrying out the solemn pledge which assured that Austria would, as quickly as possible, be given its independence as a sovereign state.

It is not at all clear to me as to what the relationship is of Soviet troops in Austria to the alleged reasons.

It is said that there is evidence of the development toward an Anschluss. And presumably the Soviet troops are to be there to prevent that.

The evidence of movement toward an Anschluss is reported by the Soviet Foreign Minister as being found in certain Austrian periodicals. Well, I wonder, is it to be the function of the Allied troops in

But on the basis of the reasons given, it would seem have a great role indeed in controlling the thinking, the news—perhaps the social order—of the Austrians sovereign state.

What are these troops to do? The Soviet Foreign Minister says they are not occupation troops. They certainly, as I understand, occupy part of Austria. They are there to stop Anschluss, it is said, is rearing its ugly head because it is referred to as a danger which, presumably, then these troops would suppress.

And there is some evidence, it is said, that in some quarters they are thinking of economic ties with Germany. Are they to have the responsibility of controlling the economic, the life, of Austria? What are they to do there to stop the Anschluss? All of that is very obscure to me.

Another reason given—and to me that is the most curious—is that the United States, it is said, has a hundred bases in Europe.

Well, let me say first that none of those bases are under American control; there is no Epc.

And furthermore, it strikes me as extremely curious because the United States has a hundred bases in Europe; it must be compelled to have one more in Austria.

I think that the Soviet Foreign Minister will understand that what is actually under way here is another illustration of the unwillingness of the Soviet Union actually to restore freedom and independence in any area where it has once gone through the use of its army or otherwise.

The interpretation is forced upon us by the otherwise unworkable amendments proposed and the lack of any valid justification. That is really the tragic aspect of this affair. It throws light upon other problems as well.

The Soviet Foreign Minister referred to the question of the neutralization of Austria and indicated that I had agreed, though not strongly opposed to, the Soviet position in that respect. That the Soviet Foreign Minister must have misunderstood what I said, perhaps I did not make my position sufficiently clear.

What I have said, as shown by my notes, is this:

objected to. Article 1 says that "the Allied and Associated Powers recognize that Austria is reestablished as a sovereign, independent and democratic State." The essence of sovereignty is to be able to exclude from your country the armed forces of other nations, if you do not want them; and also the essence of sovereignty is to be able to make dependable alliances with other nations, if you so wish. We believe that Austria should have both of these rights, and it is precisely both of these rights which would be denied by the amendments proposed by the Soviet Union. They would, in effect, nullify the provisions of article 1 which I have read, and would equally nullify the provisions of article 2, which says that the "Allied and Associated Powers . . . will respect the independence and the territorial integrity of Austria."

As I have said here, the United States does not itself maintain armed forces upon the territory of any other sovereign state except at its expressed request and desire, and only as it so desires. We believe that that sound system should be applied to Austria.

We are not disposed to go along with a treaty which imposes upon Austria a fundamental, basic impairment of the sovereign rights which ostensibly, in the first articles of the treaty, we give to Austria and then, in later articles, we entirely take away.

Thus, the treaty would, in effect, become a fraud, offering sovereignty and territorial integrity by the first and second articles, and taking them away by article 4-bis and article 33.¹

I beg that the Soviet Foreign Minister will permit this treaty to be promptly signed, as he professes he would like to have it signed by allowing the treaty to be a genuine treaty for the sovereignty and independence of Austria.

104. STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE, FEBRUARY 17, 1954 ²

I will comment on the observations made by the Soviet Foreign Minister.³

He supports his proposal for troop withdrawal in East and West Germany on the basis that this would give satisfaction to the German people.

I am sure he can speak with authority as far as the Eastern Zone is concerned; I doubt whether he can speak with the same authority as far as the Western Zone is concerned.

I can say that there has been no intimation of any kind received siderable concern if these troops were withdrawn, given which exists in the East.

Therefore, I am afraid that, while the proposal might faction in the Eastern Zone, it would not give satisfaction in the Western Zone.

If the Soviet Union is eager to give people satisfaction with withdrawals, I would suggest that a good place to begin is Austria, where there is no question but what all the people desire all the troops to be withdrawn. There we are given a chance to give satisfaction. The Soviet delegation might give consideration to that matter and perhaps indicate the effect of the Austrian State Treaty when we take that up in the afternoon.

There is, however, a reason more fundamental than any indicated so far why the United States does not feel itself able to accept the Soviet proposal which is entitled, "On insuring European security."¹ That is the paper which calls for the final withdrawal of all foreign forces.

What the Soviet Union asks the Western Powers to do in the name of European security, is what we did under very different circumstances in Korea immediately preceding 1950. Our policy in that case did not produce security; it produced war.

Korea, like Germany, was divided. Korea, like Germany, was divided under conditions so that roughly two-thirds of the country was occupied by Western forces and the other third occupied by Western forces.

The analogy is closer because the indigenous forces in Korea, like the forces in Eastern Germany, were highly organized and equipped, whereas those in Southern Korea and in Western Germany were police forces.

Mr. Molotov has questioned Mr. Eden's [Mr. Bidault's] statement with reference to the East German military personnel.² The United States has very reliable information to reveal that the East German military personnel now total 140,200 men under arms. Of these, over 100,000 are in the ground forces with an additional 20,000 in security formations. There are seven organized divisions, of which three are mechanized. Air forces constitute 60 jet fighters, and trained by 5,000 effectives. These forces are composed of former ex-officers of the Nazi Wehrmacht and of the SS. They are comparable to 100,000 East German police.

I can assure the Soviet Foreign Minister that there is no comparable situation in West Germany.

There are ample means of access to information on situation in Germany is thus comparable to the situation which obtained in Korea prior to 1947. Up to that time the United States had its own armed forces in South Korea; and there was peace. The United States took its troops out of South Korea in 1949, and in 1950 there was war.

It is not necessary at this point to indulge in argument as to just who bears the responsibility for that war lay. No one can dispute the facts: First, that the United States troops were taken out; and, immediately following that, there was war.

Therefore, I am sure that Mr. Molotov will understand, even if he does not agree with, our state of mind, when we say that we are skeptical of a proposal put forward in the name of peace which requires our following the same course of action which, under remarkably similar circumstances, in fact led to war.

It is to fly in the face of the teachings of history, and indeed of elementary reasoning, to seek peace by continuing the disunity of a people who are bound together by sentiments of patriotism and by ethnic ties.

The way to get peace and promote peace in Europe is not simply to resort to a variety of various devices whereby we can mitigate the dangers of a divided Germany. We should seek a united Germany.

That is why I regret that in this topic of item 2 the Soviet Union has gotten lost in its great grandiose scheme, piling words upon words, and has left the central problem, which is the peaceful unification of Germany.

It is not an accident that the three Western Ministers, under this item 2, have concentrated their attention on the problem of Germany and the creation of a united Germany through free elections. It is because we believe that this goes to the heart of the problem of peace for Europe.

We are also convinced that a united Germany should be allowed to develop along peaceful lines of its own choosing. A Germany which is coerced, which is told what it cannot do, is a Germany which will surely follow the same course that was followed by the Germany which succeeded the Treaty of Versailles. There the reasons which were imposed were the very thing that enabled the German nationalists to come to power.

Therefore, our second point is that Germany must be allowed to follow her inclinations so long as these are peaceful and compatible with the security of the rest of us. Since, in fact, Germany wishes to associate herself with the Western countries of Europe, it is essential to peace that she be allowed to do so. If she had wished to associate herself with the powers of Eastern Europe, we would not have wanted to force her otherwise. The main point is that we should not attempt to apply such a coercion to Germans that they will not accept Germany as an independent sovereign state. In that way, Europe, at large, lies in great danger.

It is a fact, which all of us who really want peace should welcome, that certainly the greater part of the German people want to adopt a course which will end, for at least 50 years, and for all time, a distinctively national army, and equally equipped with a general staff. The fact that the Germans want to do this gives us a unique opportunity to go to meet them, and to consolidate the present will. That will may not always be with us. If to reject that will of the German people which goes in the direction of peace, if we try to substitute provisions which will be forcibly imposed upon Germany, if we perpetuate the division of Germany, if we maintain limitation and controls of the nature of the Versailles treaty, say, we would be accepting a heavy responsibility before history.

105. CONCLUSION OF THE BERLIN CONFERENCE announced by the Foreign Ministers of the United States, the United Kingdom, France, and the Soviet Union, February 1954 (Excerpt)¹

The four Ministers have had a full exchange of views on the question, on the problems of European security, and on the question of Germany. They were unable to reach agreement upon these questions.

106. CONCLUSION OF THE BERLIN CONFERENCE announced by the Foreign Ministers of the United States, the United Kingdom, and France, February 19, 1954²

The major problem facing the Berlin conference was the question of Germany. The three Western delegations urged that the reunification of Germany should be achieved through free elections, leading to the creation of an all-German Government with which a general treaty could be concluded. They put forward a practical proposal to this end.³ Their proposals were not accepted by the Soviet delegation, even as a basis for discussion, and they were forced to the conclusion that the Soviet Government is not now ready to permit free German elections, or to abandon its control over Eastern Germany.

The three Western Governments will continue their efforts to achieve German reunification in freedom and by peaceful means. In the meantime, they have suggested certain measures which missioners should study these questions with the Soviet High Commissioner.¹ As regards Berlin, the three Governments reaffirm their abiding interest in the security of the city as expressed in the Tripartite Declaration of May 27, 1952.² They will do all in their power to improve conditions in Berlin and to promote the economic welfare of the city.

The three Western Ministers did their utmost to secure agreement upon the Austrian State Treaty. They accepted the Soviet version of all the remaining disagreed articles.³ The Austrian Foreign Minister, who was present at all the discussions on this question, declared himself ready to sign the treaty in this form.⁴ The Soviet Foreign Minister, however, insisted upon adding new provisions to the treaty. The effect of these would have been to leave foreign troops in Austria for an indefinite period after the entry into force of the treaty, and to impair Austria's right to play her full part in international life.

The treaty could therefore not be concluded in Berlin, despite an Austrian offer accepted by the Western Ministers, that troops of the Four Powers should remain in Austria until the 30th of June 1955. The three Governments are prepared to continue their efforts to conclude the Austrian State Treaty, but progress depends on the Soviet Union modifying its attitude. Meanwhile, they will continue to seek every means of lightening the burden of occupation on Austria.

The three Governments remain ready to take advantage of any further opportunity which may arise to promote, by renewal of the contacts established at Berlin or by other means, a solution of the German and Austrian problems.

The three Ministers explained and reaffirmed the purely defensive character of Western security arrangements.

Offers were made to discuss how the undertakings which already protect the Soviet Union against aggression could be reinforced. The Soviet delegation made no response to these offers. Their own proposals would have involved the dissolution of the Western security system, while the military power of the Soviet bloc in Europe remained intact.⁵ The Three Powers do not intend to be deflected from their efforts to develop the system of defense on which their survival depends.

H. NEGOTIATIONS REGARDING GERMANIA, AND EUROPEAN SECURITY, 1954-

107. NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN EMBASSY AT TO THE SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTRY, MAY 7,

The United States Government has consulted the French Governments and the other interested governments, particularly those of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, those aspects of the problem of European security which were discussed by the four Foreign Ministers at Berlin and to the Soviet Government again drew attention in its note of May 7.

The United States Government has long been striving for a universal reduction of armaments, to include the prohibition of atomic and other weapons of mass destruction and the peaceful use of atomic energy. In the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission, the United Nations Commission on Conventional Armaments, and subsequently in the United Nations Disarmament Commission, the United States Government has worked to secure international agreement on disarmament and to put an end to the competitive arms race which is imposing such a burden upon the people of the world. Such agreement can only be reached by progressive and balanced disarmament with effective safeguards which will remove the dangers of aggression from any quarter. The United States Government is determined to do everything in its power to reach a successful conclusion the conversations started as a result of President Eisenhower's initiative³ as well as the disarmament negotiations which will shortly begin again in the United Nations. It is the hope of the United States Government that the Soviet Government will make a constructive contribution to the solution of these problems.

If these negotiations are to succeed, a sense of security and confidence must first be established. It is in this light that the United States Government has again carefully studied the Soviet proposals on European security first put forward in Berlin⁵ and now contained in the Soviet Government's note. In these proposals the Soviet Government does not attempt to remove the actual causes of European insecurity. Instead it proposes a new collective security treaty which is based on the neutralization and continued division of Germany, leaving unchanged the Soviet Government's close political and military control over the countries of Eastern Europe. This can only prolong insecurity and division in Europe. These even when amended to permit United States participation, do not provide any foundation for genuine security.

The addition to the United Nations of such an organization as that proposed by the Soviet Government, embracing the Soviet Union, the United States and all European countries would contribute nothing to what is already a world-wide security organization. It would not only be useless but also dangerous because it would inevitably tend to destroy the authority of the United Nations. The United States Government cannot therefore accept the Soviet proposal. Collective security would best be safeguarded if the Soviet Government would permit the United Nations to function as the Charter intended.

The Soviet Government has also suggested that its proposed Collective Security Pact should be accompanied by an extension of the Atlantic Pact through the adherence of the Soviet Union to the North Atlantic Treaty.¹ It is unnecessary to emphasize the completely unreal character of such a suggestion. It is contrary to the very principles on which the defense system and the security of the Western Nations depend. These nations have bound themselves by close ties of mutual confidence. The North Atlantic Treaty Organization, which is much more than a purely military arrangement, is founded on the principle of individual liberty and the rule of law. The means of defense of its members have been pooled to provide collectively the security which they cannot attain individually, in the face of the military preponderance which the Soviet Union has attained in Europe since 1945 and of the westward expansion of a political, economic and military system subject to its sole control. The North Atlantic Treaty Organization is wholly defensive. There is free and full exchange of information between all its members. All its decisions are taken by unanimous consent. The Soviet Union as a member of the organization would therefore be in a position to veto every decision. None of the member states is prepared to allow their joint defense system to be disrupted in this way.

European and world security will not be promoted by the disruption of defensive associations of like-minded states and the substitution of new illusory security organizations. The United States Government remains convinced that the only way to remove the sense of insecurity which weighs on the world is through step-by-step solutions of individual problems. It does not believe that a lasting settlement can be achieved by erecting a new façade of security behind which the fundamental difficulties and divisions remain unchanged.

With these thoughts in mind, the Western Powers at Berlin advocated a plan which would have constituted a first step towards the existing agreements.¹ The Soviet Government refused also to consider these proposals. The Western Powers offered to accept the Soviet text of every unagreed article of the Austrian State Treaty. But the Soviet Government, far from agreeing to sign on its own terms, attached new and unacceptable conditions which would have totally changed the treaty from one of freedom and independence to one of indefinite occupation by foreign troops.

The Soviet Government has repeated the criticisms it made at Berlin about plans for a European Defense Community.³ The United States Government has already stated its views on this subject. It is quite untrue to suggest that the present plans which are of limited scope are responsible for the division of Europe or aggravate the risk of war. The division of Europe was brought about by the Soviet Government, and its refusal to contemplate the reunification of Germany on the basis of free elections is one of the elements that serves to perpetuate this division. In these circumstances the Federal Republic of Germany cannot be allowed to remain without any means of defense when the Eastern Zone of Germany, as its leaders openly acknowledge, possesses substantial armed forces. The United States Government considers that the best and safest way for all concerned to solve the problem of a German contribution to defense is within the framework of an association which by its very nature would prevent Germany from taking any individual armed action.

The United States Government remains convinced of the urgent need to improve relations between states and to ensure mutual security. It suggests that progress could best be made toward the elimination of the sources of international tension if the Soviet Government would give concrete evidence of its good intentions by joining with the Governments of France, the United Kingdom and the United States in (1) finding a speedy settlement of the Austrian question that will restore to Austria its full sovereignty and independence; (2) seeking a lasting and acceptable solution of the German problem; (3) reaching early agreement on general, progressive, balanced, and supervised disarmament: such agreement should specifically include the prohibition of atomic and other weapons of mass destruction and the control of atomic energy under adequate safeguards; (4) working for solutions of the most pressing problems in the Far East at the Geneva conference; (5) conforming their behavior in the United Nations to the principles of the Charter and so enabling the United Nations to fulfill its true role as an effective organization for collective security.

NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN EMBASSY AT MOSCOW
TO THE SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTRY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1954¹

United States Government, in consultation with the British and French Governments, with the other NATO Governments and also the Austrian and German Federal Governments, has studied with close attention the Soviet Government's note of July 24² and its communication of August 4.³

In these communications the Soviet Government has repeated its proposals which were fully discussed at the Berlin Conference.⁴ The United States Government attaches great importance to European security but it cannot be usefully discussed unless the fundamental interests of all the parties concerned are safeguarded. Security in Europe cannot be brought about by the signature of a general treaty of the kind proposed by the Soviet Government. It will only result in the solution of concrete problems, of which the most pressing are those of Germany and Austria.

The United States Government notes that the Soviet Government has again alleged that NATO constitutes an "aggressive military grouping". The aims of NATO are purely defensive and are in entire conformity with the Charter of the United Nations. It was set up to enable the western democracies to defend themselves against the threat created by the establishment since 1945 of a heavily armed bloc grouping in Eastern Europe. It now forms a free association of like-minded states, with other than purely military ties. There can be no question either of modifying or abandoning this conception.

The association of the German Federal Republic with other peace-loving states of Western Europe in a defensive system, long after the unification of Eastern Germany, far from constituting a threat to European security, is intended to prevent any nation from having recourse to the threat or use of force. This is the best guarantee for the security of all Germany's neighbors, of Germany itself and of Europe as a whole.

Neither in its note of July 24 nor in its oral communication of August 4 has the Soviet Government made any new proposals for a solution of the German problem. Under the proposed Soviet security system the present division of Germany would be maintained contrary to the profound desire of the German people. The U.S. Government, on the other hand, believes that Germany must be re-united in freedom at the earliest possible moment and that this can only be achieved by holding free elections throughout Germany under international supervision. The U.S. Government remains prepared to negotiate

The simplest step towards the promotion of European remains, however, an early settlement of the Austrian question. In this connection the U.S. Government must once again express the view that conclusion of an Austrian treaty should not, as proposed by the Soviet Government, be dependent upon an all-European agreement, upon a German peace treaty, or upon any other matter extraneous to the Austrian treaty. At Berlin the U.S. Government proposed a contingent upon prompt Soviet acceptance, to accept the text of all the previously unagreed articles in the Austrian treaty.¹ The U.S. Government is prepared to renew that offer. If the Soviet Government will sign the treaty in these terms, an agreement could thus be reached at once to restore to Austria territorial integrity and independence which have been promised to her since 1945.

Agreement on the question of disarmament would undoubtedly help to create the necessary atmosphere in which the problem of European security could usefully be discussed. The U.S. Government seeks the abolition of the use, possession and manufacture of atomic, hydrogen and other weapons of mass destruction. A disarmament system which would include provisions for simultaneous reductions in conventional armaments and armed forces to be agreed, the whole program to be carried out in accordance with an agreed timetable and under effective supervision and control. In the recent discussions in the U.N. subcommittee, the U.S. Government put forward proposals which could have led to an agreement. Although the Soviet Government was not then willing to accept these proposals, the U.S. Government will continue to seek an acceptable and effective agreement and hope that the Soviet Government will contribute to this end.

These are the problems to which practical agreed solutions must be found if there is to be genuine security in Europe. Further international discussion of them would only be useful if there was a prospect of finding solutions than was revealed in the discussions at the Berlin Conference or than is now revealed in the latest Soviet communications. The U.S. Government remains determined to do all in its power to make progress on these problems. It hopes that the Soviet Government will contribute to such progress by: (A) signing the Austrian state treaty with the Soviet Government, the previously unagreed articles, an offer made at the Berlin Conference by the United States, United Kingdom, France and Austria; (B) by the United States Government now renews; (C) agreeing to free Germany on the basis proposed by the United States Government as the essential first step towards German reunification in 1955.

aspects of European security. The United States Government sincerely hopes that the disarmament discussions in the U.N. be brought to a successful conclusion.

109. SUMMARY OF AUSTRIAN TREATY NEGOTIATIONS DECEMBER 20, 1952-NOVEMBER 19, 1954: Report by the United States, the United Kingdom, and France to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, November 19, 1954¹

On 20 December 1952,² the General Assembly of the United Nations, at its 409th plenary meeting, recalling the terms of the Moscow Declaration of 1 November 1943,³ whereby the Governments of the United States of America, the United Kingdom, the Union of the Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom and the United States of America (joined later by France)⁴ recognized that Austria should be re-established as a free and independent State, expressed its concern that negotiations towards the conclusion of an Austrian Treaty which had been under way since 1945 failed to bring about the proposed objective. The Assembly, therefore, addressed an earnest appeal to the Governments concerned to make a renewed and urgent effort to reach agreement on the conclusion of an Austrian Treaty with a view to an early termination of the occupation of Austria and the full exercise by Austria of the powers inherent in its sovereignty. The General Assembly also expressed its hope that the solution of this problem would "constitute an important step towards the elimination of other areas of disagreement and therefore towards the creation of conditions favourable to the accomplishment of world peace."

2. The Governments of the United States, the United Kingdom and France have been working constantly since 1946 to obtain an acceptable Austrian State Treaty. They consider that the time now come to report to the General Assembly on the results of their efforts made since 1952 to implement the Assembly's resolution.

3. In January 1953 the three Governments, in notes addressed to the Soviet Government, welcomed the Assembly's resolution and proposed that a meeting of the Austrian Treaty Deputies be held on an early date, for the purpose of concluding an Austrian Treaty.⁵ In its reply of the Soviet Government, dated 27 January 1953, stated that the "Soviet Government considers it necessary to call attention to the fact that both the raising of the Austrian question in the United Nations as well as the resolution adopted on this question are ill-representatives of the four Powers on the Austrian question that the Governments of the United States, the United Kingdom and France were prepared to withdraw their proposal for a "Simplified Treaty"¹ and to negotiate on the basis of the 1945 Treaty which had been the subject of the earlier abortive discussions. The three Governments felt it inappropriate to impose prior conditions as proposed by the Soviet Government, regarding the new discussions. Nevertheless the three Governments affirmed their readiness to discuss any proposition which would lead to the end of the occupation. The Soviet Government continued its meetings of the Deputies on 6 and 9 February 1953, to insist on the conditions previously stipulated and declined to negotiate in substance. They declined an invitation to a meeting of the Deputies on 27 May 1953 on the pretext that such a meeting (which over 260 had already been held) could be called a Council of Foreign Ministers.² The three Western Deputies accepted this and reiterated that they were prepared to accept any proposition in terms which would ensure Austria's political and economic independence.³ On 11 June 1953, the three Governments invited the USSR to state what kind of an Austrian settlement they were prepared to conclude.⁴ The Soviet Government ignored this invitation and again limited itself to a demand for withdrawal of the "Simplified Treaty". The Soviet Government also, in notes addressed to the three Governments on 4 August,⁵ stated that "a possible solution of the German problem could also facilitate a solution of the Austrian question," thus apparently suggesting that an Austrian Treaty must be deferred until other unrelated conditions had been met, a proposition which the three Governments were bound to oppose. On 17 August they invited the USSR to a meeting of the Treaty Deputies, scheduled for 31 August, and declared their preparedness not to introduce the abbreviated Treaty for consideration on the understanding that no extra conditions would be raised.⁶ The Soviet Government chose not to attend the meeting. In late November 1953 the three Powers made a further attempt to persuade the Soviet Government to join a conference on the Austrian problem, offering to do so in a Foreign Ministers Conference, or in a Deputies meeting, or, if the Soviet Government should prefer, to give prompt and careful consideration to proposals made through diplomatic channels. This invitation remained unanswered.¹

4. It was not until the meeting of the four Foreign Ministers in Berlin, between 25 January and 18 February 1954, that negotiations were resumed on the Austrian Treaty.² The Austrian Foreign Minister participated in these discussions. He declared Austria's readiness to pay, if necessary to achieve freedom, the price imposed by the Treaty, including surrender to the Soviet Union of most of Austria's petroleum resources in addition to other assets. He appealed, however, for alleviation of the burdens of the Treaty, especially of article 35, and particularly asked that Austria should be allowed to pay the Soviet Union $150 million in goods instead of cash.³

5. The Soviet Foreign Minister granted this latter request but at once made fresh stipulations. The main ones were:

- (I) That the withdrawal of occupation troops stationed on the territory of the respective Zones of Austria should be postponed pending the conclusion of a Peace Treaty with Germany. (At the same time, it was proposed that all Allied troops should be withdrawn from Vienna).
- (II) That Austria should undertake not to enter into any coalition or military alliance directed against any Power which participated with its armed forces in the war against Germany and in the liberation of Austria.⁴

6. The Austrian Government and the three Governments objected to the proposals of the Soviet Government, which would make the conclusion of an Austrian Treaty dependent on the unconnected problem of a settlement in Germany and impose the burden of continued foreign occupation on the Austrian people for an indefinite future. They also pointed out that the second proposal contained conditions which had both military and non-military implications and should not be imposed on any sovereign State. They considered that Austria should be free to decide her own international relations in accordance with the United Nations Charter. The Austrian Government gave assurances during the Conference that Austria would not enter into any military alliance but also emphasized that they could not accept, as a condition of reaching agreement upon the State Treaty, that occupation troops should remain in Austria until the signing of a German Peace Treaty.

7. In an effort to obtain agreement, the Governments of the United States of America, the United Kingdom and France expressed their willingness to conclude the Treaty by accepting the versions of the unagreed articles supported by the USSR up to that time.¹

8. The Austrian Government, as a final concession, offered, if it were agreed by the four Governments, to accept an extension of the period for the withdrawal of occupation forces from Austria provided that that extension was for a definite period and that such a concession would enable the Treaty to be concluded. They suggested that the date of withdrawal should be fixed at the latest at 30 June 1955.²

9. The Soviet Government proved unwilling to accept any of these proposals. Accordingly, no Treaty could be concluded during the Berlin Conference. The three Governments, however, made clear their willingness to resume negotiations as soon as the Soviet Government were prepared to agree to the restoration of Austrian sovereignty and independence, which would of necessity include the withdrawal of all foreign troops.

10. Exchanges of correspondence since the Berlin Conference have failed to indicate any change thus far in the Soviet attitude which would permit the withdrawal of all occupation forces and conclusion of a Treaty. In a note of 7 May 1954, to the Soviet Government the Governments of the United States, the United Kingdom and France again urged conclusion of an Austrian Treaty as a means of eliminating sources of international tensions.³ The Soviet Government, in a note of 12 August addressed to the Austrian Government, rejected the latter's proposal for a five-Power committee to consider alleviating Austria's occupation burdens.⁴ The Soviet Government instead suggested convocation of a committee to examine the unresolved questions pertaining to the Austrian Treaty and other related questions but again referred to the Soviet proposals made at the Berlin Conference and failed to indicate a willingness to withdraw its troops from Austria, a fundamental requirement for the restoration of Austria's freedom and independence. On 10 September the three Western Powers sent a further note to the USSR in which they renewed their offer made at Berlin in February to conclude the Treaty by accepting the versions of the unagreed articles supported by the USSR up to that time.⁵ The Austrian Government, in replying on 12 October to the Soviet note of 12 August, said that it was prepared to participate in new treaty discussion but pointed out that the withdrawal of all occupation forces would be requisite to the conclusion of a Treaty.⁶

11. The Soviet Government, in notes addressed to the Western Powers on 23 October,⁷ ignored the offer contained in the Western notes of 10 September to sign the Austrian Treaty but instead referred to the same proposal made in its note of 12 August to the Austrian tion of questions connected with the conclusion of a State Treaty. These new notes also contained no indication of the Government's willingness to withdraw its occupation troops from Austria which, as previously stressed by the Austrian Government and the three Western Powers, is requisite to conclusion of an Austrian State Treaty.

The Governments of the United States, the United Kingdom and France deeply regret that their efforts to conclude a Treaty and to restore to Austria its freedom and independence in compliance with the United Nations General Assembly resolution have been unavailing. These Governments will continue to seek means whereby Austrian independence may be re-established and will continue to press for the earliest possible conclusion of a just and acceptable State Treaty. Further progress depends upon the attitude of the Soviet Government.

TO THE SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTRY, NOVEMBER 29, 1945

The United States Government, in consultation with the French and British Governments, with the other NATO Governments and with the German Federal Government, has considered the note of October 14, 1945, in which the Soviet Government proposed a meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the four powers in November.² They have at the same time, in consultation with the interested governments, considered the Soviet Government's note of November 13 proposing a conference on the question of creating a system of collective security in Europe.³

The United States Government is disappointed to find that, except for the suggestion for the hurried convocation of a European conference on November 29, neither of the Soviet notes contains any new proposals, whether on Germany, Austria or European security, which have not already been considered by the Western powers at the Berlin Conference.

The Soviet note of November 13 is openly and explicitly aimed at blocking or preventing the ratification of the Paris agreements. The United States Government for its part is resolved to bring the Paris agreements⁴ into force as soon as possible and they do not intend to be deflected from this course. The United States Government does not believe that the cause of European security can be served by the creation of defensive associations between states inspired by the to replace such associations by new organizations which would leave fundamental divergencies unresolved and would thus constitute no more than a deceptive facade. The United States is convinced that the Paris agreements provide the basis for the solution of some of the most difficult problems confronting Europe and that far from making the question of European security more difficult to solve they will serve its promotion and contribute to the cause of peace.

The unity which is being built up in the west is far broader in its scope and significance than a purely military alliance. The association of the western nations is based on their common civilization and traditions. The achievement of a close union in all fields is a deeply rooted aspiration of their peoples. It is a development of great importance in the history of Europe and is gaining in strength and purpose. By settling old rivalries and forming new ties it will promote the cause of peace in a region which in the past has given birth to so many wars.

Since the end of the war rearmament in the countries of the Soviet Bloc, including the Soviet zone of Germany, has been centrally imposed, massive and unrestricted, thus compelling the western powers to strengthen their common defense. Under the Paris agreements, however, they have of their own free will accepted a system of controls, limitations and prohibitions to be applied to their forces and armaments. This system is designed to prevent any member nation from having independent recourse to the threat or use of force.

As regards Germany, the United States Government has noted that the Soviet Government states that a settlement of the German problem is of decisive importance for ensuring security in Europe. In previous notes, the United States Government has emphasized that free all-German elections are the essential first step in the process of German reunification in freedom. In its note of October 23 the Soviet Government has given no indication of its view on this point nor of its attitude towards the practical plan for the holding of early elections, which was put forward by the Governments of France, the United States and the United Kingdom at the Berlin Conference. Nor has the Soviet Government advanced specific alternative proposals.¹ The United States Government awaits a precise indication of any concrete proposal which the Soviet Government may now have to make concerning both the timing and nature of the free all-German elections which are the essential first step for the re-establishment of a united Germany.

As regards Austria, the United States Government can see no justification for the continued denial to that country of the freedom and independence promised her by the four powers in the Moscow of the previously unagreed articles.¹ The Austrian Government for its part made it plain that it concurred in this view, and this remains its position. There should therefore be no further obstacle in the way of the signature of the treaty and the termination of the occupation and the withdrawal of all foreign forces as prescribed therein. The United States Government notes with disappointment that the Soviet Government nonetheless propose a meeting at Vienna to "consider the remaining unsettled questions relating to the draft state treaty and other questions connected with the conclusion of this treaty." The United States Government is at a loss as to the nature of the questions referred to by the Soviet Government. If the Soviet Government wishes to furnish the necessary clarifications the United States Government suggests that this could appropriately be done in exchanges between the Ambassadors in Vienna. Meanwhile, the United States Government for its part reaffirms its desire as expressed in the note of September 10² to proceed as soon as possible to the signature of the Austrian State Treaty.

The United States Government has on many occasions given proof of their desire to settle questions in dispute by negotiations conducted in a spirit of mutual respect for the essential interests of all the participants. They remain convinced that this is the best way of promoting the cause of peace. This cause would be ill-served by a conference ending in failure. In order that negotiations may be undertaken with a reasonable prospect of success, they consider that a basis of agreement should have been carefully prepared and established in advance. The essential basis for a useful conference whether on Germany, Austria or the remaining aspects of European security does not, in their view, at present exist.

In order to establish such a basis and to deal with the foregoing questions in due order, the United States Government proposes the following:

- (1) Agreement to sign the Austrian State Treaty;
- (2) Clarification by the Soviet Government of its position on the question of free elections in Germany which are the essential first steps to German reunification;
- (3) Exchanges through diplomatic channels on any other European questions of common interest which might suitably be examined at a later four-power meeting, in particular, questions relating to European security;
- (4) A meeting of the four-power Ministers as soon as it should appear that there is a real prospect of finding solutions and after

111. DECLARATION BY THE GOVERNMENTS OF THE UNITED STATES, THE UNITED KINGDOM, AND FRANCE, 1955¹

For many years the Governments of the United Kingdom, the United States and France have sought to conclude an Austria state treaty. They have made ceaseless efforts thus to bring about the restoration of Austrian freedom and independence at the earliest possible moment.

At the Berlin conference in 1954 the three governments expressed their readiness to sign the draft state treaty with the Soviet Union on the basis of the previously unagreed articles. This would have resulted in the termination of the occupation and the withdrawal of all foreign troops within three months of the entry into force of the treaty. But the Soviet Government declined and insisted on putting forward new and unacceptable conditions which would have infringed on Austrian sovereignty.²

The three governments have followed closely the recent developments between the Austrian Government and the Soviet Government in matters relating to the state treaty. From these exchanges of views it appears that the Soviet Government may now have certain proposals to offer regarding their policy toward Austria, in particular on the question of the independence and sovereignty of Austria. The three governments already provided for in the first five articles of the draft treaty. The three governments trust that the decision of the Austrian Government to accept the Soviet invitation to Moscow will result in further clarifications.

Questions relating to the conclusion of the state treaty are of common concern to the governments of all four responsible powers, as well as to the Austrian Government. The Governments of the United Kingdom, the United States and France accordingly consider that if the Soviet Government should offer proposals which hold clear promise for the restoration of freedom and independence to Austria, these should appropriately be discussed by the four Ambassadors in Vienna, with the participation of the Austrian Government.

It remains the earnest desire of the Governments of the United Kingdom, the United States, United Kingdom and France to conclude the state treaty as soon as possible in conformity with principles which would secure Austria's full freedom and independence.

112. NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN EMBASSY AT MOSCOW TO THE SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTRY, APRIL 22, 1955¹

The Government of the United States, in consultation with the British and French Governments, has considered the Soviet Government's note of April 19² proposing a conference of the Ministers of Foreign Affairs of the U.K., the Soviet Union, the U.S. and France with Austrian representatives participating, in order to discuss the question of concluding a State Treaty for the reestablishment of an independent democratic Austria and in order to sign that Treaty.

The Government of the United States welcomes the Soviet Government's view that the possibility now exists of concluding the Austrian State Treaty. It would be pleased to participate at the earliest possible moment in a meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the four powers together with the representatives of Austria in order to sign the Treaty.

From the information it has received regarding the exchange between the Austrian and Soviet Ministers in Moscow it is clear that some preparatory work still remains to be done. Recalling the tripartite declaration of April 5,³ it suggests that the Ambassadors of the four powers in Vienna should meet at a very early date, with the participation of Austrian representatives, in order to examine the results of the exchanges in Moscow and to reach the necessary agreements for the early signature of the State Treaty by the Foreign Ministers. It would therefore propose that the Ambassadors together with Austrian representatives should meet in Vienna on May 2.

As soon as the necessary preparations have been completed, the earliest practicable date should then be set for the Foreign Ministers to meet and sign the treaty.

113. STATEMENT AT A PRESS CONFERENCE BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE, MAY 24, 1955⁴

At his news conference on May 24, Secretary Dulles was asked about the policy of the United States with respect to neutrality, particularly as it would affect Germany. The Secretary replied:

It is the view of the United States that a policy of neutrality has no application to a country of the character of Germany. It is as well to talk about neutrality for a country such as Austria, a small are destined to play the role of a neutral country. Further, President Eisenhower has pointed out, the kind of neutrality that was discussed in terms of Austria is an armed neutrality, and there is no limit in the Austrian State Treaty¹ upon the size of the Army. I do not think that the German people or the Soviet or the Western European people want to see applied to Germany the concept of it being an independent state with an unlimited

114. NOTE FROM THE UNITED STATES, BRITISH, FRENCH GOVERNMENTS TO THE SOVIET GOVERNMENT MAY 10, 1955²

The Governments of France, the United Kingdom, and the United States believe that the time has now come for a new effort to solve the great problems which confront us. We, therefore, invite the Soviet Government to join with us in an effort to remove the cause of conflict between us.

We recognize that the solution of these problems will take time and patience. They will not be solved at a single meeting nor in a hasty manner. Indeed, any effort to do so could set back real progress toward their settlement. Accordingly, we think it would be wise to try a new procedure for dealing with these problems.

In view of their complexity and importance, our suggestion is that these problems be approached in two stages. We think it would be fruitful to begin with a meeting of the Heads of Government, accompanied by their Foreign Ministers, for an exchange of views on the limited time for which the Heads of Government could meet. They would not undertake to agree upon substantive answers to the most difficult difficulties facing the world. Such a meeting could, however, give a new impetus by establishing the basis for the detailed work that will be required.

For this purpose the Heads of Government could devote a substantial part of their time to formulating the issues to be worked on and to agreeing

This first stage would lay the foundation for the second stage in which the problems would be examined in detail by such methods, organs, and participants as it appears will be most fruitful according to the nature of the issues. This work should be started as soon as practicable after the meeting of the Heads of Government.

This procedure would facilitate the essential preparation and orderly negotiation most likely to bring about agreements by progressive stages. The important thing is to begin the process promptly and to pursue it with patience and determination.

We hope that this proposal will commend itself to the Soviet Union as a useful basis for progress toward better relations between us. If the Soviet Union agrees that an early meeting of Heads of Government to explore such a program would be useful, we suggest that our Foreign Ministers settle through diplomatic channels on a date and place for such a meeting. The forthcoming meeting of the Foreign Ministers at Vienna for the signing of the Austrian State Treaty¹ might provide an opportunity for preliminary discussion of this proposal.

115. STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE, JULY 19, 1955 (Excerpts)²

. . . I would say with reference to the official text [of Premier Bulganin's statement of July 18, 1955³] that it was delivered to the United States Delegation this morning. I had not received it when I started to speak. I have just received a copy of it since, and I am prepared in a very preliminary way to touch on the matters to which Mr. Molotov indicates he would like to have the views of the United States Delegation.

With respect to the policy of neutrality, the views of the United States have been made clear in connection with the proposed declaration of neutrality by the Austrian Government.⁴ There we indicated that we were prepared to respect the free action of that country in adopting for themselves a policy of neutrality. However, we doubt that a policy of so-called neutrality should be encouraged generally because we believe in the principle of the United Nations Charter which is that there is a duty, broadly speaking, upon nations—always the prevention and removal of threats to the peace. We consider that neutrality is a quite unrealistic policy for, for a country of the large population and geographical location. That was expressed very forcibly yesterday by M. Faure. The United States entirely agrees with that. I recall that the United States tried neutrality in 1914 and in 1939 and we found it a dangerous policy, not only for ourselves but for our friends. I recall that when the United Nations was originally formed, we were excluded from the founding countries all nations that pursued a policy of neutrality in the Second World War.

116. STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT, JULY (Excerpt) ²

Now I would address myself, then, as others, to the problem. I do not wish to go over the same ground that I have already covered, but I would like to talk a little bit about NATO as it was as it has been organized, and as it has been administered, a little bit from the political sense, but also from the military sense, particularly like my friend, Marshal Zhukov, to listen to what I have now to say. I have known him for a long time. I know that, speaking as soldier to soldier, I have never heard a single word that I did not believe to be the truth.

In December of 1950, or January 1951, I returned to the head of SHAPE, the forces that the NATO countries brought together into a single headquarters in Paris. I assured that I accepted that job—because I had been retired—I accepted because I believed it to be a true agency for peace. I have had enough of war and I would not have accepted that had I conceived it to be an organization getting ready for a war.

One of the great problems then facing the Western world was Germany. Germany, if allowed to become a military vacuum, would become again a fertile ground for the propagation of a danger, one of the gravest danger. Now, admittedly, we were at the moment thinking of danger to the Soviet Union: we were not thinking of danger to Western Europe.

Let us not forget that our Allied friend within a matter of hours has three times been locked in mortal combat with Germany.

activities of every Western nation. There is free access to our centers of activity by all the press of the world. There is news about every main army camp, every great facility that we have, and this news goes all over the world. The scale of our military operations in our country is well known to everybody.

Further, within our country it is impossible for the Government, the Executive Government, to declare war. It can be done only by the Congress of the United States by free debate and vote. The only exception to this is when we ourselves are attacked with a full-scale military attack, as at Pearl Harbor, and then the reaction is merely one of self-defense.

Further, the treaties that bind the NATO nations together¹ provide that aggression by any one of these nations, either among themselves or against anyone else. The treaty is purely defensive, and if one of these nations attempts to act aggressively against any other, it is immediately moved against by all the remaining nations of NATO. Particularly Germany, like all other nations in Western Europe, has limits set upon its forces, and, I must point out, these limits are maximum limits as well as minimum limits. In no case are any parts of its forces allowed to Germany complete or whole within themselves.

They are all intertwined with the forces of the other Western nations, making it impossible for them to conduct any effective military operation of any kind by themselves.

French colleagues can speak far better than can I about the deliberations of the French Parliament concerning all of the measures and all of the agreements under the treaty that would prevent Germany from ever getting into a position where it would be strong enough again to attack France.

Further, besides all of these treaty provisions for making the breaking of peace by any nation impossible, I want to make one observation about the United States. The United States is a fairly important member of NATO, and I can assure you that under no circumstances will the United States ever go to be a party to aggressive war—against any nation. We believe in negotiation and friendly competition, and the only way that we will ever go to war is when we are forced, as in our vital interests, in such a way that war would be the only alternative—and then it would have to be an alternative so great that only war could eventuate.

Perhaps I have talked overly long about my point, but my point is this: If there is any tendency to delay urgent consideration of the problem of German reunification because of the unhappiness or fear of a reunited Germany in NATO, then so far as it is possible for the United States to give the assurance of its pledged word, I say here now: There is no need to fear that situation. . . .

117. STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF S JULY 20, 1955¹

Mr. Chairman, the United States Delegation is quite deal with the topic of European security, although in our topic of European security is inseparably connected with of the unification of Germany. There is perhaps a difference has been developed between the basic viewpoint of the S and that of the three Western nations in that, I think Western Powers here feel that the prolonged division is in itself a threat to European security, whereas, I Soviet Delegation feels that the division of Germany can indefinitely prolonged without endangering European provided certain supplementary measures are taken of a they suggest.

I think, at least from the standpoint of the United S gation, that we would feel that any discussion of Europ would have to start out with an assertion that in our opinion will not be very secure so long as a great nation like divided and, as far as we can judge, passionately seeks

I am quite prepared to accept the apparent sincerity of conviction that the unification of Germany would not creased security but would bring it insecurity. I would the Soviet Delegation believe that we are equally sincere assert that we would only want to see German unification conditions which would in fact bring about increased security.

I feel that there are two very sincere positions which keep us apart, which could be perhaps drawn together see somewhat more clearly the basis for the Soviet feeling unification of Germany would endanger it. If, for example Soviet Union feared that a unified Germany would mean toward the east bases and military positions which endanger that is a specific fear which we could understand, even though we not agree with it. It is a specific fear with which we could in a practical way. If the Soviet Union felt that a unified would have a military potential which would lead it to military establishment beyond what was reasonable or what the case otherwise, that again is a specific fear which, if the Soviet Union, we could grapple with in a practical way.

Let me conclude, Mr. Chairman, by just saying this: that the prolonged division of a great nation like the German must itself be a cause of insecurity. We believe that this insecurity can be eliminated without increasing the cause of insecurity. We believe that the two possibilities of insecurity can be dealt with at the same time, if we could understand more clearly what the basis is of the apprehension of the Soviet Union.

118. STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE, JULY 20, 1955¹

It would not, I think, be quite accurate to say, as I understood Mr. Molotov to indicate, that there has not yet been any serious discussion of the proposals put forward by the Head of his Delegation in his important opening statement of Monday.² Certainly I myself feel that the observations which were made yesterday by President Eisenhower³ constituted a very eloquent and clear comment upon one of the central proposals which had been made by Marshal Bulganin in his exposition of European security. Marshal Bulganin's statement indicated that it was the Soviet view that security would be increased if we could bring about a withdrawal of foreign troops from the territories of European states and re-establish in this respect a situation which existed prior to the Second World War.

President Eisenhower, speaking with the authority which comes not merely from being at present the Constitutional Commander in Chief of the United States forces but with the added authority which comes from his leadership of the Western portion of the coalition which won the Second World War and the first Commander of NATO in Europe, speaking in all three of those capacities, he expressed the very solemn and considered conclusion that the security of all of us is very greatly enhanced as there is an integration of forces of different nationalities into a single whole, which cannot effectively operate offensively without a unanimous conjunction of the wills of independent states, which in fact would be unobtainable.

He indicated that the presence in the Federal Republic of Germany of troops of the forces of the United Kingdom, of France, of Canada and of the United States integrated into any prospective future force of the Federal Republic of Germany would, in his opinion, constitute a great security for us all, and that it would not advance the security of any of us to revert to the situation in that respect which existed immediately prior to the Second World War.

Indeed, it seems to me that the four of us here, who suffered so terribly from the Second World War--and the three other Governments here suffered more greatly than did the United States--that security of all of us, and that the liquidation of NATO planned by the statement of Marshal Bulganin would promote security.

And I would like to add a word about the Brussels Treaty. It also would be liquidated under the Soviet proposal. The United States, like the Soviet Union, is not a party to the Brussels Treaty, but we believe that the integration of many of the active member countries, which is one of the purposes of that result which is extremely valuable for the United States and the Soviet Union, although neither of us are parties to that result, although, naturally, I would not set myself up in any way as a threat to the security of the Soviet Union. But I do make the announcement on my own feeling that it is a tremendous insurance against the division and separation of Western European countries, and that out of Germany and France, out of which have grown the aggressions which President Eisenhower referred yesterday, and which have been the cause of many wars, the last two of which have been involving not only the immediate parties but all of us and the world besides.

I realize, of course, that organizations like the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the Brussels Treaty, like all good organizations, could theoretically at least be perverted to evil ends, although that the inherent nature of these arrangements is such that this is highly unlikely. I also recognize that no great power can have its security, or at least its peace, in part dependent on arrangements with which it has no privity. These are all aspects of the problem which can be, and I think should be, considered before we act in the spirit which happily prevails here and which I hope will prevail forward.

Furthermore, there are certain aspects of the proposals of the Soviet Delegation which, it seems to me, we could use. For example, it is suggested that certain of the European states should assume mutual commitments not to use armed force against each other. It is further suggested that they could assume an obligation to hold mutual consultations in case any differences or disputes arise among them which might constitute a threat to the main peace in Europe. Certainly such suggestions, together with others which have been put forward in the last statement made by Mr. Molotov, are those kinds of things I think we could usefully study. We try to evolve a system of European security which, on the one hand, will end the insecurity inherent in the continued division of Europe, and, on the other hand, permit that insecurity to be removed without creating new insecurities for any of us.

119. STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT, JULY 20, 1955¹

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Conference, as I listened to my colleague, Premier Bulganin,² it seemed to me that the principal point of difference between the thinking of the Soviet Delegation and the thinking of the United States Delegation is the urgency with which we view the need for a reunified Germany.

The Soviet Delegation seems to believe that the organization of some new and over-all pact, deferring for the moment any thought of reunifying Germany, would contribute to security. We believe that the division of Germany of itself contributes to the insecurity of Europe, and that seems to us to be the principal point of difference between what he has just said to the Conference and what we believe.

Now I certainly would be the last to minimize the importance of the over-all security of all Europe to the security of the world. Of course we agree to that, and I apologize for seeming to return to a question of the reunification of Germany, which we discussed at such length yesterday. But in our view these two matters are inseparable, and therefore, I cannot help bringing them back. So I feel—this is my conviction—that to start this so-called security pact with this Conference, making no move toward starting the machinery or means for the reunifying of Germany, would appear to confirm instead of deploring that division, and, consequently, as we attack the broader question, which is of over-all security, it seems to me that we must from our viewpoint, attack the problem of how do we get Germany back together.

Now, whether it will take one step or two steps or three steps, I admit my Soviet colleagues have studied it in greater detail than I, but I am sure that it would be a great mistake for us not to set up the machinery that proves once and for all that we confirm the necessity for so doing, and giving to some competent group or body the job of working out what needs to be done in order to bring this about. And I believe that until we do devise some such machinery we cannot by mere words, or saying we believe in the eventual reunification of Germany—I do not believe we can satisfy the situation that from our viewpoint confronts us, this Conference, and the world.

I think that is all I want to say at the moment because, I repeat, no one could applaud more than does the American Delegation the earnest protestations of the Soviet Delegation that we seek peace through giving peace to all and not just to a part of this great world.

120. STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT, JULY 2

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I have only a brief opportunity to make [with respect to comments made, in turn, by Premier Bulganin, Prime Minister Eden, and Premier Bulganin concerning the Soviet proposal on European security²]. These ideas, of enormous and tremendous interest for all of us, and naturally each of us, need to be studied carefully. But I should like to say, for my part, I have talked in detail, I think, to each member of the Delegation of the Soviet Union, which now we find differing from the other three of us on only one point in a suggestion. And I want to make clear I believe I am earnestly desirous of finding peace, as are we.

The problem becomes how to find a bridge between the two different viewpoints.

Now, we have taken up matters that manifestly we cannot discuss in detail in this Conference. It's impossible, because we have presumably, a number of other countries into a pact, and we have to be dealt with.

I noted that in Premier Bulganin's speech of the 15th, which I read with great interest, he pointed out that this could be only a beginning. But if we could here establish a basis of conciliation and an effort to get along together, our Foreign Ministers and other agencies that could be set up through the United Nations or by us, might solve some of these problems and find a kind of bridge of which I speak.

I believe we have come to the point with this subject where we should ask our Foreign Ministers, can they suggest the machinery that we would like to set up, or when they would like to take a more detailed conference on these subjects of the security of Germany and the community security of Europe—the subjects now so far on our agenda—how would they like to approach this? Possibly they could present it to us in such a way that we, as the Government, could give them a directive.

I am sure that all of us will agree to the importance of this. We must not leave this Conference without showing a sincere and honest effort of all of us to approach peace in some way.

Now, I submit again that we have gotten into details that we couldn't possibly settle here. And therefore we must find some machinery, that can handle this in better fashion.

121. STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
JULY 21, 1955 (Excerpt) ¹

. . . the Delegations of France, the United Kingdom, and the United States have tried, in the spirit which happily animates this Conference, to fairly reflect the points of view which have heretofore been expressed by the four Delegations.

The concept that Germany should be reunified in conformity with the national interests of the German people and the security of Europe, I think, almost in the precise words which were used by Marshal Bulganin in his opening statement.²

And the concept that security for Europe should be sought by effective means which will further the legitimate interests of all, including the inherent right of individual and collective self-defense—that, again, is an effort to reflect the point of view which Marshal Bulganin expressed in this matter.

The particular suggestions made as to what the representatives of the Four Powers should take into consideration, . . . also is designed to include a reference to some of the major suggestions which have been made here by the Heads of Government, notably by Marshal Bulganin, Prime Minister Eden, and Premier Faure. We naturally, however, indicate that there may be other possibilities, so as not to limit unduly the resourcefulness and inventiveness of the Foreign Ministers for the future, and their advisers.

JULY 21, 1955 ³

Mr. President, I think we all appreciate the approach which has been reflected by the remarks which have been made around this table and which, I think, indicate a genuine desire to reach an agreement on this [proposed] directive [to the Foreign Ministers] ⁴ and, as Mr. Molotov has said, not to make this topic a matter of propaganda discussion among us. I will try to maintain that spirit in making merely one or two further remarks.

There is undoubtedly a difference between us in that the Soviet Union, as I understand, would make the primary task the establishment of a new European security system and would treat the unification of Germany as a secondary problem which could be resolved perhaps as a by-product of the first. I think I can say that the view of the three Western Powers represented here is that the primary to the entirely defensive character of the North Atlantic Treaty, Brussels Treaty, all of which fall within the overriding framework of the United Nations Charter. It already reflects a very real effort at conciliation on the part of France, the United Kingdom and the United States.

We are willing to put these two problems in essence on a par. I hope very much that the Soviet Union will feel able to do so in that respect and not insist upon a subordination of the problem of German unification.

If I understood correctly the interpretation of an early statement of Mr. Molotov,¹ he said in substance that he feared that by addressing ourselves to the task of German unification that we were in fact addressing ourselves to the task of indefinite postponement of European security. It could be said if we address ourselves to the task of European security that we would involve an indefinite postponement of the unification of Germany.

I do not think that any of us should strive to bring about a premature result, that is, neither of us should try to bring about any premature postponement, either of European security or of German unification.

As President Eisenhower said yesterday, and I quote from the transcript of his remarks: "in our view these two matters are inseparable".² I hope, therefore, that we can find a directive which reflects the view that the two problems must be considered jointly, that neither can be indefinitely postponed in favor of the other.

I am encouraged by what Mr. Molotov has said to hope that the Soviet Delegation would find acceptable that approach which was sought to embody in the draft directive which I have had the honor to present on behalf of the Delegations of France, the United Kingdom, and the United States. I will just add this one further thing that I am very happy that as a matter of first impression Mr. Molotov indicates that important portions of this Treaty of the proposed directive³ are acceptable,⁴

123. DIRECTIVE OF THE HEADS OF GOVERNMENT OF THE FOUR POWERS TO THE FOREIGN MINISTER JULY 23, 1955 (Excerpt)⁵

The Heads of Government of France, the United Kingdom, the U.S.S.R. and the U.S.A., guided by the desire to contribute to the relaxation of international tension and to the consolidation of confidence between states, instruct their Foreign Ministers to take into the consideration of the following questions with regard to propose effective means for their solution, taking account of the close link between the reunification of Germany and the problems of European security, and the fact that the successful settlement of each of these problems would serve the interests of consolidating peace.

1. European Security and Germany. For the purpose of establishing European security with due regard to the legitimate interests of all nations and their inherent right to individual and collective self-defense, the Ministers are instructed to consider various proposals to this end, including the following: A security pact for Europe or for a part of Europe, including provisions for the assumption by member nations of an obligation not to resort to force and to deny assistance to an aggressor; limitation, control, and inspection in regard to armed forces and armaments; establishment between East and West of a zone in which the disposition of armed forces will be subject to mutual agreement; and also to consider other possible proposals pertaining to the solution of this problem.

The Heads of Government, recognizing their common responsibility for the settlement of the German question and the re-unification of Germany, have agreed that the settlement of the German question and the re-unification of Germany by means of free elections shall be carried out in conformity with the national interests of the German people and the interests of European security. The Foreign Ministers will make whatever arrangements they may consider desirable for the participation of, or for consultation with, other interested parties.

J. DISCUSSION OF THE PROBLEMS OF GERMANY AND EUROPEAN SECURITY AT THE GENEVA MEETING OF FOREIGN MINISTERS, OCTOBER 27-NOVEMBER 16, 1955

124. PROPOSAL BY THE AMERICAN, BRITISH, AND FRENCH DELEGATIONS, OCTOBER 27, 1955¹

Reunification of Germany and Security

At the Geneva Conference the Heads of Government recognized

free elections in conformity with the national interests of the people and the interests of European security.

France, the United Kingdom and the United States have striven unceasingly for the reunification of Germany in order to promote real stability in Europe. Last year the Government of the United Kingdom, in the Eden Plan, proposed, in the forward, in the Eden Plan, proposals which offer the German people the means to recover its unity in accordance with the rights and liberty of the individual.¹ They renew these proposals in the paper attached hereto.

Free elections leading to the formation of a single Government for the whole of Germany are the right way of ensuring full participation of the German people in the solution of the German problem. The Soviet Government says it also desires. If agreement is reached during the present Conference, it should be possible to deal without delay questions concerning the electoral law and the organisation of the elections, which could take place as early as 1956.

Without German unity, any system of European security will be an illusion. The division of Germany can only perpetuate division and insecurity as well as grave injustice. France, the United Kingdom and the United States of America are not prepared to endorse a system of European security which, as in the Soviet proposal, is put forward at Geneva,² does not end the division of Germany.

At the Geneva Conference the Soviet Government expressed its opposition about the policy and associations of a reunified German Government. The Soviet Union appears to fear that a unified Germany, created by free elections and free to choose its associates in collective security, would constitute a threat to the security of the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe. The fact is that the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and the Western European Union are strictly defensive organisations. Far from constituting a threat to peace, they contribute to the security not only of their members but of all states. This is true notwithstanding the various limitations and restrictions which the members of the Western European Union have assumed and from the fact that it is based on individual action which the NATO system imposes on its members. If a reunified Germany elects to associate itself with these organisations, the inherent obligations of restraint and control would be maintained rather than detract from Soviet security.

Nevertheless, to remove any possible grounds for Soviet opposition to reunify Germany promptly, France, the United Kingdom and the United States of America are prepared to take further steps to allay the concern expressed by the Soviet Government. They propose the conclusion of a treaty in the terms set forth below, instead of currently with the conclusion of an agreement to reunify the obligation to react against aggression. The treaty would enter into force only in conjunction with the reunification of Germany. It would be carried out by stages. Its signature would be concurrent with the signature of the agreement on the Eden Plan. The final stage would become effective when a reunified Germany decides to enter NATO and the Western European Union.

France, the United Kingdom and the United States of America are convinced that these proposals could lead to an agreement satisfactory to both sides. If the Soviet Union's concern over immediate German reunification is primarily security, these proposals should constitute an acceptable basis for negotiation since they provide a system of controls in which the Soviet Union would directly participate, and reciprocal assurances from which the Soviet Union would directly benefit. Such a settlement, by creating confidence in an area vital for world security, would facilitate the solution of even wider problems.

OUTLINE OF TERMS OF TREATY OF ASSURANCE ON THE REUNIFICATION OF GERMANY

The treaty, which would be concluded concurrently with an agreement on the reunification of Germany under the Eden Plan, would cover the following subjects:

1.—Renunciation of the Use of Force—

Each party would undertake to settle, by peaceful means, any international dispute in which it might be involved, and to refrain from the use of force in any manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations.

2.—Withholding Support from aggressors—

Each party would agree to withhold assistance, military or economic, to any aggressor, and any party could bring the aggression to the attention of the United Nations, and seek such measures as are necessary to maintain or to restore international peace and security.

3.—Limitation of Forces and Armaments—

In a zone comprising areas of comparable size and depth and importance on both sides of the line of demarcation between a reunified Germany and the Eastern European countries, levels for armed forces would be specified so as to establish a military balance which would contribute to European security and help to relieve the burden of aggressive procedures of mutual inspection to verify such data and warn against any preparation for surprise attack.

5.—Special Warning System—

In order to provide added depth to the surveillance system on borders and thus give further protection against surprise attack, provision could be made to establish:

- a) in the western part of the zone mentioned in paragraph 3, a radar warning system operated by the Soviet Union and the other western members of the treaty, and
- b) a like system in the eastern part of that zone operated by the NATO members of the treaty.

6.—Consultation—

There would be suitable provision for consultation among the parties to implement the treaty.

7.—Individual and Collective Self-Defence—

It would be provided that nothing in the treaty would impair or conflict with the right of individual and collective self-defence recognised by the United Nations Charter and Treaties under it. No party would continue to station forces in the territory of any other party without the latter's consent, and upon request of the party concerned any party would withdraw its forces within a stated period unless these forces are present in the territory concerned under collective defence arrangements.

8.—Obligation to react against aggression—

Each party would agree that armed attack in Europe by any party which is also a NATO member, against any party which is not a NATO member, or vice-versa, would endanger the peace and security which is the object of this treaty, and that all the parties would take appropriate action to meet that common danger.

9.—Entry into force by stages—

The provisions would come into effect progressively at stages to be agreed.

THE EDEN PLAN

PLAN FOR GERMAN REUNIFICATION IN FREEDOM

- II—The convocation of a National Assembly resulting from these elections
- III—The drafting of a Constitution and the preparation of Peace Treaty negotiations
- IV—The adoption of the Constitution and the formation of an all-German Government responsible for the negotiation and conclusion of the Peace Treaty
- V—The signature and entry into force of the Peace Treaty

I—FREE ELECTIONS THROUGHOUT GERMANY

Free and secret elections should be held throughout Germany including Berlin at the earliest possible date. These elections must be held in conditions of genuine freedom. Safeguards must be agreed to assure this freedom before, after and during the elections. The elections must also be supervised in such a manner as to make sure that these safeguards are observed and that the elections are properly conducted.

(1) Preparation for the Elections

(a) The Electoral Law

The Electoral Law should be prepared by France, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America, in consultation with German experts, taking into consideration the electoral laws already drafted for this purpose by the Bundestag of the Federal Republic and the Soviet Zone Volkskammer. When approved by the Four Powers, it should be published throughout Germany. Elections should take place as soon as possible thereafter.

(b) Guarantees for Free Elections

The draft electoral law must contain provisions which will guarantee the genuine freedom of the elections. These include, amongst others:—

- Freedom of movement throughout Germany
- Freedom of presentation of candidates
- Immunity of candidates
- Freedom from arbitrary arrest or victimisation
- Freedom of association and political meetings
- Freedom of expression for all
- Freedom of the press, radio and television and free circulation of newspapers, periodicals, etc.

counted and verified at local headquarters in the presence of the Supervisory Commission.

- (i) Composition of Supervisory Commission—The Commission should be composed of representatives of the Four Powers with or without the participation of neutrals, assisted by Germans in a consultative capacity.
- (ii) Organisation of the Commission—The Commission should work on a Committee basis. Its decisions should be taken by majority vote.
- (iii) Functions and Powers of the Commission—The principal task of the Commission will be to ensure that the elections take place in genuine freedom and in strict conformity with the provisions of the Electoral Law.

(2) Method for completing the above Preparations

The Foreign Ministers must in the first place agree on the principles contained in this Plan. They will then give instructions accordingly to a Working Group, consisting of the principal representatives in Germany of the Four Powers, or members of their staffs, which will work out the necessary details and submit a report.

This report should include, in particular:—

- (1) the draft of the all-German Electoral Law;
- (2) detailed recommendations regarding the supervision of the elections.

The Working Group should begin work not later than two weeks after the Foreign Ministers have agreed on the principles contained in this Plan. It should submit its report to the Four Governments not later than one month after beginning its work.

II. THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

The all-German elections will establish an all-German National Assembly.

During the period between the end of the elections and the full assumption of control by the all-German Government, it will be desirable for part of the Supervisory machinery to remain in operation in order to prevent action after the elections which would impair the conditions of genuine freedom under which they will have been held as provided in Section I (1) (b) above. Recommendations on this subject should be included in the report of the Working Group.

IV. ADOPTION OF THE CONSTITUTION AND FORMATION OF AN ALL-GERMAN GOVERNMENT RESPONSIBLE FOR THE NEGOTIATION AND CONCLUSION OF THE PEACE TREATY

The draft of the Constitution will be submitted to the Assembly as soon as possible. Immediately after it has been adopted an all-German Government will be formed. This Government will then be responsible for the negotiation and conclusion of the Peace Treaty. At the same time, such other institutions as may be provided for in the Constitution shall be established.

As soon as the all-German Government has been formed, the National Assembly will determine how the powers of the Federal Government and the German authorities in the Soviet Zone shall be transferred to the all-German Government, and how the two former shall be brought to an end.

The all-German Government shall have authority to assume or reject the international rights and obligations of the Federal Republic and the Soviet Zone of Germany and to conclude such other international agreements as it may wish. The Four Powers will support any application of the all-German Government to accede to the United Nations Organization.

Each of the Four Powers will exercise with respect to the National Assembly, the Provisional All-German Authority and the all-German Government, only those of its rights which relate to the stationing of armed forces in Germany and the protection of their security in Berlin, the reunification of Germany and a Peace Treaty.¹

Decisions of the National Assembly, the Provisional all-German Authority and the all-German Government in carrying out this Plan will not require the approval of the Four Powers. Such decisions may not be disapproved except by a majority vote of the Four Powers.

V. SIGNATURE AND ENTRY INTO FORCE OF THE PEACE TREATY

The signatories to the Treaty should include all States, or their successors thereof, which were at war with Germany. The Treaty should enter into force when ratified by the Four Powers and by Germany.

125. STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE, OCTOBER 28, 1955²

Mr. Chairman,³ I would like first of all to confirm the sponsorship of the United States of the document and proposals which were read by coupled with the Eden Plan for the reunification of Germany, shared by the United States, together with the United Kingdom and France.

I merely wish, first of all, to confirm that fact, and to associate ourselves, Mr. Chairman, with what you have said in support of these joint proposals.¹

I would like now to address myself to some of the proposals that were made by Mr. Molotov,² and, in the first instance, to the condemnation of what Mr. Molotov called "military blocs." These blocs are in reality collective security associations.

I realize that there is a difference of opinion between the members with reference to these matters, and probably it is not possible to resolve all those differences at this time, but I think it is possible to pass without comment the condemnation of these collective security organizations.

Why, indeed, should it be that nations should not join together to help each other against what they consider to be a common danger? In pursuance of what they consider to be a sense of common interest, individuals do that. It is considered the appropriate way of life. Individuals do that. It is considered the appropriate way of life for security. And the Charter of the United Nations, to which all have subscribed, defines that as an inherent right of nations.

Why should it be that something which we have all agreed is an inherent right of nations—that is, the right not only of an individual but the right of collective self-defense—why is it that that has led to in for such bitter condemnation, when it is something which we have all agreed is an inherent right.

It is suggested that these collective defense associations have led to an increase of increased military expenditures, and in support of that there are given showing that in the case of some of our countries military budgets went up very sharply between the year 1949 and the year 1954. But it should not be forgotten that something was going on during that period other than the formation of collective security associations. There were the events which took place in Czechoslovakia; there was the blockade of Berlin; there was the attack upon the Republic of Korea. Anyone who examines history realistically will find that it was such events as these that led to the increase in military budgets, and not the creation of collective security associations.

Indeed, I think it is demonstrable that the military expenditures of each of the Western Powers would have gone up much more than they did were it not for the fact that because of collective security we thought that we could help each other out and, therefore, we did not need, in each individual nation, as large a military budget as we have seen. It has been felt necessary had we stood alone.

prevail in the world and which sometimes drive people into acts of violence which otherwise they would not commit. One of those injustices, and one the responsibility for which we here are charged with, is the continued division of Germany. Because it was recognized that that was a dangerous situation, a wrong situation, a situation which created insecurity, we were charged here to deal with the two problems inseparably or closely linked; that is, the problem of reunification of Germany and European Security. It is stated in that order in the directive.¹

And it is further said in the directive that the successful settlement of each of these problems would serve the interests of consolidating peace; in other words, that the reunification of Germany is one of the problems, a settlement of which will serve to consolidate peace.

We have come here with proposals to deal with each of these two problems, the solution of which would serve the interests of consolidating peace. We have put on the table yesterday, through President Pinay, the proposal for the unification of Germany, which reflects in essence the Eden Plan which was put forward at our Berlin Conference, and the new proposals to give security assurance in connection with the reunification of Germany.²

The Eden Plan is, as I say, one with which we are all familiar; and it is reintroduced now, substantially in its initial form, because it is based upon principles which are basic and sound and which reflect the directive that we should seek a "settlement of the German question and the reunification of Germany by means of free elections carried out in conformity with the national interests of the German people."

The suggested treaty of assurance on the reunification of Germany is new and it represents an honest, sincere, painstaking effort to carry out the directive in that respect and to meet what we recognize to be the legitimate preoccupations of the Soviet Union and, indeed, of all of us, as against the possibility that Germany might again become a militaristic state. The proposals include all of the features which we were instructed to consider; provisions for an obligation not to resort to force, that is one; provision to deny assistance to an aggressor, that is another; limitation, control and inspection in regard to armed forces and armaments, that is another; the establishment between East and West of a zone in which the disposition of force will be subject to mutual agreement. All of those aspects which we were instructed to consider are realistically incorporated in the outline of a treaty which has been submitted by the three Western Powers regard to our traditional attitude toward these matters geographical separation from the European continent. ever, something that I believe the United States would to do as a part of a contribution to bring about the increase for all which would come with the reunification of Germany.

I was very glad to hear Mr. Molotov say that he would consider the proposals more carefully, because it is quite obvious that the reaction is based upon an inadequate understanding of the proposal. As I understood Mr. Molotov, his basic objections to the proposal, as he understood the proposal, were in essence two: One that the proposal required Germany to become a party to the treaty and the other was that the sanctions of the treaty were mere threats.

Dealing with the first point, let me say that there is no objection whatsoever in the treaty proposal which conflicts with the provisions of the Eden Plan that the all-German Government shall have the right to assume or reject the international rights and obligations of the Federal Republic and the Soviet Zone of Germany. Let me make this perfectly clear and emphatic: There is nothing whatsoever in the treaty proposal which requires Germany to become a member of NATO. It is recognized that a reunified Germany will be free to join NATO or to reject existing obligations with reference either to NATO, or to Warsaw.² That is a complete freedom, and nothing in the treaty proposals is in any way contrary to that.

With respect to the sanctions in the treaty, these are more serious than any which have ever been known before in the history of international relations, covering practically every aspect which the United States has to control, not only in terms of engagements, pledges, which are serious, but also including physical arrangements in the treaty, inspection, controls, assurances regarding the level of forces, etc. As I say, they go far beyond anything that history has known, and surely it is not to be said that there is not anything in the proposal except mere "consultations".

So I very much hope that this proposal, which tries to be frank and conscientiously to give real substance to our directive, will receive the careful consideration which I know it deserves. And I am confident that with that consideration the provisional and tentative views that have been expressed here will be revised. Of course, this proposal is subject to the reunification of Germany, and one of the provisions of the treaty operates, as far as the United States and the other powers here are concerned, only if the reunified Germany joins NATO; that is, Article 8, because Article 8 deals in essence with a guarantee by the NATO members that no one of them

We shall, of course, examine carefully the proposal which the Soviet Delegation has submitted.¹ In looking at it in the few minutes that have been available, I think it will be found that some at least of the provisions of our proposal coincide with the proposals of the Soviet Delegation. There is, however, one basic difference of approach which is that we have submitted together proposals dealing with what our directive says are the two closely-linked problems; namely, the problem of the reunification of Germany, and the problem of European security.

The proposal of the Soviet Delegation, so far as I can see, is in no way connected with the reunification of Germany, and, therefore, it would be difficult for us to consider it until we see the proposal which the Soviet Delegation says it intends to submit for the reunification of Germany. When we see the two together then we shall be able to appreciate them better than by only seeing the first proposal without the other half; namely, the reunification of Germany.

In conclusion, let me beg the Soviet Delegation to believe that the treaty proposal that has been made here represents a serious and, I would say, indeed, a momentous and historic proposal designed to meet, as fully as human ingenuity can meet it, the problem of permitting the reunification of Germany to occur under conditions which will assure that whichever election Germany makes, in terms of its future associations or lack of associations, there will be assurance to us all against something which we are all entitled to dread and fear; that is, the possibility that Germany might again become a militaristic State.

126. STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE, OCTOBER 29, 1955²

Mr. Chairman, I feel that we have made considerable progress during the two days of conference which we have so far had—two days of discussion of our proposals—and that the last statement made by Mr. Molotov³ poses the question, a very proper one at this stage, as to how do we really make progress from now on.

We are not here to engage in polemics, and to show how smart we are, either as lawyers or as diplomats. We are here on a very serious task. And, in that spirit, I would like to say this: I think that the three Western Powers in their proposals have gone very far in presenting the position which their governments hold, on both the subject of the reunification of Germany and on the subject of either yesterday or today, have been answered as adequately appropriate to answer them at the present stage of our debate. If we get down to discussing the detailed elaboration of a security treaty, a treaty of assurance, along the lines we have proposed, it will naturally be appropriate to have further more detailed changes of views as to just how certain articles should be drafted.

It seems to me that the important thing at this stage is to state the position of the Soviet Union with reference to the reunification of Germany. It is quite true that our proposals start from the premise that Germany will be reunified and the assurances which we have suggested are assurances which depend basically, not upon German entry into N.A.T.O., but they do depend basically upon the reunification of Germany.

We do not yet know the position of the Soviet Union on the question of the reunification of Germany, and while we know that the head of the Soviet Government agreed in the directive that Germany should be reunified through free elections, we do not know what proposals the Soviet Union will now make to give effect to the provision of the directive.

Mr. Molotov says that he has a proposal to make in this connection and it seems to me that from the standpoint of making a treaty which would be very useful if Mr. Molotov could let us see what his proposal is.

There is, I know, a difference of opinion between us as to the relative order of importance of European security and the reunification of Germany but there can be no difference between us on the position that there is a close link between the two, because this has already been decided for us by our superiors.

There are, one might say, two sides of a single coin, one side of which is European security and the other side of which is German reunification. We have tried to present our view as to the pattern of the two sides of the coin, the pattern of European security, the pattern of German reunification. As far as the Soviet Union is concerned, one side of the coin is as yet visible; that is, the one that has to do with European security. I think, in order that we can really reach a businesslike way, which I know we all want, that it would be extremely useful if the Soviet Union would show us the other side of the coin, the one that has the pattern of German reunification. We can see whether there is a basis of agreement there. Because, in any case, it has been made clear, German reunification is the basis of our proposed security treaty.

If we cannot reach agreement about the reunification of Germany, then obviously our security proposals are irrelevant because

OCTOBER 29, 1955¹

Mr. Chairman, we can all ask questions. I have asked several. On question I have asked is as to whether we can proceed in our discussion of security on the assumption that the Soviet Union will promptly agree to the reunification of Germany. That is, from my standpoint as important a question to ask and to have answered as any that I can think of.

I would say that certainly the purpose which we all have here is to find security for all. As far as the United States is concerned—and I can not in this respect speak for my colleagues or anybody but myself—I can only refer to what President Eisenhower said when he was here in July when he said—and he said it on two separate days to make it perfectly clear: “European security and the reunification of Germany are inseparable”.² Those were his words. And it is the view of the United States that it is not possible to achieve security in Europe upon the premise of a divided Germany. Now, that may not be the view of others, but that is certainly the point of view which we bring to this conference, and until we know whether or not we are to proceed on the premise that Germany will be unified or on the premise that Germany is to be divided it is extremely difficult for us to answer hypothetical questions about a security treaty because a security treaty which is predicated upon a unified Germany is one thing. If Germany is not to be unified, then the problems are of a totally different order and it is not possible to answer questions until we know what the basic foundation is as far as Germany is concerned.

That is all.

128. STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
NOVEMBER 2, 1955³

Mr. Chairman, I am glad to have the opportunity to comment on the presentation which has just been made by the head of the Soviet Delegation.⁴ I shall, of course, look forward to the opportunity to study closely his remarks when I have the exact transcript, but I can make some preliminary observations at this time.

As I recall, Mr. Molotov first commented on our security proposals and made objections on two grounds, principally, the first being, as I recall, that, and I quote now my notes of the English translation of Germany into NATO.

The second point, as I understand it, was that the security which we had submitted did not operate for the benefit of Germans of Germany who had in the past been the victims of aggression.

I was very glad that his objections are of a kind which can be met.

The proposal as submitted by the three Western Powers is that "the treaty would enter into force only in conjunction with the reunification of Germany." So it is not accurate to say that it comes into force when Germany enters into NATO. That must be read in connection with the provision in the Eden Plan that if East Germany is annexed, which provides that the all-German government must either accept or reject membership in NATO. It is quite true that the proposal says that "the provisions would come into effect progressively at stages to be agreed." That agreement we will see when the Soviet Government at an appropriate time.

With respect to the second point, it is certainly the intention to think certainly the effect—of the proposals that we submit is that they should benefit all of the countries here in Europe who have been subject to German aggression. For example, Article 10 of the proposed armed attack against any party which is not a NATO member. It is obviously the limitation of forces and the special measures in the treaty area which would embrace parts of Poland and Czechoslovakia would give a very great measure of security to those countries.

I think it can be confidently said, as I said before Mr. Molotov spoke this last time, that the progress that we have made is apparent that we can reach agreement on security provisions and reach agreement on the reunification of Germany.¹ Having regard here to all the observations which Mr. Molotov has made and having seen his own proposals, I am confident that it is possible to reach agreement upon a security treaty which will meet all the legitimate preoccupations of the Soviet Union and of the other countries who have in the past suffered from German aggression. That is an optimistic statement, but I hope it is not a crime to be optimistic.

So, after having made this good progress in the area of security, we turn to the problem of reunification of Germany. Mr. Molotov discussed the question of who is responsible for the present division of Germany, and, as I understood it, he put the responsibility upon the Germans who had created first Bizonia and then Trizonia.² Well, Germany was originally divided into four parts, and I am not sure that it is fair to put the responsibility for the continued division of Germany upon the Germans who first reduced the four parts to three, and then reduced the three parts to two. If the Soviet Union will join with us about now the reduction of the two to one, then we will no longer have to argue about who is responsible for division.

But really the important thing is not who is responsible for the division of Germany, but who is responsible to put Germany together again, and as to that, the decision has been made: "The Heads of Government recognizing their common responsibility for the reunification of Germany"—that is our Directive;¹ and, whoever was responsible for the past, we now have a common responsibility for the future.

I confess that I was at first discouraged by the Soviet proposal about Germany because they seemed to me not only to be impractical but they seemed to me to be a very clear departure from our Directive. But I did not remain discouraged long because I thought to myself that the first proposals which the Soviet Union had made about security were very discouraging, and their second proposals came much closer and showed a real approach to those of the Western Powers. So I hope that the Soviet Delegation, after we have had a discussion on this question of the reunification of Germany, may see its way to coming forward with proposals which meet more closely the Directive, and which by so doing also meet more responsibly the submission which we have made in this respect.

Our Directive calls for the reunification of Germany by means of free elections. Now Mr. Molotov has pointed out that, if you have free elections, somebody is going to win and somebody is going to lose. That is, however, inherent, as I see it, in the nature of free elections. Presumably that fact was taken into account by the Heads of Government when they nevertheless directed us to bring about the reunification of Germany by free elections. I do not wish to go into a debate about the merits or demerits of the social structure which has been created in East Germany. It is not really important what I think about it. The important thing is: What do the Germans think about it, because they are the ones who are going to have to live by their choice.

Free elections, under the conditions that are foreseen by the proposals of the Western Powers, will permit the Germans who live in East Germany, if they wish, to go all about Germany explaining the merits of these are merits, of the social system that exists in East Germany and they will have a full opportunity to explain it to the Germans. It will also give the people in West Germany an opportunity to find out, by personal investigation, by talking with the East Germans what they think about it. And then, after that period of electioneering has taken place, the people will go to the polls and decide what they want. If they want this system, which to Mr. Molotov seems so good, they will vote to take it; if they don't like it, then they

I am really surprised that Mr. Molotov should assume, as he apparently does, that under conditions of free elections, where the people have the right to see and examine what is going on, they will reject the East German system. If the social and economic conditions which Mr. Molotov would preserve are good then they will survive the test of free elections. I believe that the free system of the West is good enough to survive free elections. Apparently, Mr. Molotov does not believe that the system of the East is good enough to survive free elections. But, however that may be, our Directive says that the Heads of Government have agreed on the reunification of Germany by means of free elections, and I hope very much that the Soviet delegation, in loyal performance of the Directive given us, will again examine the matter and put forward either its own proposal for free elections, or which would be much better, accept the proposal which the Western Powers have made.

The four-point Soviet proposal,¹ which has been circulated, makes no provision whatever for free elections in Germany, and I would hope that the Soviet Union, I repeat, would submit a proposal for free elections in Germany, which is what we are directed to do.

129. STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE, NOVEMBER 3, 1955 ²

Mr. Chairman, I have, as I promised Mr. Molotov yesterday,³ read very carefully his speech and the proposals which accompanied the speech.⁴ About half of the remarks of Mr. Molotov concern themselves with the problem of European security, which we have been discussing now for some days. As I read that portion of Mr. Molotov's remarks and then read the further speeches that were made around the table by President Pinay,⁵ Mr. Macmillan,⁶ and myself, it seemed to me that the statements made gave a very full reply to the questions which Mr. Molotov put in relation to the matter of European security.

I would like to associate myself with the eloquent statement which was made by President Pinay. It was I felt an answer of a statesmanlike character, to the points that had been raised by Mr. Molotov.

I feel, after having read the speech on behalf of the Soviet Delegation and the other speeches that were made, that I can confidently reaffirm what I said yesterday—that there is before us a realizable provision of security in Europe by means of a treaty which would conform to our directive; provided—and, of course, this proviso is of the utmost importance—we can make similar progress with respect to the reunification of Germany.

as to concentrate, as closely as we may, as intensely as we may, as constructively as we may, on dealing with the other half of the whole of our first directive; namely, the problem of Germany, and the reunification of Germany.

The Western powers recognized what our directive¹ calls the "close link between the reunification of Germany and the problem of European security." So, in their proposals of last week, six days ago, we submitted not only a proposal in relation to the European security treaty, but, also, as part of our proposal, the amended Eden Plan dealing with the reunification of Germany by means of free elections. That proposal, as I say, was submitted six days ago. Yesterday, the Soviet Union submitted a proposal of its own with reference to the German problem, and asked us to comment upon it.

Perhaps it would not be unfair if we felt that it would be useful if the Soviet Union would comment upon our proposal which was submitted six days ago. That proposal was designed to conform carefully to our directive, and I think deserves comment and consideration which, so far, has been lacking.

In the extensive remarks which Mr. Molotov made yesterday on this subject of Germany, he did not comment upon, either by way of criticism or by way of approval, on the plan which we had submitted. We have a saying that "Silence means consent". I recall I suggested that once in the past, but Mr. Molotov said that was not a Russian proverb.

I am, however, willing to oblige by commenting upon the four-point proposal which Mr. Molotov submitted yesterday. My first reaction was, and my considered conclusion is, that that proposal is principally noteworthy in its complete failure to comply at all with the directive under which we are operating.

The directive of last July on this subject contains four elements. The first is that Germany shall be reunified; the second is that it shall be reunified by means of free elections; the third is that this shall be done in conformity with the national interests of the German people and fourthly, in the interests of European security.

I deal first with the fact that it was agreed there shall be a reunification of Germany. I would observe that whereas the proposal of the Western powers contemplated an actual reunification of Germany and this we hope by next year, the Soviet proposals do not contemplate at all the reunification of Germany.

The various proposals so far submitted by the Soviet Union, which touch on this topic, seem to presuppose not that Germany will be reunified but that Germany will continue to be divided. The four-point proposal of the Soviet Delegation, submitted yesterday, contemplates not the reunification of Germany, but the cooperation of two German states. This, apparently, is the Soviet view of the most that can be expected—certainly for the indefinite future.

I do not think that it is improper for us to ask that the Soviet Union should submit a plan for the reunification of Germany. After all, that is the agreement of the Heads of our Governments; that is the directive they gave us. The Western powers have submitted a plan for the reunification of Germany and it would seem to me that we are entitled to expect from the Soviet Delegation a plan for the reunification of Germany.

Now, I turn to the second element in our directive on the German problem. It says Germany should be reunified "by means of free elections." The proposal submitted by the Western powers meets this requirement of the directive. It contemplates that "free and secret elections should be held throughout Germany, including Berlin at the earliest possible date." It contemplates an electoral law which would be worked out in consultation with German experts taking into account the electoral laws already drafted for this purpose by the Bundestag of the Federal Republic of Germany and in the Soviet zone by the Volkskammer.

Our proposal goes on to contemplate guarantees to assure that the elections will be really free and so that those in any part of Germany who have social programs or economic projects, which they wish to present to the German people, will have a full opportunity to do so.

It contemplates that these free elections will be so supervised that there will be an all-German national assembly which will draft a German constitution and prepare for peace treaty negotiations.

In this way we try to comply with the directive that Germany shall be reunified by means of free elections.

The proposal submitted by the Soviet Union makes no provision whatsoever for the free elections for which our directive calls and indeed, the remarks which accompany the proposal indicate that it is the view of the Soviet Delegation, that free elections are rather dangerous things because it is pointed out no one can be sure in advance what the results will be.

Now, I have here the ballot which was used in the elections in the East-German zone. One could know in advance what would come out of that election because there was only one set of names on the ballot. There was no opportunity to vote for anyone else, and the only freedom that was had was the freedom to put this particular ballot in the ballot box. Then, indeed, one could be sure in advance what would come out, because it was decided in advance what went in.

I admit that with free elections one cannot be sure what the results will be before the elections take place and I realize that that is sometimes inconvenient. It is particularly inconvenient if you turn up on the losing side, as I sometimes have. But that risk is inherent in free elections which are designed to ascertain the popular will, for no one because the results are unpredictable. We are under a directive which requires us to bring about the reunification of Germany "by means of free elections". That is the order of our Heads of Government which the three Western powers have complied with by submitting a plan for free elections in Germany, and I very much hope that the Soviet Delegation will also either accept our plan or submit a plan of its own.

The third element of our directive is that this reunification through free elections shall be carried out in conformity with the national interests of the German people. I underline the words "national interests." The emphasis, you will see, is upon a national Germany not upon a sectional or divided Germany.

The Soviet Delegation has called attention to what it believes to be social gains which have been achieved in a certain portion of Germany and also it feels that there is grave doubt whether these so-called "social gains" will be preserved if the whole people were given an opportunity freely to express their will. Therefore, it seems to be argued by the Soviet Delegation that a national view shall not prevail, but that some form of sectionalism and the maintenance of a divided Germany must be maintained as against a national viewpoint in order to preserve these sectional so-called "gains".

In this respect there seems to be a retrogression not merely from the directive under which we operate, but even from the conditions which existed at the time of the Berlin Conference, when the proposals made by the Soviet Delegation seemed to accept the view that the German people would decide on a national basis what were the social conditions which they wanted to have.

On the 4th of February 1954 the Soviet Delegation submitted a proposal which called for all-German elections—I am quoting now "as a result of which the German people would take their decisions without any interference on the part of foreign countries, concerning the social and state organization of a democratic Germany."¹ In other words, by that Soviet proposal it was conceded that the German people acting as a whole would take their decisions as to the kind of a social system which they wanted and that they would do so without any interference on the part of foreign governments who might prefer to see the Germans maintain one or another social system.

As Mr. Macmillan said yesterday,² the language and the spirit of the directive are that Germany should again become a nation which would determine its own foreign policy and its own domestic policy and decide on a national basis what kind of a social system it wanted. That feature of the directive, it seems, is now abandoned by the Soviet Delegation even though that seems to involve also an abandon-

Republic of their right through a free government, chosen by free elections, to associate themselves with the North Atlantic Treaty¹ and with the Brussels Treaty for Western European Union.²

I am not quite clear, nor has it been pointed out, what are the specific features, for example, of the Brussels Treaty which the Soviet Union finds objectionable.

Is it objectionable that by joining that treaty the Federal Republic agrees closely to limit its military forces—to limit them to a degree far more modest than that which is the case with respect to the so-called GDR?³ Is it objectionable that the Federal Republic of Germany foregoes the right to have atomic weapons, bacteriological weapons and chemical weapons? Is that objectionable? Is it objectionable that under the Brussels Treaty the military establishments and armaments of the Federal Republic are subject to investigation and control through the Brussels Treaty Council representing predominantly states which in the past have suffered from German aggression? Is it objectionable that by that Treaty and by the North Atlantic Treaty the Federal Republic of Germany solemnly is committed to a purely defensive posture for the future?

The Federal Republic of Germany in the exercise of its sovereign rights has followed a foreign policy which carries it into such a course designed to assure that Germany will not be again a militaristic country and that it will live peacefully in association with its neighbors. That is a right which we believe should be preserved for the unified Germany—not that we know or demand that it should exercise its right in any particular way. We provide that it should be entirely free. We do recognize that Germany operating as our directive says upon a “national” basis shall have the right to determine its own foreign policy as well as its own domestic policy.

In this connection I recall a provision of the Eden Plan⁴ which forms a part of the proposal submitted here last week, which reads: “The all-German Government shall have authority to assume or reject the international rights and obligations of the Federal Republic and the Soviet Zone of Germany and to conclude such other international agreements as it may wish”.

In consonance with the directive, our plan affirmatively provides and contemplates that in terms of domestic policy, for example, the kind of social system they want, and also in terms of foreign policy that the German nation as established through free elections will be in charge of its own destiny and decide what it wants: whether it wants to accept or to reject the kind of relations which now exist between either the Federal Republic of Germany and its neighbors to the West or the relations which exist between the so-called GDR try to decide for the Germans what will be their future policy either internally or externally.

That leads me to the fourth element in the directive to which we have referred, namely, that German reunification shall be carried out in "the interests of European security".

Mr. Molotov suggested yesterday that perhaps nations which "were not very close to the conflagration" were not very good judges as to how to prevent a recurrence of such conflagrations for the future. I assume that that had reference to the United States, which is the only one of the four of us whose land was not directly attacked by the Nazi forces. I would say that, while the losses of the United States in the first and second world wars were not as great as some others, nevertheless we did pour out a sufficient volume of blood and treasure in both of those world wars so that I would think that it could be assumed that we would be anxious not to have to do so again.

But if that assumption is not entertained by the Soviet Union, I would think at least that the Soviet Union would recognize that France is a country which is qualified to speak on that subject; and I was deeply moved, as I think all of us must have been, at the words of President Pinay yesterday on this subject.¹ He pointed out a fact which is so clear that none of us who is interested in the peaceful future can be blind to it: namely, that the greatest danger of recreating German militarism is by perpetuating the division of Germany.

I was particularly struck by that because I was at the Versailles Peace Conference—I think I am perhaps the only one here who can claim that honor, if it be such—and I recall the well-intentioned plans which were there evolved and embodied in that peace treaty to prevent a second world war by means of repressions, the division of Germany, and a series of measures, which as it turned out, merely provoked after a period of pacificism a rebirth of fanatical nationalism.

Mr. Molotov has suggested that that rebirth of militarism occurred because they had free elections in Germany. Well, in the first place Mr. Hitler did not come to power through free elections. The last free election held in Germany showed a decline in Hitler's vote. But the fact that he had any large vote at all was due to the pre-existence of measures which aroused fanatical German nationalism. As President Pinay said, any of us who study history must see clearly the lesson which it teaches as we face again the problem of Germany. If we are capable at all of learning from the lesson of history, we must realize that to continue indefinitely the division of Germany is the most dangerous thing that we can do. That is surely the reason why

German people have learned something too. We have all, in varying degrees, suffered greatly from past German aggressions, but I do not think that any nation in history ever suffered as severely as did the German nation as it faced defeat during the closing period of World War II. And if today we see, at least in the Federal Republic of Germany, fifty million Germans who are eager to promote European security by associating themselves with others in a way which will assure a limitation of their armaments, an exclusion of their use of the most dangerous kinds of weapons, and the acceptance of controls, that is because the German people, certainly the German people of this generation, want to make sure that the lesson which they have learned will be accepted and so riveted into the very warp and woof of German life that there will never again be the opportunity for a future generation to commit the follies which have been committed by Germans of the past over a good many generations.

So as we consider this fourth element in our directive, "the interests of European security," let us never forget what is said in the opening of our directive, "the close link between the reunification of Germany and the problems of European security," and let us make sure that we do not perpetuate what, in my opinion, could bring about a rebirth of excessive nationalism in Germany; that is, the continued division of a great people.

So, Mr. Chairman, for the reasons I have given, the explicit mandate we have from our Heads of Government, the reasons for that mandate—reasons which are indelibly marked on the pages of history—let us in truth try to bring about this reunification of Germany. I ask the Soviet Delegation, which has every reason to be moved by the same considerations as I think move us, to submit to us a proposal for the reunification of Germany by means of free elections to be carried out in conformity with the national interests of the German people, and in the interests of European security.

130. STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE, NOVEMBER 4, 1955¹

Mr. Chairman, we have now completed a week of discussion, and now we are about to proceed into three days of recess, and it did occur to me that it might be useful to try to sum up the position that we are now in.

We are working still on the first item of the Directive,² European security and Germany. In that matter, I recall that we were in force; the denial of assistance to an aggressor; the limitation, control, and inspection of armed forces and armaments; and the establishment of a zone between the East and the West in which the disposition of armed forces will be subject to mutual agreement.

The Directive then goes on to say that "The Heads of Government recognizing their common responsibility for the settlement of the German question and the reunification of Germany, have agreed that the settlement of the German question and the reunification of Germany by means of free elections, shall be carried out in conformity with the national interests of the German people and the interests of European security".

The three Western powers, in an effort faithfully to carry out the Directive, submitted on October 28 [27] a proposal¹ which did take account of the close link between the reunification of Germany and the problems of European security. Our proposal ties the two together and comprises, on the one hand, a proposal with reference to security on the assumption that Germany will be reunified as our Heads of Government agreed; and, on the other hand, a concrete proposal for the reunification of Germany by means of free elections as our Directive specifies.

The Soviet Union on October 28 submitted a proposal for European security,² which almost wholly ignored the specifications of our Directive as to security features which we were instructed to consider. Furthermore, it ignored the instruction to take account of the close link between the reunification of Germany and the problems of European security. This Soviet security proposal did not recognize any link at all between security and the reunification of Germany; on the contrary, it assumed the division, and, apparently, the indefinite division of Germany. Subsequently, on the 31st of October, the Soviet Union made new security proposals,³ which, although they still disregard the link with German reunification, did more fully meet the specifications of the Directive as to the scope and nature of security. Because of that, these new proposals approached those which had been made on October 28 [27] by the Western powers in conformity with the Directive.

In a statement which I made at our fifth session on November 2,⁴ I made a comparative analysis of the Western security proposals and the new proposals of the Soviet Union, and pointed out, item by item, the extent to which, by conforming to the Directive, they coincided with each other.

Of course, there remains the fundamental and critical difference that our security proposal presupposed a united Germany, while the Soviet proposal presupposed a divided Germany. Nevertheless, the as to the close link between the reunification of Germany and European security.

I do not minimize the serious problems which will, no doubt, arise as we undertake the task of converting our security proposals, now presented in general terms, into concrete treaty clauses. Nevertheless, it is encouraging that, subject to the fundamental and critical difference which I have referred to, there is a very considerable measure of agreement in principle as to how to get security in Europe.

Mr. Molotov has asked a good many questions about our security proposals, questions which we have answered even though Mr. Molotov does go on asking them again. Perhaps his confusion comes from the fact that it is indeed difficult to have a complete meeting of minds until we know we are both proceeding from the same premise, namely, the reunification of Germany.

So, that is where we stand on European security.

With respect to the reunification of Germany, the Soviet Delegation still continues to be totally unresponsive to the specific direction under which we are operating. The only proposal of the Soviet Union is a proposal which says that, and I quote from it: "The German people are deprived of the possibility of living in a united state", and which, accordingly, calls for a consultative council to be formed by representatives of the so-called German Democratic Republic and the German Federal Republic.¹

The Soviet Union has not submitted any proposal for the reunification of Germany by means of free elections and so far declines to consider the proposal which the Western powers have made in this respect.

So that is where we stand with respect to German reunification.

I find it hard to believe that this rigid and unresponsive position of the Soviet Union is final.

The Soviet Delegation may now believe, as it so ardently argues, that there is no close link between the reunification of Germany and European security. But the four Heads of Government agreed, last July, that there is a close link between European security and the reunification of Germany, and they instructed us to take that into account.

The Soviet Delegation may now believe that, as its proposal says, the Germans do not now have "the possibility" of living in a united state. But the four Heads of Government determined, last July, that Germany had that possibility and that Germany should be reunified.

The Soviet Delegation may now believe, as it so ardently argues, that free elections are bad. But the four Heads of Government agreed, last July, that Germany should be reunified "by means of free elections."

The Soviet Delegation may now believe, as it so ardently argues, that G should take place, and take place in conformity with the "national" interests of the German people. There was no precondition that there should be preserved a sectional system which has been imposed from without and which the German people, once they become again a whole nation, may, if they wish, either accept or repudiate.

It may be tiresome that I repeat, again and again, the refrain of adhering to our Directive. I cannot, however, in good conscience do otherwise. The four Heads of our Governments reached an agreement last July at Geneva which gave rise to new hopes throughout the world.

President Eisenhower, on returning from Geneva, made a radio and television broadcast to the American people¹ in which he referred to these agreements that had been made and he said, "We are profoundly hopeful that these assurances will be faithfully carried out." Then he went on to say, "The acid test should begin next October because then the next meeting occurs. It will be a meeting of the Foreign Ministers. Its principal purpose will be to take the conclusions of this conference as the subjects to be discussed there and the general proceedings to be observed in translating those generalities that we talked about into actual, specific agreements."

We believe, Mr. Chairman, that our task here is to carry out faithfully the assurances that were given last July and to translate those assurances into actual, specific agreements. That is why we have joined with Britain and France in making specific proposals with reference to European security, which took into account the close link between that security and the reunification of Germany. That is why we submitted concrete proposals for the reunification of Germany by means of free elections.

We are, as President Eisenhower said, facing the acid test. I hope that we shall pass it. Certainly if we fail it will not be because of any unwillingness on the part of the three Western delegations to see that the assurances of last July will, in fact, be faithfully carried out.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

131. PROPOSAL BY THE AMERICAN, BRITISH, AND FRENCH DELEGATIONS, NOVEMBER 4, 1955²

Reunification of Germany by Free Elections

On the joint initiative of the Governments of France, the United Kingdom, the United States and the Federal Republic of Germany the reunification of Germany in freedom in accordance with the Plan presented by the Three Powers on October 28 [27]:¹

Draft Decision of the Conference

In conformity with the common responsibility of their government for the settlement of the German question and the reunification of Germany and in compliance with the Directive of their Heads of Government that the settlement of the German question and the reunification of Germany by means of free elections shall be carried out in conformity with the national interests of the German people and the interests of European security, the Foreign Ministers of France, the U.K., the USSR, and the U.S. have agreed as follows:

1. Free and secret elections shall be held throughout Germany during September 1956, for the selection of representatives for an all-German National Assembly to draft a constitution and to form a government thereunder for a reunified Germany.

2. Each of the Four Powers will designate a representative to the Commission to prepare, in consultation with German experts, the electoral law for such elections, including effective provisions for safeguards and supervision to insure the freedom of such elections.

3. The Commission shall undertake its functions promptly and shall submit its report to the Four Powers by January 1956.

132. STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
NOVEMBER 9, 1955²

Yesterday, Mr. Molotov, just returned from Moscow, made a statement on behalf of the Soviet Union.³ It had such grave implication that I asked that we should suspend our meeting until today so as to be able to give his statement deliberate thought. I am now in a position to express the views of my Government.

My first observation is that the Soviet position if persisted in will perpetuate conditions which put in jeopardy the peace of Europe. My second observation is that it strikes a crippling blow at the possibility of developing relations of confidence with the Soviet Union. I ask your permission, Mr. Chairman, to deal with these two points in order.

I.

The Soviet Union says in the most categorical manner that the security of Europe is best assured by a continued division of German future ahead of it because it is moving along the main road of progress and because it has strong and loyal friends." It is, he said, "impossible to accept" a reunification of Germany which might jeopardize that "great future" for this Sovietized segment of Germany.

But, Mr. Chairman, the Directive which brought us here,¹ and which ought to guide us here, did not ask us to judge of the relative merits of social systems as between that of the Federal Republic of Germany and that of the so-called "German Democratic Republic". It told us to reunite Germany in the "national interest". Thus, the German people themselves will determine under what system they want to live.

The problem which our Heads of Government did direct us to study was how to assure European security and German reunification—two problems which the four Heads of Government agreed were closely linked.

It is, I think, a fair interpretation of our Directive that the four Heads of Government recognized that European security would be endangered if there was not a reunification of Germany. Certainly that is the view of the United States Government.

As President Eisenhower pointed out in his address, which opened the Geneva Conference last July, the division of Germany prolonged for over ten years "does a grievous wrong to a people which is entitled, like any other, to pursue together a common destiny. While that division continues, it creates a basic source of instability in Europe. Our talk of peace has little meaning if[,] at the same time we perpetuate conditions which endanger the peace."²

And because our Directive specifically requires us to take account of the close link between the reunification of Germany and the problems of European security, the Western powers[,] loyally complying with the Directive, proposed a security system based upon a reunified Germany.³ The proposals which we made embody greater assurance than have ever before been contrived to preserve the peace. There would be not only solemn undertakings to abstain from aggression, to withhold help to an aggressor, and, in effect, to guarantee against aggression, but there would be physical and material safeguards, consisting of a level of forces to be agreed upon and actual inspection to ensure that these levels were maintained. There would be ample and dependable safeguards, in which the Soviet Union, Poland, and Czechoslovakia would take part, against re-creation of a menacing military force. There would be novel and effective provisions to ensure against any possibility of surprise attack.

These provisions, based on a reunified Germany, would give Europe a security which it has not known for hundreds of years. Indeed the merit of the proposals we made was so obvious that the Soviet Soviet Union has made, are predicated upon the continued division of Germany.

As President Eisenhower said again and again last July, "European security and the reunification of Germany are inseparable." It is not possible to have European security without the reunification of Germany.

I recall that Mr. Molotov, speaking on October 31, 1939, after the outbreak of the Second World War, referred to the relations between Germany and the other Western European States during the preceding two decades, and to what he called the "German efforts to break the fetters of the Versailles Treaty." "This it is", he said, "that in the long run led to the present war in Europe."¹

The Versailles Treaty did impose certain fetters upon Germany. But nothing that the Versailles Treaty did compares with the cruelty and injustice of dividing the German people by the separation from Germany of the Soviet Zone comprising 17,000,000 Germans. The anguish of this is demonstrated by the fact that 2,704,680 Germans at the cost of great sacrifice and risks, fled from the Soviet Zone into West Germany. During the last month of October there were 32,871 refugees.

The situation, thus dramatized, cannot be indefinitely perpetuated without grave risk.

Yet, it is to perpetuate this very risk that the Soviet Union finds itself compelled to reject the far-reaching and solid security proposal which I referred to. Surely, better statesmanship than that can be found.

We urge upon the Soviet Government that it should not perpetuate the injustice of a divided Germany with the menace which it carries to European security. Can we not learn from the lesson of Versailles? We make that plea, and we shall go on making it, in the hope, and indeed, in the expectation that before it is too late wisdom will prevail.

II.

I turn now to the effect of the Soviet action upon international relations generally. I recall that Chairman Bulganin, in his opening statement at the July conference, said that the purpose was "to achieve a relaxation of international tension and bring about a feeling of confidence between nations."² In his final speech he said what took place in Geneva "has its positive significance for the relaxation of tension in the relation[s] between states[,] for the re-establishment of the necessary confidence between them.”¹

² Statement of July 18, 1955; The Geneva Conference of Heads of Government, pp. 35-43 (where the English translation of this portion of Mr. Bulganin's remarks differs slightly from that cited by Mr. Dulles).

The Heads of Government had to reconcile many differences before they reached the final agreement which is embodied in the Directive which they gave us. But it was, after much debate, finally agreed that there was a “close link between the reunification of Germany and the problems of European security.” Furthermore, the Heads of Government reaffirmed their common responsibility “for the reunification of Germany.” They “agreed” upon “the reunification of Germany by means of free elections, to be carried out in conformity with the national interests of the German people and the interests of European security”.

The United States Government believed that at the very least this solemn agreement meant that when the Foreign Ministers met there would be a serious discussion both of European security and of the reunification of Germany.

There has been such a discussion with reference to European security; indeed, it produced a considerable measure of agreement on the component elements needed for security. That fact has been noted with satisfaction by both the Western powers and by the Soviet Delegation.

It was, I think, demonstrated that there could be put around a united Germany a dependable framework of European security.

But when we turned to consider the reunification of Germany, the Soviet Delegation refused to consider it at all despite the explicit words in the Directive under which we are operating. The Soviet Delegation refused to consider the proposals of the Western powers—their serious and detailed proposals for German reunification. The Soviet Delegation refused to make any proposals of its own on the subject of German reunification. The Soviet proposal for an “all-German Council” did not even purport to charge that Council with any responsibility to reunify Germany; indeed, it was calculated to perpetuate the division of Germany.

The Government of the United States believes that the refusal of the Government of the Soviet Union even to discuss seriously the reunification of Germany involves a grave breach of the agreement of the Heads of Government. The effect of this is bound to affect adversely the overall relations of the Soviet Union with other countries including the United States.

I would be less than frank if I did not say that so far as the United States is concerned, what has happened here has largely shattered such confidence as was born at the Summit Conference at Geneva. There can, of course, be peace and a limited degree of working here the problem of disarmament and the development of relations between the East and the West. But I am bound to say that these discussions will profit us little when we feel that we cannot make agreements between us which are dependable.

III.

Mr. Chairman, the peoples of all the world were heartened by the agreement of the Heads of Government reached here last July. As President Eisenhower said in his closing statement at the Conference, ". . . only history will tell the true worth and reach of our session together. The follow-through from this beginning by the respective Governments will be decisive in the measure of our success." And he went on to say, "The work of our Foreign Ministers as they strive to implement our Directive, will be of great importance. Perhaps, even more important [perhaps of even more] than what we have done here.]"¹

I greatly fear that what has been done here, or, more accurately, what has not been done here despite the explicit terms of the Directive, will be viewed with grave discouragement and concern throughout the world.

It is not the desire or the intention of the United States Government that we can control it, to revert to the conditions which existed before the meeting of the Heads of Government last July. It is our intention to continue to strive by all the means in our power for a durable peace. But I do deplore the set-back to European security and the damage to the spirit of Geneva which has been inflicted by the Soviet Union.

When the issues are as great as those here at stake, we must not easily be discouraged. It is still our hope that the Soviet Government, if not now, then soon, may give loyal substance to the agreement of the Heads of Government that Germany shall be reunified through free elections.

When that day comes, European security can be assured. The spirit of Geneva will have borne a major part of the good that it seemed to offer to the world.

133. DECLARATION BY THE FOREIGN MINISTERS OF THE UNITED STATES, THE UNITED KINGDOM, AND FRANCE, NOVEMBER 16, 1955²

Tripartite Declaration on Germany and European Security

Soviet Foreign Minister on what the Four Heads of Government in July agreed were the closely linked problems of German Reunification and European Security. To this end they made a proposal for the Reunification of Germany by free elections in 1956 and for a Treaty of Assurance giving the Soviet Union far-reaching safeguards against aggression when Germany was reunified.

Marshal Bulganin in July had agreed that the Reunification of Germany was the common responsibility of the Four Powers and should be carried out by means of Free Elections. The Soviet Foreign Minister, however, despite the Directive of the Heads of Government, made it plain that the Soviet Government refused to agree to the Reunification of Germany since that would lead to the liquidation of the East German regime. He made counterproposals which would have involved the continued division of Germany as well as the eventual dissolution of the Western security system. It is for this reason that the negotiations have failed.

The Foreign Ministers of France, the United Kingdom and the United States of America are aware that this result must bring a sense of cruel disappointment to the German people, East and West of the Iron border which now unjustly divides them. However, the three Foreign Ministers believe that the Soviet Government will come to recognize that its own self-interest will be served by ending the injustice of a divided Germany. They believe that the Soviet Government will realize that so long as it persists in withholding unity from the German people, thus perpetuating the division of Europe, there can be no solid security in Europe, nor indeed in the world.

The three Western Powers will themselves not cease their efforts to end the injustice and wrong now being done by dividing the German people and will continue to stand ready to contribute to the security which can be enjoyed by all only when Germany is reunified.

Part XI

THE SOVIET UNION

A. GENERAL

1. TENSIONS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE SOVIET UNION: Address by the Secretary of State 1950 ¹

The right and obligation of the Secretary of State to speak on behalf of the American people, to the fellow citizens, or to the representatives of other nations in the conduct of our foreign relations is not derived from any claim on his part of special knowledge or wisdom which makes him right and other people wrong. It is derived from the fact that our forefathers by free choice made out and approved a Constitution. This Constitution, with its amendments and interpretations which have made it a living thing, has survived to this day as an expression of the will of the American people. A President is duly elected under this Constitution and is clothed with a heavy and solemn responsibility to direct the foreign relations of the American people. The President has, in accordance with the advice and consent of the Senate, appointed a man to be Secretary of State to assist him in the conduct of our foreign relations. This right to speak on your behalf results directly from the constitutional processes by which the American people provide a government for themselves in an orderly, clear, and democratic manner.

SOVIET PHILOSOPHY OF IMPERIALISM

A little over 30 years ago, there came into power in one of the countries of the world a group of people who also claim to speak on your behalf. That claim was based not on any constitutional procedure, or on any expression of the will of those who they claimed to represent. It was based on a claim of a monopoly of knowledge made to a monopoly of the knowledge of what was writings of a mid-nineteenth century German economist and theorist Karl Marx.

I have no desire to debate here the errors of one version or another of what is today called "Marxism." But I think it must be recognized in the light of the experience of the last 100 years, that many of the premises on which Marx based his thought have been belied by the known facts of what has actually happened in the decades since Marx made his studies. Marx's law of capitalist accumulation, his law as to the rate of profit, his prediction of the numerical decline of the middle classes and of the increase of the class struggle: none of these calculations has been borne out by the experience of the societies of the West. Marx did not foresee the possibility of democratic solutions.

Furthermore, the body of doctrine now professed by the Moscow-controlled Communists is only tenuously identified with Marx's writings and is largely overlaid with Russian imperialism. We certainly cannot accept the thesis that such a doctrine can serve as the justification for the right of a small group of individuals to speak for the great masses of human beings who have never selected them as their spokesmen and whose own opinions they have never consulted.

Now, for three decades this group of people, or their successors, has carried on as the rulers of that same great country. They have always, at the same time, maintained the pretense that they are the interpreters of the aspirations of peoples far beyond their borders. In the light of that professed philosophy, they have conducted, as masters of the Russian state, a foreign policy which now is the center of the most difficult and troublesome problems of international affairs—problems designed to keep the peoples of the world in a state of deepest apprehension and doubt. In addition to this, they have operated within the limits of the Soviet state on the basis of a domestic policy founded, they say, on the same philosophy.

There are many points in this philosophy, and particularly in the way in which it has already been applied in practice in the Soviet Union and elsewhere, which are not only deeply repugnant to us, but raise questions involving the most basic conceptions of good and evil—questions involving the ultimate moral nature of man. There is no use in attempting to ignore or gloss over the profundity of this conflict of view.

PHILOSOPHY OF A FREE SOCIETY

The free society values the individual as an end in himself. It requires of him only that self-discipline and self-restraint which make the rights of each individual compatible with the rights of every other.

It does not fear, rather it welcomes, diversity and strength from freedom of inquiry and tolerance even of ideas.

THESES OF INTERNATIONAL COMMUNISM

We can see no moral compromise with the contrary international communism: that the end justifies the means and all methods are therefore permissible, and that the human individual is of no importance as against the state.

To our minds, these principles mean, in their practical application, the arrogation to individual human leaders, with all the frailties and limitations, of powers and pretenses which would be willing to concede only to the infinite wisdom and of a Divine Being. They mean the police state, with all it implies; a regimentation of the worker which is hardly distinguishable from slave labor; a loss to society of those things which make life worth living; a denial of the fundamental values embodied in all the great religions of the world.

Here is a moral issue of the clearest nature. It cannot be evaded. Let us make no mistake about it.

Yet, it does not follow from this that the two systems, ours, cannot exist concurrently in this world. Good and evil do exist concurrently in the whole great realm of human existence within every individual, within every nation, and within every human group. The struggle between good and evil cannot be confined to governments. That struggle will go on, as it always has, in the wider theater of the human spirit itself.

But it also does not follow from this coexistence of good and evil that the two systems, theirs and ours, will necessarily exist concurrently. That will depend largely on them, and we ourselves do not find impossibility in the prospect of coexistence with the Soviet system.

However much we may sympathize with the Soviet system for reasons bedded deep in history are obliged to live under it and not attempting to change the governmental or social structure of the Soviet Union. The Soviet regime, however, has devoted a large portion of its energies and resources to the attempt to impose its system on other peoples. In this attempt, it has shown a willingness to resort to any method or stratagem including threats, and even military force.

Therefore, if the two systems are to coexist, some acceptance must be found to free the world from the destructive tensions of a world in which the two systems are in direct least in reasonable security. What is it which the leaders of international communism could do to make such coexistence more tolerable to everyone?

There are a number of things they could do, which, while leaving much yet to do, would give the world new confidence in the possibility of peaceful change, in the principle and processes of peaceful settlement as an effective means of finding workable solutions in areas of disagreement.

Let us look, first, at the points where we and they are perhaps most closely in contact and where the establishment of peace in its narrowest, most limited sense is dangerously impeded by the absence of common ground.

DEFINITION OF TERMS OF PEACE

It is now nearly 5 years since the end of hostilities, and the victorious Allies have been unable to define the terms of peace with the defeated countries. This is a grave, a deeply disturbing fact. For our part we do not intend nor wish, in fact we do not know how, to create satellites. Nor can we accept a settlement which would make Germany, Japan, or liberated Austria satellites of the Soviet Union. The experience in Hungary, Rumania, and Bulgaria has been one of bitter disappointment and shocking betrayal of the solemn pledges by the wartime Allies. The Soviet leaders joined in the pledge at Tehran that they looked forward "with confidence to the day when all peoples of the world may live free lives, untouched by tyranny, and according to their varying desires and their own consciences."¹ We can accept treaties of peace which would give reality to this pledge and to the interests of all in security.

With regard to Germany, unification under a government chosen in free elections under international observation is a basic element in an acceptable settlement. With that need recognized and with a will to define the terms of peace, a German treaty could be formulated which, while not pretending to solve all of the complex and bitter problems of the German situation, would, nevertheless, go far toward a relaxation of a set of major tensions.

With regard to Austria, that unhappy country is still under occupation because the Soviet leaders do not want a treaty. The political and economic independence of Austria is being sabotaged by the determination of the Soviets, camouflaged in technicalities, to maintain their forces and special interests in eastern Austria.

With regard to Japan, we feel that the Soviet leaders could recognize the interest which nations other than the members of the Council of Foreign Ministers have in a Japanese peace treaty and could refrain accepting its report as the basis for a peaceful settlement of the liberated country's problems. They could repatriate Japanese prisoners of war from Siberian camps. They could refrain from subverting the efforts of the newly independent states of Asia and their native leaders to solve their problems in their own way.

USE OF FORCE

With regard to the whole group of countries which we are accustomed to think of as the satellite area, the Soviet leaders could withdraw their military and police force and refrain from using the shadow of that force to keep in power persons or regimes which do not command the confidence of the respective peoples, freely expressed through orderly representative processes. In other words, they could elect to observe, in practice, the declaration to which they set their signature at Yalta concerning liberated Europe.¹

In this connection, we do not insist that these governments have any particular political or social complexion. What concerns us is that they should be truly independent national regimes, with a will of their own and with a decent foundation in popular feeling. We would like to feel, when we deal with these governments, that we are dealing with something representative of the national identity of the peoples in question. We cannot believe that such a situation would be really incompatible with the security of the Soviet Union.

This is a question of elementary good faith, and it is vital to the spirit of confidence that other treaties and other agreements will be honored. Nothing would so alter the international climate as the withholding of elections in the satellite states in which the true will of the people could be expressed.

OBSTRUCTION IN THE UNITED NATIONS

The Soviet leaders could drop their policy of obstruction in the United Nations and could instead act as if they believe the United Nations is, as Stalin himself has recently called it, a serious instrumentality for the maintenance of international peace and security. They are simply not acting that way now.

Their policy of walk-out and boycott is a policy that undermines the concept of majority decision. Indeed, they seem deliberately to entrench themselves in a minority position in the United Nations. This was illustrated last fall when they voted against the Essential Peace Resolution² which solemnly restated and reaffirmed the principles and purposes of the United Nations Charter and which pointed to practical steps which Members should take to support the peace.

majority side. There is nothing artificial about this situation. It has not been the result of any sleight of hand or pressures on our part. We do not have any satellites whose votes we control. The significant fact is that proposals which have commended themselves to a majority of the members of the United Nations have also commended themselves to us.

Let the Soviet Union put forward in the United Nations genuine proposals conducive to the work of peace, respectful of the real independence of other governments, and appreciative of the role which the United Nations could and should play in the preservation of world stability and the cooperation of nations. They will, then doubtless have a majority with them. We will rejoice to see them in such a majority. We will be pleased to be a member of it ourselves.

EFFECTIVE CONTROL OF ATOMIC ENERGY

The Soviet leaders could join us in seeking realistic and effective arrangements for the control of atomic weapons and the limitation of armaments in general. We know that it is not easy for them under their system, to contemplate the functioning on their territory of an authority in which people would participate who are not of their political persuasion.

If we have not hesitated to urge that they as well as we accept this requirement it is because we believe that a spirit of genuine responsibility to mankind is widely present in this world. Many able administrators and scientists could be found to operate such an authority who would be only too happy, regardless of political complexion, to take an elevated and enlightened view of the immense responsibility which would rest upon them. There are men who would scorn to use their powers for the negative purpose of intrigue and destruction. We believe that an authority could be established which would not be controlled or subject to control by either ourselves or the Soviet Union.

ATTEMPTS AT UNDERMINING ESTABLISHED GOVERNMENTS

The Kremlin could refrain from using the Communist apparatus controlled by it throughout the world to attempt to overthrow, by subversive means, established governments with which the Soviet Government stands in an outward state of friendship and respect. In general, it could desist from, and could cooperate in efforts to prevent, indirect aggression across national frontiers—a mode of conduct which is inconsistent with the spirit and the letter of the United Nations Charter.

The standards of conduct of our own representatives from more than a century and a half of American diplomacy. These standards are such that all countries which have accepted our representatives in a spirit of respect and good will over periods of many decades have certainly remained none the less for it. The independence of those countries has not been undermined; their peoples have not been corrupted; their economies have not been scathed by sabotage.

When we now find our representatives treated as criminals, we see great official propaganda machines reiterating that the Soviet is a sinister people and that contact with them is pregnant with danger. We cannot believe that such insinuations are advanced in good faith, and we cannot be blind to the obvious implications of such a charge.

DISTORTION OF MOTIVES OF OTHERS

In general, the Soviet leaders could refrain, I think, from habitually distorting to their own peoples the picture of the world outside their borders, and of our country, in particular.

We are not suggesting that they become propagandists for their country or system other than their own. But the Soviet people know and the world knows with what genuine disappointment and concern the people of this country were brought to the realization that the wartime collaboration between the major Allies might be the beginning of [a] happier and freer era in the association of the peoples of the Soviet Union and other peoples.

What are we now to conclude from the morbid fancies which Soviet propaganda exudes of a capitalist encirclement, of a United Nations conspiracy and systematically plotting another world war? They know, and the world knows, how foreign is the concept of aggression to our philosophy and our political system. They know that they are asking to be the objects of any insincere and effusive demonstration of sentimental friendship. But we feel that the Soviet leaders should at least permit access to the Soviet Union of persons and information from other countries so that other views might be presented to their people.

These are some of the things which we feel that the Soviet leaders could do, which would permit the rational and peaceful development of the coexistence of their system and ours. They are not things which go to the depths of the moral conflict. They are not things which resolve the Kingdom of Heaven. They have been formulated not as moralists but as servants of government, anxious to get on with the practical problems that lie before us, and to get on with

GREATER SECURITY THROUGH COOPERATION

The United States is ready, as it has been and always will be, to cooperate in genuine efforts to find peaceful settlements. Our attitude is not inflexible, our opinions are not frozen, our positions are not and will not be obstacles to peace. But it takes more than one to cooperate. If the Soviet Union could join in doing these things I have outlined, we could all face the future with greater security. We could look forward to more than the eventual reduction of some of the present tensions. We could anticipate a return to a more normal and relaxed diplomatic atmosphere and to progress in the transaction of some of the international business which needs so urgently to be done.

I fear, however, that I must warn you not to raise your hopes. No one who has lived through these postwar years can be sanguine about reaching agreements in which reliance can be placed and which will be observed by the Soviet leaders in good faith. We must not in our yearning for peace, allow ourselves to be betrayed by vague generalities or beguiling proffers of peace which are unsubstantiated by good faith solidly demonstrated in daily behavior. We are always ready to discuss, to negotiate, to agree, but we are understandably loath to play the role of international sucker. We will take the initiative in the future as we have in the past in seeking agreement whenever there is any indication that this course would be a fruitful one. What is required is genuine evidence in conduct, not just in words, of an intention to solve the immediate problems and remove the tensions which divide us. I see no evidence that the Soviet leaders will change their conduct until the progress of the free world convinces them that they cannot profit from a continuation of these tensions.

So our course of action in the world of hard reality which faces us is not one that is easily charted. It is not one which this nation can adopt without consideration of the needs and views of other free nations. It is one which requires all the devotion and resolve and wisdom that can be summoned up. We have had, and continue to have, the assistance and advice of distinguished leaders in all walks of life. We have the benefit of the great public discussion which has been proceeding in the democratic way, by free inquiry and free expression.

It is my purpose in talking with you to point a direction and to define the choices which confront us. We need to stand before the world with our own purpose and position clear.

We want peace, but not at any price. We are ready to negotiate but not at the expense of rousing false hopes which would be dashed.

ahead with the building of a free world which is strong in its in its material progress. The alternative is to allow the free world to succumb, one by one, to the erosive and encroaching power of Soviet expansion.

We must not slacken, rather we must reinvigorate, the democratic efforts which are represented by the European Recovery Program,¹ the North Atlantic² and Rio Pacts,³ the Mutual Assistance Program,⁴ the Point 4 Program⁵ for developing new workshops and assistance in creating the conditions necessary for a growing, many-sided exchange of the world's products.

We must champion an international order based on the United Nations and on the abiding principles of freedom and justice in an international society increasingly torn by destructive rivalries.

We must recognize that our ability to achieve our purposes rests alone on a desire for peace but that it must be supported by the strength to meet whatever tasks Providence may have in store.

We must not make the mistake, in other words, of using the Soviet conduct as a standard for our own. Our efforts cannot be swayed by reactions to the latest moves by the Kremlin. The bipartisan character of American foreign policy has been and must continue to be a constructive task of building, in cooperation with others, the free world in which freedom and justice can flourish. We must not be turned aside from this task by the diversionary thrusts of the Soviet Union. And if it is necessary, as it sometimes is, to deal with a thrust or the threat of one, the effort should be understood as a necessary, though essential, is outside the main stream of our policy.

Progress is to be gained in the doing of the constructive task by giving practical affirmation to the principles by which we live.

The success of our efforts rests, finally, on our faith in our principles and in the values for which this Republic stands. We will need courage and steadfastness and the cool heads and steady nerves of the American people which has always faced the future "with malice toward none and charity for all, with firmness in the right as God gives us to see right, . . ." ⁶

2. SOVIET VIOLATIONS OF TREATIES AND AGREEMENTS

Department of State Memorandum, June 1950 ¹

The instability of peace the world over is due, in large measure, to deliberate Soviet policy and actions and to the wholesale Soviet violation of basic agreements. Because of the U.S.S.R.'s record in ignoring its international pledges, the faith of the world in Soviet signatures had been badly shattered. Whether it be the Yalta agreement or a treaty of friendship, the U.S.S.R. has chosen to ignore its sworn commitments whenever it has found such action advantageous for its own purposes.

As it ruthlessly pursues its expansionist objectives in the postwar world, the Soviet Union is building up a reputation as an irresponsible international marauder. Before the court of world opinion, it stands indicted for disregarding its international treaties and agreements, openly flouting protocols and promises, and encouraging violations of basic human rights by other treaty signatories. Because of its policy of refusal to work in concert with other nations, its preference for abrupt and unauthorized unilateral action, and its apparent determination to impose its will upon the world, the value of agreements with the Soviet Union has been nullified. From Yalta to the present, the broken pledges of the U.S.S.R. have marked international relations. A review of this record is worthwhile.

EUROPE

The uncertain peace of postwar Europe is primarily due to the fact that the Russians have deliberately undermined the foundations upon which peace was to be built. The Soviet Union has violated the Yalta agreement of February 1945,² the Potsdam Declaration of July 1945 [Protocol of Proceedings of the Potsdam Conference of August 1, 1945],³ and the peace treaties so far concluded with the ex-German satellites.⁴ Soviet violation of Allied armistice agreements,⁵ refusal to act in concert with the other Allies on control commissions, and even the ignoring of the decisions of the Council of Foreign Ministers can be added to those. The fact that the framework of peace has never been completed, that Austria still pleads for a treaty, and that the settlement of the German question still plagues Europe is also due to Soviet intransigence and the unreliability of its word.

¹ Department of State Bulletin, July 3, 1950, pp. 8-12. This memorandum brought up to date the document submitted by the Department of State to the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations on June 2, 1948; A Decade of American Foreign Policy, pp. 220, 222.

THE YALTA AGREEMENT

When the Big Three met at Yalta in February 1945 Governments, the United States, the United Kingdom, U.S.S.R., agreed to assist liberated people to form "interim authorities broadly representative of all democratic elements in the population and pledged to the earliest possible establishment through free elections of governments responsive to the will of the people." According to James F. Byrnes, former Secretary of State, Stalin accepted the Yalta agreement without serious dissent in an atmosphere of genial camaraderie.¹ Yet, Soviet actions consistently undermined and made meaningless this formal declaration.

THE POTSDAM DECISIONS AND THE CONTROL COUNCIL

The Potsdam Declaration of July 1945 [Protocol of the Potsdam Conference of August 1, 1945] aimed at the creation of a unified, democratic Germany.² To achieve this, the powers represented at the conference committed themselves to the destruction of German militarism, the wiping out of the punishment of war criminals, the decentralization of the structure of Germany, and the dissolution of concentration camps and economic power. A new democratic German government was to be developed under the supervision of an Allied Control Council (Acc), and the four Allied zone commanders were to enjoy sovereignty in their respective zones unless their powers were limited by Acc legislation. Besides dealing with Germany, the United States, the United Kingdom, and the Soviet Union agreed at Potsdam, among other things, to consult with each other on matters relating to revising the procedures of Allied Control Commissions for Bulgaria, and Hungary.³

The lack of success of the program formulated at Potsdam was laid at the door of the Soviet Union. From the inception of the Potsdam protocols, the U. S. S. R. has a record of wholesale violation of the agreement, refusal to abide by decisions of the Control Council, and a flagrant usurpation of power on the Control Council satellite area.

GERMANY

Moreover, in dealing with Germany, the Soviet Union disregarded promises made at meetings of the Council of Ministers (Comint) and the Big Three, such as the Moscow

German prisoners by that date, but she unilaterally announced a new deadline of January 1, 1950.

Under the Paris CFM communiqué of June 20, 1949,¹ each occupying power in Germany agreed to insure the "normal functioning" of transport between Berlin and the zones as well as between the Soviet and Western zones. Since January 13, 1950, the Soviet authorities have intermittently interfered with traffic between Berlin and Western Germany.

VIOLATIONS OF THE PEACE TREATIES

Upon ratification of the treaties of peace with Hungary, Bulgaria, and Rumania, on September 15, 1947,² the armistice period and the authority of the Allied Control Commissions came to an end. On this date, the treaties entered into force, and the three Governments regained a type of nominal sovereignty. In fact, however, the U.S.S.R. continued to exercise tutelary powers over them. In consequence, the implementation of the treaties is characterized by subservient fulfillment with regard to obligations toward the U.S.S.R. but by evasion, delay, and violations with reference to the Western Allies. The Soviet Union condones and in many cases abets these infringements and, as the tutelary power, must bear responsibility for them.

HUMAN RIGHTS

Under the peace treaties, the Hungarian, Bulgarian, and Rumanian Governments undertook to guarantee the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including freedom of expression of press and publication, of religious worship, of political opinion, and of public meeting. The U.S.S.R. directly aided and abetted these Governments in failing to fulfill these human rights clauses. Freedom of expression and of press and publication no longer exists in any of these countries. Freedom of worship is interfered with time and again, either through subtle methods or through drastic procedures such as the trials and imprisonments of church leaders. Freedom of political opinion is also violated by the forceful elimination of all political groups opposing the Communist-controlled governments of these countries.

On April 2, 1949, the United States and Great Britain charged the three Governments with having violated the human-rights obligations of the peace treaties.³ All three Governments issued denials and indicated their unwillingness to adopt the requested remedial measures.

ures.¹ The United States and the United Kingdom informed them² that in the British and American view had arisen concerning the interpretation and execution of treaties. Under the treaties, any dispute concerning the of the treaties, which is not settled by diplomatic negotiation be referred to the heads of the United States, United Kingdom, U.S.S.R. missions in the three countries. On May 31, United States called upon the United Kingdom and U.S.S.R. a meeting of the three heads of mission in each country to disputes which had arisen over noncompliance with the rights clauses. The Soviet Union, in a note of June refused to participate in the meetings, contending that no such had arisen and that there was, therefore, no reason for such. A second United States note, delivered June 30, 1949, regret for the Soviet Union's disregard of the provisions of the and again asserted that disputes did exist between the United States and the three satellite Governments. In a memorandum July 19, 1949,⁶ the Soviet Union reaffirmed its previous position and, since that time, has consistently refused to participate in the meeting on the matter.

By its stand, the Soviet Union violates the disputes clauses of the peace treaties and the offending countries are encouraged to systematically and willfully to violate their treaties.

Besides the flagrant violations of the human-rights clauses, there have been other treaty violations. In each instance, the policy of the Soviet Government is to condone the violation.

HUNGARY

Under article 10 of her treaty, Hungary undertook to observe the prewar bilateral treaties with the Allied and Associated Powers provided that the other contracting party notified the Government, within a period of 6 months of the coming into force of the peace treaty, that she desired to keep in force or revive the treaty in question. Among the prewar treaties coming within the provisions of this article was the Treaty of Friendship, Commerce and Navigation of 1925 between the United States and Hungary. Although the United States Government duly notified Hungary within the prescribed 6-month period, that she desired to keep the bilateral treaty in force, the Hungarian Government has con-refused to fulfill its obligations under article 10 in at least two notable instances: first, in the seizure of United States property; and second, in the arrest and trial of two American citizens, Robert Vogeler and Israel Jacobson, who were held incommunicado without access to United States consular officers.¹

Under article 23 of the peace treaty, Hungary undertook to pay the sum of 100 million dollars as reparations to Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia. On February 27, 1949 (after the Moscow-inspired Cominform declaration of June 28, 1948,² against Yugoslavia), the Yugoslav Minister to Hungary delivered a note to the United States Legation at Budapest stating that the Hungarian Government had failed to abide by article 23 of the treaty and that, as a result of the ill will of the Hungarian Government, the enforcement of article 23 could not be carried out by direct negotiations between the two Governments. The Hungarian Government has, to this day, refused to comply with article 23 of the treaty, and the Soviet Government has refused to participate in a meeting of the three heads of mission at Budapest, provided for in article 40 of the treaty for the settlement of disputes which cannot be solved by direct negotiation.

Under article 28 [26] of the treaty, Hungary undertook to restore all legal rights and interests of the United Nations and their nationals as they existed on September 1, 1939, as well as to compensate such persons for property loss and war damage. The Hungarian Government has given no indication that she intends to compensate American citizens. On November 8, 1949, the United States Legation at Budapest transmitted to the Hungarian Minister for Foreign Affairs four new claims and additional evidence with regard to 116 previous claims.³ Although Hungary has acknowledged receipt of the note, she has taken no action to fulfill these claims.

BULGARIA

The U. S. S. R. has openly aided and abetted the Bulgarian Government in failing to fulfill completely or in totally ignoring treaty provisions limiting the armed forces. The Soviet Union accomplished this fact by supplying Bulgaria with arms, ammunition, and equipment in excess of those needed for the armed force stipulated by the peace treaty. In addition, the U. S. S. R., by negative and extremely dilatory acts, is tolerating Bulgarian failure to reduce these forces to the limits prescribed in article 10 [9]. The U. S. S. R., by negative and obstructionist tactics, aided and abetted the Bulgarian Government in the formation, maintenance, and training of paramilitary organizations, i. e., the militia and the use of this organization by the pertaining to the Bulgarian armed forces or the right to information by investigation. The Soviet Government of the United States-United Kingdom invitation to name a Soviet representative to participate in a proposed survey of the Greek border.¹ It, thereby, encouraged the Bulgarian Government to reply² that, under the terms of the peace treaty, the matter referred to the United States, United Kingdom, and other diplomatic missions. (The Soviet Government had already agreed to participate in any such conventions under article 36 of the 1947 peace treaty to settle disputes concerning the interpretation or execution of the Bulgarian peace treaty.)

RUMANIA

As in Bulgaria, the Soviet Government has consistently refused to cooperate with American and British chiefs of mission to discuss the principles involved in the implementation of the military provisions of the peace treaty with Rumania. Both the Soviet and British Chiefs of mission agreed to a meeting on this matter, scheduled for May 18, 1948. However, the Soviet Ambassador cancelled the meeting, saying that he was "indisposed," and, on May 20, 1948, addressed a note³ to the American Minister stating that there was no necessity for the proposed meeting and no reason for putting the proposal into effect. Thus, the Rumanian Government has refused to violate the military provisions of the peace treaty.

VIOLATIONS OF AGREEMENT WITH IRAN

Soviet-Iranian relations are based formally on the treaty of friendship of February 26, 1921,⁴ which was reaffirmed in 1947. Article IV of this treaty states:

In consideration of the fact that each nation has the right to determine its political destiny, each of the two contracting parties formally desires to abstain from any intervention in the internal affairs of the other.

In 1942, the U. S. S. R., United Kingdom, and Iran signed a tripartite alliance⁵ in which the two large powers agreed to respect the territorial integrity, sovereignty, and independence of Iran. In the 1947 Tehran declaration,⁷ the U. S. S. R., United Kingdom, and United States expressed their desire for the maintenance of the independence, sovereignty, and territorial integrity of Iran. As a signer of the United Nations Charter, the U. S. S. R. is bound by article II (par. 4), which states:

All members shall refrain in their international relations from the use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state.

The U.S.S.R., in her relations with Iran, has violated all of these solemn commitments.

The Soviet Government, in a note to the United States on November 29, 1945,¹ admitted that Soviet forces in Iran had prevented Iranian troops from taking action after the outbreak against the Iranian Government in northern Iran. This Soviet action at least indirectly aided the Azerbaijan separatists and, thus, constituted interference in the internal affairs of Iran, in violation of its 1921 pledge of friendship. Furthermore, violations of the tripartite treaty occurred both during and after World War II. By supporting the Azerbaijan separatists while occupying Iran and by its refusal to evacuate its troops except under United Nations pressures, the U. S. S. R. violated the Tehran declaration. The Iranian appeal to the Security Council in January 1946² and its notification to the Council on December 5, 1946,³ that the U. S. S. R. had warned Iran to refrain from moving troops into Azerbaijan were both based upon charges of Soviet interference in the internal affairs of Iran in violation of the United Nations Charter. Moreover, the Soviet radio has repeatedly attacked the Iranian Government on false grounds, has incited the Iranian people to violent action against the government, and has given support to the illegal Tudeh Party.

VIOLATION OF AGREEMENTS INVOLVING THE FAR EAST

KOREA

The Soviet Government openly violated the joint United States U. S. S. R. Moscow agreement for the reestablishment of Korean independence and the economic recovery of the country.⁴ The two powers were to consult in the preparation of proposals for the formation of a provisional Korean government. The U. S. S. R. representative on the Joint Control Commission consistently refused to allow such consultation except under unilateral interpretations of the phrase "democratic parties and social organizations" which, in each case, would have excluded all but pro-Soviet political groups. Moreover, the Soviet delegation refused to consult with Korean groups whose representatives had at any time expressed opposition to the provision for placing Korea under trusteeship, as envisaged in the Moscow agreement.

The Joint Commission agreed to reestablish the movement of persons, motor, rail transport, and coastwise shipping between the zones of north and south Korea. The Soviet Command in north Korea refused to discuss or implement this agreement and resisted efforts toward reestablishing the natural economic unity of the

JAPAN

In the terms of the Potsdam Declaration,¹ defining the terms for the Japanese surrender, Japanese military forces, completely disarmed, were to be permitted to return to their homes "with [the] opportunity to lead peaceful [and] productive lives." On December 8, 1949, the U. S. S. R. signed the Geneva Convention, setting forth the rights and obligations of the Soviet Union regarding the holding of prisoners of war.²

TASS, the official Soviet news agency, on May 20, 1949, announced that there were 95,000 Japanese prisoners of war in Soviet territory still awaiting repatriation. According to Japanese figures, an additional 376,929 Japanese were then still under Soviet control. The discrepancy is explicable either by continued detention of prisoners or an abnormally high death rate. The U. S. S. R. has refused to give any information on the matter and has walked out of United Nations Council meetings in which the problem was broached.

3. DEFENDING THE PEACE FROM SOVIET THRUST by the Secretary of State, April 30, 1951 ³

The common interest around which your organization is organized is one which goes right to the heart of what we are trying to achieve for the world through our foreign policy.

Your organization is one of the major expressions of our great productive power, and, though there may be different opinions about many things, I think all of us will agree that our productive power of ours is one of the key factors, and probably the most important single factor, on which the peace of the world depends.

Although we are blessed with the greatest productive power in all the world, we dare not forget that there are other important concentrations of industrial production in the world. Fortunately, most of the other important concentrations are in the hands of nations who share our basic purposes. This means that a preponderance of industrial power is in the hands of nations who are trying to build, rather than destroy, international relationships based on the principles of the United Nations.

out items that contribute to the defensive strength of this and other free nations.

All of us wish that it were not necessary to do this. We would all much rather be turning out things that are creative and constructive things that make life better for people, rather than weapons of war.

And, we all wish that we could devote a larger portion of our energies to our great constructive programs to assist other free peoples to move toward better standards of living. This is the kind of thing which Americans traditionally prefer to do.

But instead, we are called upon to devote some 15 to 20 percent of our national output to the urgent necessities of military defense.

What I would like to discuss with you today is why this has become necessary and what it is this nation is seeking to do with this strength which you are helping to build.

MENACE OF SOVIET THRUSTS

In the 5½ years that have passed since the end of the war, the men who control the destinies of the Soviet Union have continued to press forward not only with the traditional territorial aspirations of Old Russia but also with the revolutionary aims for world rule of the Bolshevik conspiracy.

This is the threat which requires the rest of the world to build up its defensive strength.

By a combination of a ruthless control system over their own people and false promises to the discontented in many other lands, the men who run this vast conspiracy have been reaching out for more power. And, what is most important for us to understand is that they are reaching out for those critical centers of power which will give them leverage over all the rest.

The object of the Soviet reach for power in this period is to bring within the Soviet sphere of control two critical areas. One of these contains the great industrial capacity of Europe. The other is Asia with its resources, including the present and, more important, the potential industrial capacity of Japan.

With these areas under their control, the Soviet rulers believe that they could dominate the world. They would not only be in a strong position in the event of war but what also is just as important, they would be in a strong position to impose their will on the other parts of the world without having to fire a shot.

It is immediately clear that this would be a very dangerous condition for us and for all free people.

Now, even if we were to leave aside all the considerations of our all that our defense program has to do, but it is, in broad terms, the major task now required of it.

Let us now take a closer look at what we are doing, with the aid of which you are helping to build, to meet these two major Soviet threats in Europe and in Asia.

MEETING THE THRUST IN EUROPE

One arm of our security effort is seeking to meet the Soviet threat against Europe.

I am not going to review with you here all the details of the work we are making under the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, the setting up of General Eisenhower's headquarters and staff, the operation of our military and economic aid program, and the results which show the growing cohesion and strength of the Western European nations. I know that these are familiar to you and that your attention has been following these programs closely.

What I do want to do is to step back and look at the situation in the large, to see this European effort in great block perspective, so that we can come away with a feeling for the whole pattern of what we are trying to do there.

In the large, the people of Europe, with our help, are seeking to harness their growing economic strength to the urgent need for an effective defense system, so that they and their resources, their skills and their industrial plants will not, either through direct attack or through subversion, fall into the hands of the Soviet rulers.

Germany, as I indicated a moment ago, occupies a place of special significance in this effort, because Soviet control over the Ruhr has put the Soviet rulers in a strong position to reach out for a direct thrust into Europe.

The Soviet rulers have long understood this simple strategy.

The whole point of the Soviet tactics in the talks among the Western European Foreign Ministers at Paris¹ has been to retard, and if possible to prevent, the strengthening of the Western European defense system. To do this, they have been trying to drive a wedge between the Western European nations by portraying themselves as the put-upon lovers of peace, and by characterizing our defense measures as aggressive. In this way they have been seeking to prevent the participation of Germany in the Western European defense system.

The increased shrillness of the Soviet representative in the recent talks, Mr. Gromyko, is in a sense the measure of the progress of our defensive effort.

If we weren't getting anywhere with the European defense system, the Soviet representatives wouldn't be making a great noise.

eliminate the weaknesses which invite aggression, the tensions and the dangers of the immediate period may increase.

Since the only alternative to this course would be to remain at a disadvantage and ultimately lose all, we have no choice but to plug ahead, building our combined strength as steadily and as rapidly as we can. That is the only way to work our way through this period of danger.

We have repeatedly said—and our record in these Paris discussions and on many previous occasions makes it clear that we mean what we say—that we are ready to negotiate in good faith now or at any time. But until we are met with equal good faith, and so long as this threat hangs over us, we cannot relax our efforts to build our common strength.

One advantage that the people of Europe start with in building this defensive strength is the remarkable rate of economic recovery they have achieved from the destruction of the war. Great credit is due the people of Europe for this achievement. It does not in any way diminish from the luster of their accomplishment for us to acknowledge the part our aid program has played in that recovery.

Our economic aid program, which was carried forward, appropriately under the name of the Marshall Plan, has been a tremendous success. Make no mistake about that. The evidence of Europe's mounting productive output is not only a testimony to our enlightened and unprecedented effort to assist the people of Europe in rebuilding their war-shattered economy but it is also, even from a narrow interpretation of our own self-interest, a good return on our investment in bolstering our national security.

The urgent problem that remains is to translate an adequate part of this economic potential into the tanks and the planes and the guns needed for defense.

A good start has been made in this direction. But the Soviet military preparations have been going on steadily since the war, and Soviet satellite forces are being built up rapidly, to add to the Soviet capability for intimidation and attack.

The best military minds of this country and of our European allies have been working to devise defense plans and create a defense program which will be adequate to the threat.

It is our goal to build a defense system which will inspire confidence among the people of Europe that they can prevent their homelands from being overrun. It is also our goal to attain a level of defense which will, together with our power, be sufficient to discourage the appetite for aggression altogether.

will a dollar buy? It is evident that the aid we are furnishing our allies so multiplies our common security that it is in fact an economy of use of resources.

Our aid is not only an addition to the billions of dollars in the military budgets of the European countries—but it is often a multiplying factor. To take one example, 55 thousand dollars worth of copper and zinc supplied by us made possible the manufacture of 10 million dollars worth of antitank mines in Britain.

Or, in another case, 300 thousand dollars worth of machinery made it possible for France to produce almost 14 million dollars worth of air frames.

Reduced to its simplest terms, our aid to Western Europe multiplies more security per dollar, faster, than we could possibly achieve for ourselves. And, it is security which is vital both to us and to our allies.

We are well aware that the rapid fulfillment of our common defense program is certain to affect the civilian life, not only of the United States but of all the people with whom we are allied.

Wherever careful planning and cooperation can moderate these burdens, we are endeavoring to bring this about.

This is all part of the complex but essential process by which our combined defense system is now taking shape.

Our progress up to this point has been sufficient, I believe, to give us our confidence that, with time and with effort, we can strengthen the strength of this European defense system sufficiently to parry the Soviet thrust in this direction from achieving its aim. That is necessary to peace and to our security.

THE PATTERN IN ASIA

Now, let us look at the other major Soviet thrust and at what we are doing about it.

The purpose of this thrust is to put the Soviet empire in a position to dominate all Asia, including control over Japan, with its large production and its larger potentialities, with its skilled labor force and its strategic position. By linking the production of the manpower of China and the resources of Asia, the Soviets would be in a strong position to redouble their pressure on the world.

To understand this purpose helps to make clear the meaning of the attack on Korea.

This attack, carried forward by satellite troops, was designed in the first instance to extend Communist control over the entire

How are we dealing with this Soviet strategy for Asia? Again here as in our discussion of the thrust against Europe, I will not go into great detail about the steps we are taking. These details are familiar to you, and what I want to try to bring out is the pattern of our efforts.

The objective of these efforts is to thwart the Soviet attempt to dominate Asia. It is our purpose to help the people of Asia protect their freedom and independence.

One of the major lines of effort in this program is the writing of a peace treaty for Japan.¹ The careful and able work of Ambassador John Foster Dulles has laid the basis for a Japanese peace treaty which will enable Japan to become an equal, peaceful, and self-sustaining member of the world community. It will also put the people of Japan in the best position to contribute to the independence of their country, which, as we have seen, is important to our security as well as to theirs.

The people of Japan have earned our confidence by their steady and responsible course during these difficult months since the attack was launched against Korea, and we look forward to the establishment of permanent bonds of friendship between Japan and all other free nations.

In order that a power vacuum will not be created by a peace settlement with Japan, we are making cooperative arrangements, on the basis of mutual agreement, to insure the independence and the continued security of Japan.²

This agreement is to be one of a series recently announced by the President,³ which are intended as initial steps toward building the basis for security in the Pacific.

Conditions in the Pacific area are substantially different from those which prevail in Europe, and the establishment of security arrangements similar to those in the North Atlantic area are not now feasible. We wish to help the peoples of the Pacific area in their efforts in any way we can, and the present and proposed security arrangements between ourselves and Japan and with the Philippines,⁴ Australia and New Zealand,⁵ to which the President referred, will, we hope, further strengthen the structure of peace in the Pacific.

Our economic and military aid programs are another essential part of this total effort to maintain peace in the Far East.

By demonstrating our friendship for the peoples of Asia and by helping them to achieve and protect their freedom and to make progress against the poverty and misery which oppresses them, we are, at the same time, helping to throw up a bulwark against the Soviet imperialist design, and we thereby strengthen our own security.

Our friendship for the people of China, who are now suffering the complete until all the peoples who are now under the domination of the Kremlin are able to participate freely and independently.

The Soviets are constantly probing for points throughout the world which penetration may be possible. Efforts to penetrate by economic and political means of subversion have now been supplemented by the use of armed invasion and war.

Our military and economic aid programs have been expanded to meet the further threat posed by this Communist use of force.

Supplementing the important aid programs which we have been developing in the Far East, additional military aid has been directed to those areas especially threatened by this military development.

This includes additional aid to Formosa, the Philippines, and other areas. As the President declared following the Communist occupation of Formosa, the occupation of Formosa by Communist forces under such circumstances would be a direct threat to the security of the area and to United States forces in that area.¹ The Secretary of Defense was ordered then to prevent any attack on Formosa. To strengthen the defense of Formosa and insure that Formosa will not fall into hostile hands, we are providing increased military aid.

The aid programs in the Far East meet not only such security requirements as these but also give powerful support to our national security interest by helping the people of Asia lay the basis for stable and developing societies. It is important for us to appreciate that our humanitarian instincts and our own national interests are both served by these programs.

THE TEST OF STRENGTH IN KOREA

Now, we come to the most direct military aspect of our problem: how to deal with the Soviet thrust in Asia. This relates to what various other members of the United Nations are doing to stop the Soviet attack in Korea.

What I have already said should make it clear why it is so vital to our security that this attack in Korea be stopped immediately. We have seen that this attack is part of a design to gain control of all Asia. This attack is also intended to weaken the position of the United Nations, the United States, and others who stand in the way of Soviet ambitions.

There are several other points which have emerged from this conflict and which bear on this conflict in Korea. One is that this is not only a Soviet thrust we must bear in mind. The Soviets are using satellite troops for this aggression, keeping their own forces in reserve. It would further their strategy if we were to expend our major

Our objectives in Korea are very clear, and there should be no misunderstanding about them.

In the simplest terms, we are trying to accomplish three things in Korea:

1. We are trying to stop this act of aggression.
2. We are trying to keep this conflict from spreading, to the extent that it is in our power to do so.
3. We are trying to restore peace and security to the area.

These have been our purposes from the beginning, and these have been the agreed purposes of the United Nations. The United Nations has never contemplated the use of force to accomplish its political objective in Korea, which is the establishment of a unified, independent, and democratic country.

A great deal has already been accomplished by the steadiness with which we have held to these purposes, and above all by the heroic devotion of our men in Korea and their fellow soldiers from other countries. We should not, in the course of the present debate, lose sight of these accomplishments:

First, this act of aggression has not succeeded according to the Soviet plan, and whatever other actions were planned have been interfered with;

Second, the defense against this aggression has served to arouse free men all over the world and has stimulated them to speed up their efforts to build a strong defense system;

Third, new vitality has pulsed through the whole idea of collective security against aggression;

And fourth, this device of satellite aggression has been thoroughly exposed, and its usefulness in other situations has been reduced.

We knew last June, and we know today, that it was right and necessary to stand firm against this attack. If we had not, the whole spirit of resistance against the Soviet grab for power would have been weakened, perhaps fatally.

Now, people are saying: this may be true, but how can the conflict in Korea be brought to an end?

There are two ways in which this situation in Korea may develop. One is that the fighting may spread despite our efforts to limit it. Further acts of the aggressors could touch off world war. If this happens, the responsibility for it will rest squarely on the Kremlin and its agents in Peiping.

The other is that the fighting may be brought to an end in Korea. The best way to do this is for us to continue firm in our determination

The other day at Paris, Mr. Gromyko was playing off the arguments he has been overhearing from this side about Korea. He raised the question whether or not to hold to our course in Korea with firm determination.

Well, we are. But his intervention serves to remind us that in thinking about this action in Korea, we have to keep in mind the total world picture, and the whole threat we face.

The ingredients of peace in the world must include: the speed with which we hold to our course in Korea; the speed with which we build up our strength elsewhere in the world; the speed with which we make common defense arrangements with our allies.

As I said at the outset, the strength and the power to build are essential to our security and to world peace. But the most important is the strength of character and the strength of the American people.

To win through to a period of peace in the world will require the strength and courage and common sense from all of us.

4. AMERICAN FRIENDSHIP FOR THE SOVIET UNION Message From the President of the United States to the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet¹ Transmitted by the Supreme Soviet² Congressional Resolution, July 7, 1951²

I have the honor of transmitting to you a resolution of the Congress of the United States with a request that it be made known by your government to the people of the Soviet Union.

This resolution expresses the friendship and good wishes of the American people for all the peoples of the earth and it expresses the profound desire of the American Government to do everything in its power to bring about a just and lasting peace.

As Chief Executive of the United States, I give this resolution my sincere approval. I add to it a message of my own to the people in the earnest hope that these expressions may lead to a better understanding of the aims and purposes of the United States.

The unhappy results of the last few years demonstrate that diplomatic negotiations among nations will be largely ineffective so long as barriers exist to the friendly exchange of ideas and information among peoples. The best hope for a peaceful world lies in the friendship and peace and brotherhood which lies deep in the heart of every people. But peoples who are denied the normal means of form the basis for trust and friendship. We shall never be able to remove suspicion and fear as potential causes of war until communication is permitted to flow, free and open, across international boundaries.

The peoples of both our countries know from personal experience the horror and misery of war. They abhor the thought of future conflict which they know would be waged by means of the most hideous weapons in the history of mankind. As leaders of their respective governments, it is our sacred duty to pursue every honorable means which will bring to fruition their common longing for peace. Peace is safest in the hands of the people and we can best achieve the goal by doing all we can to place it there.

I believe that if we can acquaint the Soviet people with the peace aims of the American people and government, there will be no war.

I feel sure that you will wish to have carried to the Soviet people the text of this resolution adopted by the American Congress.

(Enclosure)

Senate Concurrent Resolution 11 (82d Congress, 1st session), June 26, 1951¹

Whereas the goal of the American people is now, and ever has been, a just and lasting peace; and

Whereas the deepest wish of our Nation is to join with all other nations in preserving the dignity of man, and in observing those moral principles which alone lend meaning to his existence; and

Whereas, in proof of this, the United States has offered to share all that is good in atomic energy asking in return only safeguards against the evil in the atom; and

Whereas the Congress reaffirms its policy as expressed in law "to continue to exert maximum efforts to obtain agreements to provide the United Nations with armed forces as contemplated in the Charter and agreements to achieve universal control of weapons of mass destruction and universal regulation and reduction of armaments, including armed forces, under adequate safeguards to protect complying nations against violation and evasion";² and

Whereas this Nation has likewise given of its substance and resources to help those peoples ravaged by war and poverty; and

Whereas terrible danger to all free peoples compels the United States to undertake a vast program of armaments expenditures; and

Whereas we rearm only with reluctance and would prefer to devote our energies to peaceful pursuits: Now, therefore, be it abiding friendship of the American people for all other peoples, and declares—

That the American people deeply regret the artificial barriers which separate them from the peoples of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and which keep the Soviet peoples from learning of the desire of the American people to live in friendship with all other peoples and to work with them in advancing the ideal of human brotherhood and

That the American people believe the Soviet Government could advance the cause of peace immeasurably by removing those artificial barriers, thus permitting the free exchange of information between our peoples; and

That the American people and their Government desire neither war with the Soviet Union nor the terrible consequences of such a war; and

That, although they are firmly determined to defend their freedom and security, the American people welcome all honorable efforts to resolve the differences standing between the United States Government and the Soviet Government and invite the peoples of the Soviet Union to cooperate in a spirit of friendship in this endeavor; and

That the Congress request the President of the United States to call upon the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to acquaint the peoples of the Soviet Union with the contents of this resolution.

5. REPLY TO SOVIET CHARGES REGARDING THE MUTUAL SECURITY ACT OF 1951: Note From the American Embassy at Moscow to the Soviet Foreign Ministry, December 19, 1951¹

The United States Government categorically rejects the Soviet Government's allegations² that the Act³ constitutes interference in the internal affairs of the U. S. S. R. or a violation of the undertaking in the Roosevelt-Litvinov correspondence of November 16, 1933.

The Mutual Security Act, by its very title and by all its provisions is clearly designed to strengthen the defense of the Free World and, as regards Europe, to support European freedom through assistance to the defense of the NATO countries. The provision which the Soviet Government referred is intended to provide for victims of oppression, when such assistance has been to contribute to the defense of the North Atlantic area of this nature is in keeping with the traditional United States policy of helping victims of oppression, in this instance to help Europeans who have escaped or may escape to the United States. The United States Government denies the implication of the note that rendering assistance to refugees from oppression is to return them to the oppressor governments constituted by or interference in the internal affairs of those governments.

For the development of this campaign by the Soviet Union against the Mutual Security Program, see also statements by U. S. Representatives to the U.N. General Assembly on Nov. 27, 1951 (ibid., Dec. 24, 1951, pp. 1010-1011); Dec. 13, 1951 (ibid., Jan. 7, 1952, pp. 22-23); Dec. 13, 1951 (ibid., Jan. 7, 1952, pp. 22-23).

THE SOVIET UNION

As has been repeatedly made clear previously, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization was, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations, established for defensive purposes only and not for aggressive aims. The Organization would not have been formed if, since the end of World War II, the U. S. S. R. had not taken an aggressive and threatening attitude toward the individuals of the Free World, who have now joined in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization for their common defense. It is therefore not the purpose of any North Atlantic Treaty Organization assistance authorized by the Mutual Security Act is not, as alleged by the Soviet Government, designed for aggressive purposes against the U. S. S. R. or any other country.

The Soviet note under reference clearly represents an attempt to disrupt particular aspects of the defense of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization by falsely charging that the Organization has aggressive purposes that a specific facet of United States support of the Organization is for aggressive intent against the U. S. S. R.

The United States Government states in conclusion that the charges of interference in Soviet internal affairs come in ill-grace from a regime which has for many years consistently engaged in subversive activities directed against the United States and the nations of the Free World.

6. TRAVEL RESTRICTIONS ON SOVIET OFFICIALS VISITING THE UNITED STATES: Note From the Secretary of State to the Soviet Ambassador at Washington, ¹ March 10, 1952

The Secretary of State presents his compliments to the Ambassador of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and expresses his regret that the Ambassador is unable to visit the United States at this time.

the note verbale dated May 16, 1941,¹ addressed to the United States Embassy at Moscow by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the effect of which has been to restrict the travel in the Soviet Union of American diplomatic and consular officers, as well as of the other members of the staff of the American Embassy at Moscow.

In view of the restrictions which have been placed upon the travel of American diplomatic and consular representatives and employees in the Soviet Union, the Government of the United States is constrained to regulate the travel of Soviet personnel assigned to the Embassy in Washington, Soviet representatives of the official Soviet news agency, Tass, and Soviet representatives of other public media who are assigned for duty in Washington and Soviet official personnel assigned to Amtorg² in New York. Effective immediately Soviet official personnel of the Embassy in Washington, Tass representatives and others who are Soviet citizens assigned for newspaper work in Washington are required not to travel to any point more than 25 miles distant from the center of Washington without previous official notification at least 48 hours in advance. Soviet official personnel assigned to Amtorg shall not travel to any point more than 25 miles distant from the center of New York City without previous official notification at least 48 hours in advance.

In the case of Soviet civilian officials, the notification should be addressed to the Department of State; and in the case of Soviet military personnel to the appropriate Army, Navy or Air Force foreign liaison office. Notification should contain the name of each traveler, complete and detailed information concerning his projected travel including itinerary, points of stopover, and duration of journey.

The United States Government observes that by reason of the action of the Soviet Government in restricting the travel of United States official personnel in the USSR, it is compelled similarly to regulate Soviet official personnel. At the same time the United States Government states it is prepared to reexamine the question of travel regulations in the light of the treatment accorded United States official representatives in the Soviet Union.

7. RECALL OF THE AMERICAN AMBASSADOR: Note From the American Embassy at Moscow to the Soviet Foreign Ministry, October 8, 1952³

The receipt is acknowledged of the note of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of October 3⁴ informing the United States Government that representatives of the press¹ which the Soviet Government characterized as "slandorous attacks hostile to the Soviet Union in gross violation of generally recognized norms of international law."

Ambassador Kennan's statement accurately and in moderate language described the position of foreign diplomats accredited to the Soviet Government. It is this treatment of diplomatic representatives, systematically applied over a period of years by the Soviet Government, which grossly violates the traditions and customs of international intercourse developed over generations.

In the light of the above, the United States Government cannot accept the charges made by the Soviet Government as constituting valid reasons for acceding to the request for the recall of Ambassador Kennan.

8. SUBJUGATION OF FREE PEOPLES BY THE SOVIET UNION: Letter From the President to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives Transmitting a Draft Resolution, February 20, 1953²

Dear Mr. President:

Mr. Speaker:

In my message to Congress of February 2, 1953,³ I stated that I would ask the Congress at a later date to join in an appropriate resolution, making clear that we would never acquiesce in the enslavement of any people in order to purchase fancied gain for ourselves and that we would not feel that any past agreements committed us to any such enslavement.

In pursuance of that portion of the message to Congress, I now have the honor to inform you that I am concurrently informing the President of the Senate (the Speaker of the House) that I invite the concurrence of the two branches of the Congress in a declaration, in which I would join as President which would:

(1) Refer to World War II international agreements or understandings concerning other peoples;

(2) Point out that the leaders of the Soviet Communist Party who now control Russia, in violation of the clear intent of these agreements or understandings, subjected whole nations concerned to the domination of a totalitarian imperialism;

(3) Point out that such forceful absorption of free peoples into an aggressive despotism increases the threat against the security of all remaining free peoples, including our own;

(5) Point out that it is appropriate that the Congress should join with the President to give expression to the desires and hopes of the American people;

(6) Conclude a declaration that the Senate and the House join with the President in declaring that the United States rejects any interpretations or applications of any international agreements or understandings, made during the course of World War II, which have been perverted to bring about the subjugation of free peoples and further join in proclaiming the hope that the peoples, who have been subjected to the captivity of Soviet despotism, shall again enjoy the right of self-determination within a framework which will sustain the peace that they shall again have the right to choose the form of government under which they will live, and that sovereign rights of self-government shall be restored to them all in accordance with the pledge of the Atlantic Charter.¹

I am enclosing a form of draft resolution, which, in my opinion, carries out the purposes outlined above, and in which I am prepared to concur.

(Enclosure)

Draft Resolution ²

Whereas, During World War II, representatives of the United States, during the course of secret conferences, entered into various international agreements or understandings concerning other peoples and

Whereas, The leaders of the Soviet Communist Party, who now control Russia, have, in violation of the clear intent of these agreements or understandings, subjected the peoples concerned including whole nations, to the domination of a totalitarian imperialism; and

Whereas, Such forcible absorption of free peoples into an aggressive despotism increases the threat against the security of all remaining free peoples including our own; and

Whereas, The people of the United States, true to their traditions and heritage of freedom, are never acquiescent in such enslavement of any peoples; and

Whereas, It is appropriate that the Congress join with the President in giving expression to the desires and hopes of the people of the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate and House concurring,

Join with the President in declaring that the United States rejects any interpretations or applications of any international agreements or

Join in proclaiming the hope that the peoples who have been subjected to the captivity of Soviet despotism shall again enjoy the right of self-determination within a framework which will sustain the peace that they shall again have the right to choose the form of government under which they will live; and that sovereign rights of self-government shall be restored to them all in accordance with the pledge of the Atlantic Charter.

9. DRAFT RESOLUTION ON THE SUBJUGATION OF FREE PEOPLES BY THE SOVIET UNION: Statement by the Secretary of State Before the House Foreign Affairs Committee, February 26, 1953 ¹

The resolution proposed to the Congress by the President ² has one crucial, compelling aim. That aim is to make totally clear the integrity of this Nation's purpose in relation to the millions of enslaved peoples in Europe and Asia. The resolution speaks to those who yearn for national and personal freedom and who fear that we may forget them. The resolution also speaks to the Soviet despots who have contrived this enslavement and who hope that we may come to accept it.

To those enduring enslavement, and to those inflicting it, we would make our position clear and firm. We, as a people, never have acquiesced and never will acquiesce in the enslavement of other peoples. Our Nation, from its beginning, was and is inspired by the spirit of liberty. We do not accept or tolerate captivity as an irrevocable fact which can be finalized by force or by the lapse of time. We do not accommodate ourselves to political settlements which are based upon contempt for the free will of peoples and which are imposed by the brutal occupation of alien armies or by revolutionary factions who serve alien masters.

The facts we must face can be simply summarized. Some dozen people in the Kremlin are seeking to consolidate their imperial rule over some 800 million people, representing what were nearly a score of independent nations. The methods of the despots can be judged by the fact that there are some 15 million in forced labor camps in Soviet Russia. Their number amounts to double the total membership of the Soviet Communist Party itself.

This tyranny has been extended far beyond the frontiers of Russia by the cold, calculated subjugation of free nation after free nation. The list is a tragic one: Latvia, Lithuania, Estonia, Poland, Czechoslovakia, East Germany, Hungary, Bulgaria, Rumania, Albania, original puppet leaders within the satellite countries of Europe. In Asia, hundreds of thousands, if not millions, have been slaughtered in a publicized exhibition of terrorism.

We must face these facts. It is a moral obligation to do so—for all peoples have a right to know whether the United States acquiesces in this assault on freedom. It is a practical matter—for the ultimate fate of these peoples can gravely affect the future of freedom in Europe in Asia, and through all the world, including our own United States.

In the glaring light of these facts, the nature of this resolution defines itself. It is a straight-forward statement of American principle and American peaceful but firm purpose.

Some of you may think that American purpose is already clear, so clear that this resolution is superfluous. Let me assure you that that is not the fact. The captive peoples are oppressed by a great fear that at some future time the United States may agree to a partition of the world whereby we would accept and support Soviet dictatorship of alien peoples in the hope of gaining greater security for ourselves. This is not difficult to understand. Soviet propaganda vigorously spreads this fear and there are within the free world some who would countenance such a bargain. The resultant fear is not something to which we can be indifferent. It generates a sense of hopelessness and futility among the captives, which paralyzes the strivings which could operate peacefully to dissolve the unnatural unity of Soviet despotism and return it to its natural and historic parts.

So long as there is doubt as to the attitude of the United States, and I repeat that today there is such doubt, the captive peoples feel that they have no choice but to be passive victims allowing themselves to be made into tools of further aggression. If we want to maintain and stimulate the spirit of freedom which eventually will peacefully frustrate the oppressive design of Soviet despotism and disintegrate that overextended despotism, the first and indispensable step is to make clear, on the highest authority of the President and Congress, that:

One, the United States does not countenance the violations by which Soviet leadership has perverted past agreements and understanding into chains of bondage. That is a result which the American people never intended and which they will never accept.

Two, the United States will never be a party to any international "deal" or "trade" confirming the rule of Soviet despotism over the alien peoples it dominates in Europe and Asia.

Three, the United States seeks, as one of its peaceful goals, that these enslaved national groups of Europe and Asia shall recover genuine independence.

That is the purpose of the resolution now before you.

spirit of the early days of the Republic, to do what we peacefully can do, in order to revive the hopes of those now enslaved.

This resolution is no call to bloody and senseless revolution. On the other hand, it is no idle gesture. It is an act of great historical importance and many consequences will stem from it. As its purpose becomes more and more widely understood, it will, over the coming years, revive the inherent longing for freedom which persists within the captive peoples so that that longing becomes a mounting spiritual power which will eventually overcome the material power of Soviet dictatorship to rule what it has, or to subjugate more.

This resolution looks to the future, rather than to the past. The past is controversial. Should past administrations have made the agreements which they made? Were they foolishly beguiled by Soviet promises? Were they too much moved by considerations of short-term expediency, so that they sacrificed basic principles? Did they exceed their power in what they attempted; for these wartime agreements were never subjected to the constitutional processes of our Government? All of these questions have been, and long will be debated.

The resolution which President Eisenhower has proposed would avoid this realm of controversy. It validates nothing that is invalid. It gives up no rights, if we choose to assert them. It also leaves us free to pursue other courses and take other steps in the future, as circumstances may indicate their desirability.

What the President seeks is a solemn act of dedication for the future. It is an act which needs, and deserves, the support of both great parties. It will provide the indispensable foundation upon which future foreign policies can again build a structure of peace, justice and freedom. Therefore, I beg, let us not on this occasion divisively debate the past. Let us unitedly move on to mold the future.

10. CONDEMNATION OF SOVIET PERSECUTION OF RELIGIOUS AND ETHNIC MINORITIES: Senate Resolution 8 (83d Congress, 1st Session), February 27, 1953 ¹

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate of the United States that the vicious and inhuman campaigns conducted by the Soviet Government and its puppet governments in satellite states in Europe and Asia against minority groups such as the persecution of Greek Orthodox congregations, the imprisonment of Roman Catholic prelates, the harassment of Protestant denominations, the suppression

Resolved further, That the President of the United States be urged to take appropriate action to protest, par through the General Assembly of the United Nations, against the order that the United Nations shall take such action as they see them as may be suitable under its charter.¹

11. PRECONDITIONS FOR ACCOMMODATION WITH THE SOVIET UNION: Remarks by the Secretary of State at the Conference, April 3, 1953²

Nothing that has happened, or which seems to me likely to have changed the basic situation of danger in which we live, are three basic facts which, I think, we should always keep in mind as long as they are the facts.

The first is this: The Soviet Union is a heavily armed state, subject to the dictates of a small group, who controls the life of one-third of the people, and the natural resources of the world.

The second fact is that the leaders of the Soviet Union are deeply hostile to any other state which does not accept Communist control. That is part of their fanatically held belief.

The third fact is that the Soviet Communist leaders have no moral inhibitions against the use of violence. They do not admit the existence of such a thing as the moral obligation to avoid violence.

Now those facts combine to create a grave danger to the world. Nothing that has happened or seems likely to happen in the future ends that danger, or our need, or the need of the world generally, to take precautions against it. That, however, does not prevent accommodations from time to time which may be useful if, but only if, they do not blind us to the permanent danger.

At the moment I see nothing which ends that danger, nor justify us in changing any of our basic defensive policies, or in conjunction with our allies. Now, there are, however, possibilities of useful accommodation that could relate to the exchange of wounded and sick prisoners of war, if good faith is shown in relation to that, then the possibility of an armistice in Korea.

There is a question of an Austrian treaty which is a matter of accommodation.

There are a whole series of outstanding questions persist, to which I referred, we must not, in my opinion, assume that the danger is over and that we are living in a peaceful world which requires neither armament nor our allies.

I see nothing which should delay or hamper the European Defense Community and the other basic policy measures that we are trying to take.

12. TRAVEL RESTRICTIONS ON SOVIET CITIZENS IN THE UNITED STATES: Note From the Secretary of State to the Soviet Ambassador at Washington, ¹ January 3, 1955 ²

The Secretary of State presents his compliments to His Excellency the Ambassador of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and has the honor to state that the following regulations have been instituted and will apply until further notice to travel in the United States by Soviet citizens in possession of valid passports issued by the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics other than Soviet citizen officers and employees of the Secretariat of the United Nations while their conduct is a responsibility of the Secretary General of the United Nations.

Travel will be permitted throughout the United States except in the border zones described in enclosure No. 1, the states and counties listed in enclosure No. 2, those cities which are listed in enclosure No. 3 as closed cities in otherwise open areas, or as otherwise indicated below. Enclosure No. 4 lists open cities in otherwise closed areas.

The prior notification of travel procedure set forth in the Department's note of March 10, 1952,³ is extended to include all resident Soviet citizens who are in possession of valid passports issued by the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics other than Soviet Officers and employees of the Secretariat of the United Nations while their conduct is a responsibility of the Secretary General of the United Nations. Soviet citizens who are temporarily admitted to the United States for some specific purpose which does not involve temporary residence in Washington, District of Columbia, or New York, New York, will not be subject to the prior notification of travel requirement. At the discretion of the Department, they may also be granted access to a closed city or area if their presence in such city or area is germane to the purpose of the visit for which admitted.

Notifications will be addressed to the Department of State, the Army, Navy or Air Force foreign liaison offices, or the United States Mission to the United Nations in New York, New York, as appropriate at least forty-eight hours in advance of anticipated travel.

the name of the traveler or travelers and detailed information concerning the projected travel including itinerary, mode of travel, points and duration of stopovers, and specific carriers if transiting closed areas. Other than for large cities names should be identified by county and state.

Transit travel by railroad or commercial airlines through closed areas will be permitted when such travel is necessary to reach closed areas or open cities in otherwise closed areas. Soviet citizens engaging in such transit travel are not to leave the immediate vicinity of any air or rail terminal located in a closed area or city except when necessary to effect air or rail connection for continuing travel. The transit of closed areas by automobile or bus will not be permitted except by specified routes without intermediate stops between Washington, D. C., and New York, New York; Washington, D. C., and Baltimore, Maryland; New York, New York and Oyster Bay, New York area; Washington, D. C., and the West Coast to the south and west. These routes are specified in enclosure. Applications for exceptional access to recreation and religious areas which fall in a closed area will be considered on the merits of each such application.

The foregoing regulations are comparable to those which the Soviet Union has imposed, presumably for reasons of security, on the movement of United States citizens in the Soviet Union.¹ If the Soviet Union should hereafter conclude that the international situation is such that security requirements enabled it to liberalize its policies restricting the travel of United States citizens in the Soviet Union, the Government would in turn be disposed to reconsider in the light of its own security requirements.

the line of international communism to see the futility of attempting world conquest. Also we hope that there are policies designed better to satisfy the legitimate aspirations of subject peoples. The recent events in Europe to which I have just referred suggest that the time may be nearing when those who are seeking the conquest of freedom will in fact adopt more realistic policies.

I do not want to imply that I think we have achieved our purpose. There are still bad spots as well as good spots. Also, it is not that the international Communists consider that any new policies they now adopt are part of the classic design which Lenin outlined, that "we might have to go in zigzags, sometimes retracing our steps, sometimes giving up the course once selected and trying others,"¹ and which Stalin said involves "maneuvering tactics with a view to effecting a proper retreat when the enemy is too strong." Nevertheless, I do feel a certain sense of encouragement today the tactics of the international Communists suggest that they realize that the free world is in fact "strong" and that they have to give up some of the courses they once selected.

FOUR SOVIET REVERSALS

I have referred to the events of recent days. These events are marked by a striking reversal of many of the policies of the Soviet rulers. They reversed their position with reference to the Yalta State Treaty.³ The consequent withdrawal of Soviet troops from this advanced position in the heart of Europe will be the first time since Europe that the Red forces will have gone homeward since they took their forward positions 10 years ago.

Then there is the pilgrimage of the Soviet leaders to Yugoslavia. For 7 years, since the Yugoslav Government seceded from the Cominform bloc, it has been consistently reviled and threatened. Its leaders were excommunicated by the Soviet Communist Party as guilty of heresy. Now the heads of the Soviet state, who have never before in time of peace left their home country, go to Belgrade to pay homage to peace.⁴ Independence is rewarded, and heresy is condoned. It is bound to have a profound effect throughout the Soviet zone.

On the subject of disarmament, the Soviet Union has recently altered its position.⁵ Its present position contains much not clear or not acceptable to the United States, but at least the Soviet Union now recognizes as valid certain basic propositions which up until now it has consistently rejected. For example, the Soviet Union now no longer insists that any reduction of land armament should be on a percentage basis which would perpetuate, and indeed accentuate, its present superiority in that particular field.

Finally, the Soviet leaders, after having said that consummation of the Paris accords would be a serious impediment to further talks, now seem ready for such talks¹—Pravda's complaint being that we do not seem to be willing to talk long enough.

No one can be confident as to the meaning of these four reversals which have been accumulated within the span of a few weeks. Certainly, one interpretation is that they hope by this show of sweet reasonableness to bring the free nations to a sense of security so that they will abandon measures which have so far enabled them to help each other preserve their freedom. There are, within the free nations some who are tempted by this prospect. For the most part, they look to the United States to see how we interpret the recent Soviet gestures. If we seem to regard them as demonstrating a basic change of Soviet attitude and as indicating that the danger is over, they will hastily follow in that way. In that event much of the solidarity and strength which has been built over past years would quickly disintegrate.

The United States eagerly welcomes, and will fully and in good faith explore, all new possibilities of insuring a just and durable peace. That is the goal to which our Nation is dedicated, and we shall not let pass any opportunities to advance toward it. We welcome recent Soviet deeds which suggest a greater degree of tolerance and a greater acceptance of freedom and independence. However, it would be a great mistake to judge that the danger was now past or to act in such a manner that others might think we judged it past. There could be no worse moment to depart from the policies which the program represents and which have brought us where we are.

We can hope that a new day is coming; but too often men have been lured to their doom by mistaking a false dawn for the real dawn. We must not make that mistake.

B. AIRPLANE INCIDENTS

April 8, 1950 Incident (Baltic Area)

15. NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN AMBASSADOR COW¹ TO THE SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTER,² 1950³

The Ambassador of the United States of America compliments to the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Soviet Socialist Republics and, with reference to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of April 11, 1950,⁴ has the honor to state that the only American military aircraft which was in the Baltic area on April 8, 1950, was a United States Navy airplane which disappeared on that date and no trace of it has since been found.

The United States Navy airplane carried ten persons, all of whom were wholly unarmed. It left Wiesbaden at 10:31 a. m. German time for a flight over the Baltic Sea and two and one-half hours later, as reported by radio crossing the coast line of the British Zone. Many. All American military aircraft operate under strict instructions to avoid flying over any foreign territory in the absence of permission for such a flight from the appropriate foreign government. The investigation conducted by the United States Government has convinced it that the United States Navy airplane in question complied strictly with these instructions and did not fly over German or Soviet-occupied territory or territorial waters adjacent to Germany.

In the Ministry's communication under reference the Soviet Government acknowledges that one of its fighter aircraft fired upon an American plane on April 8, 1950, at 5:30 p. m. Moscow time. In view of the fact that the only American military airplane in the air in the Baltic area on that date was the unarmed United States Navy airplane mentioned above and that this airplane disappeared no time after it crossed the coast line of Germany over German territory or territorial waters, it must be concluded that Soviet fighter aircraft fired upon an unarmed American plane over the Baltic sea, following which the American airplane was lost.

The Ambassador of the United States has been instructed to express in the most solemn manner against this violation of international law.

The United States Government further demands that the most strict and categorical instructions be issued to the Soviet Air Force that there be no repetition, under whatever pretext, of incidents of this kind which are so clearly calculated to magnify the difficulties of maintaining peaceful and correct international relationships.

The United States Government confidently expects that, when its investigation is completed, the Soviet Government will express its regret for the unlawful and provocative behavior of its aviators, will see to it that those responsible for this action are promptly and severely punished, and will, in accordance with established custom among peace-loving nations, pay appropriate indemnity for the unprovoked destruction of American lives and property.

16. NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN AMBASSADOR AT MOSCOW TO THE SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTER, MAY 5, 1950

The Ambassador of the United States of America presents his compliments to the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and, with reference to the Ministry's note of April 21² regarding the lost American airplane has the honor to communicate the following:

The Government of the United States of America notes that the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics continues to refer to an American airplane of the B-29 type, which allegedly penetrated Soviet territory on April 8, despite the fact that it has been made clear that the only American military airplane in the Baltic area on April 8 was a United States Navy airplane of the Privateer type. The United States Government reiterates that this United States Navy airplane was unarmed and was at no time over Soviet or Soviet-occupied territory or territorial waters. It is thus apparent that the Soviet Government's account of this incident is not factual. The reply of the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to the United States Government's communication of April 18 makes it obvious that the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics continues to base its position on the erroneous account which it put forward shortly after the incident occurred and that it has failed to carry out the careful investigation suggested by the Government of the United States which would enable it to correct these errors.

The United States Government categorically denies that the practice impose on members of the family of nations. It is this disregard for law, custom, and the opinion of mankind that is a further obstacle to the establishment of harmonious relations between nations and cannot be reconciled with the Soviet Government's continued protestations of its devotion to the cause of peace.

It is clearly impossible to resolve this issue so long as the Soviet Government refuses to base its position upon the facts. The Government of the United States must, however, bear the responsibility for the action of its Air Force and for the manner with which it has dealt with this incident. The Government of the United States must warn the Government of the [Union of] Soviet Socialist Republics of the seriousness with which it regards the attitude of the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in matters of this consequence.

October 7, 1952 Incident (Habomai Island)

17. APPLICATION BY THE UNITED STATES TO THE SUPREME NATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE, MAY 26, 1954

SIR:

1. This is a written application, in accordance with the Rules and Rules of the Court, submitted by the Government of the United States of America instituting proceedings against the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on account of certain acts committed by fighter aircraft of the Soviet Government on October 7, 1952, in the destruction of a United States Air Force B-29 aircraft and its crew over the Japanese Islands, on October 7, 1952.

The subject of the dispute and a succinct statement of the facts and grounds upon which the claim of the Government of the United States of America is based are adequately set forth in a communication to the Soviet Government on September 25, 1954.³ A copy of this communication is attached to this application as an annex.⁴ The Soviet Government's response to this communication is also attached.

ment has asserted its contentions of fact and law with the United States Government's claim in other diplomatic correspondence on this subject, most recently in a note dated December 1954, a copy of which is also attached to this application.

2. The United States Government notes that the present concerns matters of the character specified in Article 38 of the Statute of the Court, including subdivisions (a) through (d). It will be seen from the annexes,² the legal dispute of the United States Government with the Soviet Government involves serious questions of international law. Among them are the validity of the Soviet Government's claim to sovereignty over the Habomai Islands off Hokkaido, Japan, and in that connection the interpretation of the Treaty of Peace with Japan signed at San Francisco on September 8, 1951.³ In addition there are involved the scope and application of international obligations relating to the overflight of and intercepting military aircraft, together with numerous instances which if resolved in favor of the United States Government would constitute breaches of international obligation by the Soviet Government; and the nature and extent of reparations to be made by the Soviet Government to the United States Government for such breaches.

The United States Government, in filing this application with the Court, submits to the Court's jurisdiction for the purposes of the dispute. The Soviet Government appears not to have filed any declaration with the Court thus far, although it was invited to do so by the United States Government in the note annexed hereto. The Soviet Government is, however, qualified to submit to the jurisdiction of the Court in this matter and may upon notification of this application to the Registrar, in accordance with the Rules of the Court, take the necessary steps to enable the Court's jurisdiction over both parties to the dispute to be confirmed.

The United States Government thus founds the jurisdiction of the Court on the foregoing considerations and on Article 38 of the Statute.

3. The claim of the Government of the United States is briefly that the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on October 7, 1952 willfully and unlawfully caused Soviet aircraft to overfly the territory of Japan, to hover over United States Air Force B-29 aircraft lawfully flying over the Soviet Union, Soviet aircraft doing so unbeknown to the crew of the United States Air Force B-29, and without any provocation to attack the United States Air Force B-29, causing it to crash into the sea at a point between Yuri Island and Akiyuri Island in territory belonging to Japan; that the crew of eight, all members of the United States Air Force and nationals of the United States, have not returned; and that the Soviet Government has concealed United States Government information as to the fate of the crew and has not made provision for the prompt return of any crew member whom it may still be holding or of whose whereabouts it is informed. The damages suffered by the United States Government and for which the Soviet Government is liable to it are specified in the annexed note. The United States Government claims that in the circumstances described in the annex the actions chargeable to the Soviet Government constituted serious violations of international obligation for which the United States Government has demanded and demands monetary and other reparation.

In diplomatic correspondence with reference to this matter, including the Soviet Government's note a copy of which is attached hereto as an annex, constituting negotiations which must now be determined to have been exhausted, the Soviet Government has asserted a version of the facts and of the law contrary to that asserted by the United States Government.

A dispute is therefore presented appropriate for hearing and decision by this Court in accordance with the Statute and Rules.

The United States Government, in further pleadings herein, will more fully set forth the issues of fact and the issues of law in this dispute. It will request that the Court find that the Soviet Government is liable to the United States Government for the damage caused; that the Court award damages in favor of the United States Government against the Soviet Government in the sum of $1,620,295.01 with interest and such other reparation and redress as the Court may deem to be fit and proper; and that the Court make all other necessary orders and awards, including an award of costs, to effectuate its determinations.

4. The undersigned has been appointed by the Government of the United States of America as its agent for the purpose of this application and all proceedings thereon.

Very truly yours,

March 15, 1953 Incident (Kamchatka Peninsula)NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN EMBASSY AT MOSCOW TO THE SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTRY, MARCH 18, 1953¹

The Embassy of the United States of America presents its compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and has the honor to bring the following matter to the attention of the Ministry.

On March 15, 1953, a United States Air Force plane of the RB-50 type was attacked by Soviet fighter aircraft over the open seas at latitude 54:02 North and Longitude 161:04 East. After one of the RB-50 planes of the MIG type opened fire on the RB-50 the latter was forced to return the fire.

It is reported that no damage occurred to the American plane, and no damage was observed with regard to the Soviet plane.

The Embassy has been instructed to protest vigorously this action on the part of the Soviet aircraft. The United States Government wishes to be informed at an early date concerning the disciplinary action taken with regard to the Soviet personnel responsible and also concerning the measures adopted to prevent a recurrence of incidents of this kind.

July 29, 1953 Incident (Cape Povorotny)NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN EMBASSY AT MOSCOW TO THE SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTRY, OCTOBER 9, 1954²

The Government of the United States of America refers again to the destruction on July 29, 1953 by Soviet military aircraft of a United States Air Force B-50 type aircraft off Cape Povorotny in the international air space over the Sea of Japan. On January 26, 1954, during an intensive investigation and study of the incident, the United States Government delivered to the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics a note³ requesting certain detailed information with respect to the incident and with respect to the various statements made by the Soviet Government in prior notes of July 30, ment having failed to reply to the United States Government of January 26, 1954, the United States Government, through the Embassy at Moscow, transmitted another note on May 1, 1954, to the Soviet Ministry of Foreign Affairs inquiring whether the Soviet Government might be expected to reply to the note of January 26, 1954. The Soviet Government has made no reply or acknowledgement to either note, although far more than sufficient time has elapsed to enable the Soviet Government to make a reply or to state its positions with respect to such reply. The United States Government must conclude, therefore, that the Soviet Government is in a position that it is not in a position to make a responsive or adequate reply to the United States Government's note of January 26, 1954.

This circumstance, the United States Government believes, reinforces and confirms the essential accuracy of the findings resulting from the United States Government's own investigation and study, as well as of the statements made in the various communications of the United States Government to the Soviet Government on this subject, particularly the United States Government's communication of August 4, 1953.²

The United States Government therefore takes this opportunity to place solemnly upon the record the facts relevant to the Soviet Government's liability and to prefer against the Soviet Government a formal international diplomatic claim for damages as set forth below.

I

The United States Government is prepared to prove its case in an appropriate forum, and it charges, the following:

1. Early in the morning of July 29, 1953 a four-engine B-50 of the United States Air Force, of the B-50 type, was duly authorized to depart from its base in Japan by United States Air Force authorization to perform a routine navigational mission in the air space over the international waters of the Sea of Japan, returning to base upon completion of the mission. The officers and crew were informed prior to departure that under no circumstances was the aircraft to fly closer to the Soviet-held land mass than twelve nautical miles.

Upon its departure the B-50 type aircraft had on board seventeen persons, all members of the United States Air Force, including nationals of the United States. They were, as the Soviet Government was informed in the United States Government's note of January 26, 1954, the following:

Stanley Keith O'Kelley—Captain—Serial No. AO 776

John Ernest Pasche—Captain—Serial No. AO 802026

Robert Elbon Stalnaker—1st Lieutenant—Serial No. AO 76133

John Cyrus Ward—Captain—Serial No. AO 865270

Francisco Joseph Tejeda—Major—Serial No. AO 726704

Frank Ernest Beyer—1st Lieutenant—Serial No. AO 209328

Francis Luther Brown—Master Sergeant—Serial No. AF 1

Donald Wayne Gabree—S. Sergeant—Serial No. AF 19 33378

Roland Edgar Goulet—A/1C—Serial No. AF 12 323933

James Edwin Woods—A/2C—Serial No. AF 24413122

Charles Joseph Russall—A/2C—Serial No. AF 13 351658

Donald George Hill—S. Sergeant—Serial No. AF 19 353976

Earl Wilbur Radelin, Jr.—A/2C—Serial No. AF 14 370732

The B-50 aircraft proceeded on a course of approximately 31 degrees from the Japanese Island of Honshu. When it arrived in the air space over the international waters of the Sea of Japan at a point approximately 50 miles from the coastline, the aircraft turned to the right and proceeded on an easterly heading, flying at an altitude of approximately 20,000 feet, the crew carrying out the instructions given them as above stated.

The aircraft had reached a point in the air space over the international waters of the Sea of Japan approximately 40 miles south of Cape Povorotny, flying on a heading of approximately 95 degrees and at an altitude of 20,000 feet when suddenly, at approximately 6:15 in the morning local time and without any prior warning whatever, a Soviet MIG-15 type aircraft intercepted and fired upon the United States aircraft. One MIG-15 type aircraft commenced the interception and firing by coming up from below and to the left of the B-50 and shooting the No. 1 engine, rendering it inoperative. One or more additional MIG-15 type aircraft thereupon appeared behind the B-50, directed fire on the No. 4 engine and upon the right wing and other portions of the aircraft, and set the No. 4 engine on fire. When the Soviet MIG-15 aircraft appeared from behind, shooting at the B-50, one or more of the personnel on board the B-50 aircraft opened fire in self-defense against the oncoming attacking MIG-15 aircraft, but to no avail.

Immediately upon being hit, the B-50 aircraft dived sharply, losing altitude rapidly. The shots from the rear attack tore off the right wing and the tail section and caused the aircraft to disintegrate. The component parts of the B-50 then hit the water, at approximately the same position at which the interception and attack took place. The total time which elapsed between the commencement of the chuted, into the Sea of Japan, all coming down at point area of the Sea of Japan approximately 40 miles south of rotny.

The United States Government finds, and charges, actions of the MIG-15 type aircraft above described were the deliberate and willful orders of competent Soviet authorities.

When the B-50 failed to return to its base at the time of its return, and could not be otherwise accounted for, the United States authorities commenced and conducted a wide and thorough search of the area by aircraft and by surface vessels of the United States Government and with the assistance of a surface vessel of the Australian Government in the area. The search aircraft of the United States off Cape Povorotny succeeded in the sighting of the international waters of several survivors and disclosed the actions of the aircraft in the same area of Soviet PT-type boats, trawlers and aircraft. One of the search aircraft dropped a lifeboat to a group of survivors. Only Captain John E. Roche, the co-pilot, was able to reach the lifeboat and get into it. Intermittent fog hampered the search and no other personnel could be rescued by the United States or Australian surface vessels. When the weather in the area cleared by dawn of July 30, 1953, no evidence of survivors, other than Captain Roche, could be seen in the international waters of the Sea of Japan by the air or surface rescue craft.

2. The United States Government finds, and charges, that as a consequence of the Soviet Government's actions above described, the following took place:

- a. The B-50 aircraft was totally destroyed.
- b. First Lieutenant James Gordon Keith, navigator sitting in the nose of the aircraft, was thrown from his position and was wounded, so that he was unable to bail out from the aircraft.
- c. Captain Stanley K. O'Kelley, the aircraft commander, who succeeded in bailing out from the aircraft to the water of Japan, was badly injured and shocked as a direct result of the shooting by the MIG-15 aircraft, and died as a result of his physical injuries and shock and of his exposure for approximately twenty hours in the Sea of Japan.
- d. Master Sergeant Francis Luther Brown, flight engineer, who succeeded in bailing out from the aircraft to the water of Japan, was badly injured and shocked as a direct result of the shooting by the MIG-15 aircraft, and died as a result of his physical injuries and of shock and of long exposure in the Sea of Japan.
- e. Captain John Ernst Roche, the co-pilot, was thrown been accounted for. The United States Government finds, however, that all of them suffered bodily injury and shock as a direct result of the shooting by the MIG-15 aircraft. It finds further that a number of not all, of them successfully parachuted to the surface of the Sea of Japan in the area above described in which the attack and destruction of the B-50 took place. It must conclude that these persons were either picked up alive by surface vessels of the Soviet Government in the area in which they hit the water, or that in due course, dead or alive, they were carried by the prevailing currents to Soviet-held territory and into the Soviet Government's custody. Those dead of the United States Government finds and charges, were brought to their death by the injuries caused in the course of the attack on the B-50 aircraft, by shock and by exposure in the waters of the Sea of Japan. Those that were alive when they came into the custody of the Soviet Government, the United States Government finds and charges, suffered in addition injuries and anguish caused by their long detention by the Soviet Government, by the failure of the Soviet Government to inform the United States Government with respect to their whereabouts and their condition or to permit them to communicate with United States Government authorities.

These conclusions are based on the following considerations:

(i) As the United States Government has previously indicated, personnel on board search craft of the United States Government observed at least twelve Soviet PT-type boats, at least one armed trawler-type Soviet naval vessel, and Soviet aircraft, proceeding at high speed to and from the area of the scene of the incident. Other surface vessels of Soviet nationality were in the vicinity. These observations were made as late as 3 o'clock in the afternoon local time July 29, 1953. In view of the failure of the Soviet Government to make responsive reply to questions of the United States Government in its note of January 26, 1954 on this subject, the United States Government is confirmed in its conclusion, and it charges, that these Soviet craft picked up survivors and portions of the disabled B-50 aircraft.

(ii) The prevailing currents of the Sea of Japan at the position above mentioned and at the date of the incident, which are well known to the Soviet Government, move toward the coast, in a northerly and northwesterly direction at a rate of approximately 0.7 to 1.0 knots. Even if the Soviet Government did not have these crew members in custody, dead or alive, earlier, it must have become aware of their arrival in Soviet territorial waters or on Soviet soil by August co-pilot; First Lieutenant Czyz, First Lieutenant Wiggin. Lieutenant Keith were efficient and experienced navigators.

II

The United States Government finds as a result of its investigation that in its notes above mentioned the Soviet Government knowingly made material misstatements of fact for the purpose of creating an untrue record and of misleading the United States Government. These misstatements of fact are most explicit in the Soviet Government's note of August 26, 1953 on the subject, which substantially reiterates the misstatements contained in the Soviet Government's earlier notes on the same subject:

1. The Soviet Government states that the B-50 aircraft at 6 a. m. local time "violated the state boundary of the USSR in the region of Cape Gamov, and continued the flight over the territory of the USSR at Askold Island not far from Vladivostok. But the Soviet Government has refused, although duly requested, to state where the boundary, which it claims, runs in this region. The United States Government must therefore conclude, as it has concluded, that the B-50 aircraft at no time crossed into territory of the Soviet Union in this area but, on the contrary, flew entirely in the air over the international waters of the Sea of Japan.

2. The Soviet Government states that two Soviet fighter aircraft approached the B-50 with the intention of showing the B-50 that it was within the boundaries of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and with the intention of suggesting that the B-50 was in the airspace of the Soviet Union. This statement must be characterized as false, as well as misleading, since the first intimation which the B-50 had of the approach of any aircraft was the firing of the No. 1 engine on the B-50 by fire directed from a Soviet MIG-15 type aircraft, which had appeared without warning whatever to the left and from below the B-50 aircraft. The fact and the shooting which immediately followed directed by the MIG-15 type aircraft coming up without warning from behind the B-50 aircraft conclusively demonstrates that it was the intention of the MIG-15 interceptors, and of the competent Soviet authorities who dispatched them and controlled their actions, to give the B-50 aircraft no warning whatever but, on the contrary, to bring about the B-50's destruction without any warning or opportunity for the crew to disengage or to defend themselves.

3. The Soviet Government's statement permits the conclusion that the interception of the B-50 by Soviet aircraft took place above, the B-50 aircraft did not open fire until after two firing passes had been made by the Soviet intercepting aircraft. The first MIG-15 type aircraft, which as stated above without warning destroyed the No. 1 engine, flew away unscathed. When immediately thereafter one or more MIG-15 type aircraft appeared from behind, the MIG aircraft were firing and the gunners on board the B-50 were compelled in self-defense to open fire against the MIG aircraft so firing upon the B-50.

5. The Soviet Government states that the attack took place at 6:12 in the morning local time. The United States Government charges that this statement is untrue and is known by the Soviet Government to be untrue. The United States Government has found that the interception and attack took place not earlier than 6:15 in the morning local time, if not later. By this time the B-50 aircraft as the Soviet authorities well knew, had reached a point approximately forty miles off the Soviet land mass at its closest proximity.

6. The Soviet Government states that one of the Soviet aircraft was seriously damaged by fire from the B-50 in consequence of which the Soviet aircraft was compelled to fire upon the B-50. This statement is misleading as well as false. Even if, contrary to fact, the B-50 gunners had opened fire on the MIG aircraft appearing from the rear, the destruction of the No. 1 engine by the MIG aircraft which appeared first and the hostile attitude of the MIG aircraft appearing in the rear would have justified the B-50 gunners in opening fire on the MIG aircraft.

7. The Soviet Government states that after the Soviet aircraft fired on the B-50 the B-50 "departed in the direction of the sea" and that the Soviet authorities have no further information regarding the American military aircraft. This statement must be characterized as false as well as misleading. As stated above, within seconds after the Soviet aircraft hit the right wing and fuselage the B-50 disintegrated and fell into the sea. The pilots of the Soviet aircraft could not but have seen the consequence of their actions and reported it to the competent Soviet authorities. The United States Government notes that the Soviet Government admits that the pilots upon returning to base, if not earlier, reported what they had done and what had happened.

8. The Soviet Government indicates that it has "verified data" presumably including reports of ground observers as well as the testimony of the pilots of the Soviet aircraft involved, and that these data "refute the statement that the American airplane B-50 did not violate the boundary of the USSR and was attacked by Soviet fighters over the Sea of Japan". The Soviet Government, although Soviet surface ships on July 29, 1953 in the area of the Sea of Japan in which the shooting incident took place, and it further in the weather conditions of fog and darkness were such that the statements of the crews of search craft reported in the United States Government's notes were not in fact made. These statements, as indicated, are false and misleading. The weather, during the day of daylight, was in fact foggy but at the low altitudes at which the search aircraft flew, and on the surface of the sea at which the search craft proceeded, there was as the Soviet Government would claim intermittent visibility permitting the observations which were made and which were reported by the United States Government.

10. The Soviet Government states that "as a result of investigation it has been confirmed that the Soviet authorities have no information concerning the crew of the American bomber B-50". For the reasons above stated this statement must be characterized as false and misleading.

III

The United States Government finds and it charges that the unauthorized actions of the pilots of the Soviet aircraft and of the Soviet authorities made the Soviet Government guilty of intentional and willful violations of international law, on account of which the Soviet Government become liable to the United States Government for damages and for other amends:

1. Since the Soviet Government has evaded the question of the United States Government's note of January 26, 1954 on the subject of the incident, the United States Government declares that the limit of the territorial waters of the Soviet Government in the area of the incident is not further than three nautical miles from the mean low water mark of the shore line of the Soviet-held land mass in this area, following the sinuosities of the coast and the sinuosities of each of the Soviet islands. While the United States Government in its instructions to its personnel has prohibited any overflying aircraft or seagoing vessels from coming closer than twelve miles to Soviet-held territory, and in crossing the international waters of the Sea of Japan or the Sea of Okhotsk, above, the United States Government takes this opportunity to inform the Soviet Government that it does not recognize the right of the Soviet Government to territorial waters in excess of three miles from its coast. In the opinion of the United States Government, there is no obligation under international law to recognize the right of territorial waters in excess of three miles from the coast.

2. In the circumstances of the case it was the duty of the United States Government to take all possible steps to prevent the United States Government. The failure of the Soviet Government to do so constitutes violation of international obligations. It was the duty of the Soviet Government to make truthful statements to the United States Government in the notes above mentioned which the Soviet Government delivered to the United States Government in connection with this incident. The willful making of false or misleading statements in these circumstances constitutes a violation of international obligation.

The continued detention of survivors by the Soviet Government, the failure of the Soviet Government immediately upon receipt of information at any time from its own sources of the observation of any of any of the crew members, constitute violations on the part of the Soviet Government of international obligation.

Any shooting by the crew of the B-50 at the MIG aircraft, in the circumstances of the case, was lawful as an exercise of the right of self-defense. The B-50 having been fired upon and hit without prior warning, the crew of the B-50 were justified in the exercise of self-defense in shooting at the approaching MIG aircraft.

IV

The United States has suffered the following items of damage in the consequence of the foregoing illegal acts and violations of duty and international legal obligations, for which the Soviet Government is liable, and the United States Government demands that the Soviet Government pay the following sums on account thereof:

United States Air Force airplane B-50 type No. 47-145A and equipment thereon, amounting in total to $1,468,908.56.

Damages to the United States by the willful and unlawful conduct of the Soviet Government $491,584.38.

Damages to Captain John Ernst Roche, a national of the United States, for injuries to him, $25,000.00.

Damages to the next-of-kin, nationals of the United States, for the deaths of Captain Stanley Keith O'Kelley, Master Sergeant Francis Luther Brown, First Lieutenant James Gordon Keith, $10,000.00.

Damages to the next-of-kin, nationals of the United States, for the remaining thirteen crew members for all injuries resulting from the willful and unlawful conduct of the Soviet Government, including the wrongful deaths of such crew members or the wrongful detention by the Soviet Government of such members of the crew as survived, $650,000.00.

takes this opportunity again to demand that the Soviet Government forthwith provide the information in this regard which the United States Government has already requested, and make arrangements for the prompt return of any crew members whom it may suspect or of whose whereabouts it is informed, and in the interim to care for such crew members with the maximum degree of care and to facilitate access to them by appropriate representatives of the United States Government. The United States Government declares that such demand for compensation with respect to the crew whose bodies came into the custody of the Soviet Government but who were no longer alive does not imply the acquiescence of the United States Government in the failure of the Soviet Government to inform the United States Government of such facts or to deliver to the United States Government such bodies to the United States Government. The United States Government further reserves the right to make additional demands upon the Soviet Government for amends or other action in reparation of its conduct on or since July 29, 1953, with respect to such living or such dead crew members.

Furthermore, the United States Government has no intention of making its demand for damages, specified above, any sum of money or items of intangible injury deliberately and intentionally inflicted upon the United States Government and to the American people by the wrongful actions of the Soviet Government. In this regard, the United States Government had determined to defer to a future date the formulation of the kind and measure of redress or other action which the Soviet Government should take which would be a recognition under international law and practice to confirm the illegality of the actions directed by the Soviet Government against the United States Government and against the American people.

The Government of the United States calls upon the Soviet Government and the Soviet Socialist Republics promptly to make its detailed response to the allegations and demands made in this communication.

Should the Soviet Government in its answer acknowledge its indebtedness to the United States on account of the damages suffered, it agrees to pay the damages suffered and to comply with the demands as above set forth, the United States Government is requested, to present detailed evidence in support of its claims for damages suffered and alleged. If, however, the Soviet Government contests liability, it is requested so to state in its answer. In the latter event, the Soviet Government is hereby notified that the United States Government deems an international dispute falling within the competence of the International Commission on the Status of the Sea and that the United States Government proposes that the

The Soviet Government is requested to inform the Government in its reply to the present note of its respect to such a declaration or Special Agreement.

September 4, 1954 Incident (Sea of Japan)

20. NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN EMBASSY AT THE SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTRY, SEPTEMBER 4, 1954

[First Note]

A U. S. Navy P2V aircraft was attacked without warning by two MIG-type aircraft with Soviet markings at 1818 September 4 (local time). This attack took place over the international waters approximately one hundred miles east of Vladivostok, approximately 100 miles from the Siberian coast.² Each Soviet aircraft fired a missile at the U. S. Navy aircraft and disappeared. The U. S. Navy aircraft was destroyed. To this hour, the wreckage have not been recovered.

The U. S. Government protests this wanton and unprovoked attack on a U. S. Navy aircraft engaged on a peaceful mission in the high seas. The U. S. Government requests that measures be taken to subject those responsible to immediate and appropriate punishment. The U. S. Government reserves all rights to seek compensation for loss of property and lives and for other circumstances resulting from this illegal attack by Soviet aircraft.

21. NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN EMBASSY AT THE SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTRY, SEPTEMBER 5, 1954

[Second Note]

The United States Government rejects as completely unfounded in fact the allegations contained in the Soviet Government's note number 240, dated September 5, 1954, that the U. S. Navy aircraft was shot down by Soviet aircraft on September 4, 1954.

seas some forty miles from the Siberian coast when it without warning and destroyed by two Soviet aircraft did the U. S. Navy aircraft open fire on the Soviet air

The United States Government declares once more the rights to present claims for damages and expects that be taken not only to subject those responsible to in appropriate punishment but also to prevent recurrer wanton and unprovoked attacks.²

June 23, 1955 Incident (St. Lawrence I

22. NOTE FROM THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT TO THE SOVIET GOVERNMENT, JULY 7, 1955

The United States Government acknowledges receipt of a memorandum of the Soviet Government transmitted by the Soviet Minister, Mr. Molotov, to the Secretary of State, Mr. Acheson, on June 25,⁴ regarding the shooting down of a United States aircraft by Soviet military jet-propelled aircraft on June 23, 1955.

The facts in possession of the United States Government accord with the statements set forth in the Soviet memorandum of acknowledgment. The United States plane, of the type known as a "P-51", was on a routine daylight shipping surveillance flight, of a regular character. Such flights have been made at regular intervals for some time past. The plane was on a regular route, which involved, at one point, flying over the waters in the channel between the United States (Alaska) and the Soviet Union.

Carefully verified information discloses: that the United States plane was at no time nearer the Soviet Union than the approach of the above-mentioned channel and was always well within international waters; that it did not at any time fire on the attacking aircraft; that no warning of any sort was given by the Soviet aircraft before they opened fire on the United States plane.

² Ambassador Lodge discussed the Sept. 4, 1954, incident and the June 23, 1955, incident with the U. N. Security Council on Sept. 10, 1954. (Department of State, Office of Public Affairs, News Release, Sept. 10, 1954.)

The United States Government notes the statement of the Soviet Government that due to weather conditions, the possibility of error on the part of the Soviet planes existed in regard to this incident. It is presumed that this possibility of error refers to the geographical position and not the identity of the United States aircraft since it was flying in a clear area above broken lower cloud strata at the time it was attacked.

Taking into account the regret expressed by the Soviet Government at its offer of compensation for damages to the plane and crew by the payment of 50 percent thereof; and, in particular, the statement in the Soviet memorandum that strict orders have been issued by the Soviet Government to its military authorities to refrain from any future action of this character, the Government of the United States is prepared, for the reasons herein mentioned, to regard the Soviet memorandum as providing an acceptable basis for the disposal of this particular incident; noting at the same time, however, that the United States plane acted throughout in a correct and blameless manner in pursuance of its peaceful mission and was in fact attacked over international waters.

In conclusion, the United States Government expresses the hope that the Soviet Government will indeed in the future take all necessary measures to avoid repetition of this and like incidents, a repetition which, if it occurred, would inevitably have a harmful effect upon the relations of our two nations, relations which the United States, for its part, desires to see improved.

"SEC. 11. The President shall, as soon as practicable, take such measures as may be necessary to prevent the importation of fox, kolinsky, marten, mink, muskrat, and weasel furs, dressed or undressed, which are the product of the United States, Socialist Republics or of Communist China."

WHEREAS an important element in determining when it is practicable to apply these provisions to particular articles is to do so consistently with the international obligations of the United States;

PART I

That the application of reduced rates of duty (including import tax) established pursuant to trade agreements hereafter entered into under the authority of section 302 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as originally enacted or as amended (ch. 474, 48 Stat. 943; ch. 22, 50 Stat. 24; ch. 96, 54 Stat. 236; ch. 57, 57 Stat. 125; ch. 269, 59 Stat. 410; ch. 678, 62 Stat. 1053; ch. 697, 64 Stat. 697; Public Law 50, 82d Congress), shall be suspended with respect to imports from such nations and areas referred to in section 5 as may be specified in any notification pursuant to this part of the proclamation given by the President to the Secretary of the Treasury and published in the Federal Register, which are entered, or removed from warehouse, for consumption on such date as may be specified for each such nation or area in the notification, or are so removed and withdrawn thereafter until such date as may be so specified in the notification and so published for the termination of such suspension. 24. SUSPENSION OF PUBLICATION OF AMERIKA AND THE U.S.S.R. INFORMATION BULLETIN: Note From the American Embassy at Moscow to the Soviet Foreign Ministry, July 14 1952¹

The Embassy of the United States of America presents its compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and has the honor to state that it has been instructed to inform the Soviet Government that publication of the magazine "Amerika" is being suspended immediately.

Since the beginning of 1949 it has become increasingly apparent that the Soviet Government, through its agencies, has been engaged in progressive restriction of the full distribution and free sale of the magazine. As a result of this obstruction the number of copies which can be presumed to reach the Soviet public has become so small as not to justify a continuation of this effort of the Government of the United States to supply Soviet readers with a true picture of American life and thus to promote understanding between the two peoples.

In view of the evident unwillingness of the Soviet Government to reciprocate the privileges granted by the Government of the United States to Soviet publications, the Soviet Government is requested to suspend immediately the publication and distribution in the United States of the U.S.S.R. Information Bulletin and supplements thereto. The distribution in the United States by the Soviet Embassy in Washington of pamphlets published at the expense of the Soviet Government or its organs should also be suspended.

The Government of the United States will consider resumption of the publication of "Amerika" at such time as the Soviet Government is willing to grant the magazine the same freedom of publication, distribution and sales which has been accorded Soviet publications in the United States and to grant to representatives of the United States Government facilities which would make it possible for them to verify the extent of distribution actually made.

25. EAST-WEST TRADE CONTROLS: Statement by of Mutual Security,¹ March 3, 1953²

Communist-made weapons and munitions are now the Korean war to commit aggression against the United States to kill and wound men of the United Nations forces including the Republic of Korea, [the] United States, Belgium, Colombia, Ethiopia, Luxembourg, New Zealand, Australia, France, the Netherlands, [the] Philippines, Thailand, and the United Kingdom.

Communist-made weapons and munitions are being used in the Indochinese war against the Vietnamese and French forces. This is an illegal action seeking to overthrow the established Government of Vietnam.

Under these circumstances every possible effort should be made to prevent strategic supplies from reaching the Soviet bloc. This has been done by the free and sovereign nations, including the United States. Much more needs to be done. Much more will be done by President Eisenhower's new Administration.

Our increased efforts will include these measures:

(1) Special moves against what I call the "Triple C Men" who are the "Capitalist-Communist-Collaborators" who operate outside the law and, in a greedy drive for profits, carry on an illegal trade sending strategic materials into the Communist area.

(2) Peaceable but effective measures to stop the sly use of ships carrying strategic materials on a transshipment basis from the West to the Communist area. Special attention will be given to ships originally built and owned by the United States but transferred to foreign nationals or registered under foreign flags.

(3) Cooperation with the appropriate investigating committees of the Congress to develop the facts and devise any remedial action.

(4) Study and consultation with the Foreign Relations and Intelligence Committees of any further legislative measures to carry out more effectively the intent of the Battle Act.

(5) Appropriate participation in the negotiations conducted by the Department of State with other free nations for the control of strategic materials and of shipping.

(6) Coordination with the Departments of State, Defense, Commerce, and other Departments and Agencies to carry out a program of pertinent administrative action.

(7) Appointment of Gen. William J. Donovan as special representative in East-West trade control.

26. ALLIED DISCUSSIONS REGARDING EAST-WEST TRADE

Statement by the Director of the Foreign Operations Administration,¹ March 31, 1954²

Our conferences in London with representatives of the government of the United Kingdom and France on the subject of East-West trade were successful and satisfactory. We reached an agreement. That in itself is important for in standing together there is great strength and essential security.

We agreed on the principles and on the procedure through which these principles would be applied in detail, in cooperation with other friendly countries, in the months ahead. Our agreement is in harmony with the Battle Act³ passed by the U.S. Congress and it is in accordance with the security policies of President Eisenhower's administration.

We do anticipate, compatible with security requirements, an expanded trade with the Soviet Union and with the Eastern European states in the export to them of peaceful goods in exchange for items and materials which the free world can use. The existing tight controls on trade with Communist China and North Korea will be maintained.

I will report the results of our conferences to President Eisenhower and to the Secretary of State.

A number of the technical staff including representatives of the Departments of State, Defense, Commerce, and the Foreign Operations Administration have remained in Europe to follow through the implementation of our agreement.

27. VISIT OF SOVIET STUDENT EDITORS: Statement by the Department of State, March 10, 1955⁴

The State Department on March 10 authorized the American Embassy at Moscow to issue visas to 11 editors of Soviet student and youth newspapers for a 3-week visit to the United States. The Soviet Ministry of Foreign Affairs has indicated that these student editors desire to visit the United States in order to acquaint themselves with American student life.

The Department has asked the Institute of International Education, an organization with wide experience in the field of international student exchange, to undertake to make the necessary arrangements for the reception and itinerary of the 11 Soviet student editors. The Institute of International Education has agreed to respond affirmatively.

28. DISCUSSIONS REGARDING EXCHANGE OF FILMS: Note From the Acting Secretary of State¹ to Ambassador at Washington,² March 17, 1955³

The Acting Secretary of State presents his compliments to the Excellency the Ambassador of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and has the honor to refer to discussions that have taken place concerning the possibility of arranging for exchanges of medical films between the Soviet Union and the United States. Such discussions were held by Professor B. V. Petrovsky, member of the Soviet Socialist Republics Academy of Medical Sciences, and Dr. Paul W. Schafer, Medical Corps, Walter Reed Hospital, Washington, District of Columbia, during the Second World Congress of Medical Sciences held in Washington, D. C., in September 1954, and subsequent discussions between officers of the Soviet Embassy and Major Schafer.

It is understood from the discussions referred to above that the Soviet Union desires to exchange medical films with the United States. On the basis of such an understanding the United States Government is prepared to participate in such an exchange with the Soviet Union.

As a first step in effecting such an exchange there is enclosed a list of films which can be made available to the Soviet Union for its future use. The Soviet Government is requested to indicate which films on the attached list it desires: following the receipt of such notification the requested films will be transmitted to the Soviet Government.

It is believed that the most feasible method of effecting such an exchange of films would be for the Soviet Government to indicate in the list of films which it desires from the United States the titles of the list of Soviet films which it is prepared to make available to the United States. The United States Government would then indicate which of the Soviet films it desires, and such films would subsequently be transmitted to the United States.

The proposal for an exchange of medical films is made by the United States Government on the understanding that the films made available by both Governments will be on a six-month loan basis and that the films made available by each of the Governments during the loan period will be comparable.

29. EXCHANGE OF AGRICULTURAL DELEGATIONS: Note From the American Embassy at Moscow to the Soviet Foreign Ministry May 17, 1955¹

The Embassy of the United States of America presents its compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the U. S. S. R. and has the honor to refer to the Ministry's note of March 10, 1955 concerning the proposal by the Des Moines Register of Des Moines, Iowa, that an exchange of agricultural delegations be arranged between the Soviet Union and the United States.² Reference is also made to conversations in connection with such an exchange held between representatives of the Embassy and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs on May 4 and May 6, 1955.

As the Ministry was advised on May 4, the United States Government takes a favorable view of the proposed exchange of agricultural delegations between the Soviet Union and the United States. In view of the decision by the Soviet Government to designate an official delegation to participate in an exchange, the United States Government is prepared to grant official visas to the members of a Soviet delegation of approximately ten agricultural specialists upon notification by the Ministry of their names and official status.

The United States Government believes that the most advantageous time for the Soviet delegation to visit the United States from the standpoint of agricultural conditions would be during midsummer. It is, therefore, proposed that the Soviet delegation plan to be in the United States from approximately July 10 to August 10, 1955.

In view of the official status of the Soviet delegation, the United States Department of Agriculture will assist in making general arrangements for the tour of the Soviet group in the United States. It is contemplated that the central part of the tour would be concentrated in the State of Iowa, where Iowa State College, at the request of the United States Government, is willing to undertake to make appropriate arrangements for the reception and itinerary of the Soviet delegation. The University of Minnesota will also be included in the itinerary and other visits to areas and installations outside of Iowa of interest to the Soviet delegation from an agricultural standpoint.

The composition of the American farm delegation to visit the Soviet Union, which will have unofficial status, will be determined in consultation with the Department of Agriculture, Iowa State University and other nonofficial institutions and organizations concerned with agricultural matters. The United States Government is pleased to have an indication from the Soviet Government of the approximate size of the American delegation it would be prepared to receive and the most appropriate time for the American delegation to observe Soviet agricultural methods.

Although, as indicated above, the U. S. Department of Agriculture will have general advisory responsibility for arrangements for the tour of the official Soviet delegation, it is the desire of the U. S. Government that the members of the Soviet group have the possible opportunity to observe at first hand the functioning of Soviet farms and installations servicing agricultural needs. With this object in view, and keeping in mind the technical interest of the Soviet agricultural experts, a program will be developed for the members of the Soviet delegation which will permit the members of the delegation to familiarize themselves with U. S. farming methods in the total environment in which they operate. In the State of Iowa, which possesses a great diversity of agricultural conditions, the delegation will be shown the methods and procedures used in connection with the production of corn and raising of pigs and other livestock as well as the central role played in agricultural production by government owned and operated farms. In the U. S. the most efficient method of agricultural production has been developed on the basis of farmers operating on their own initiative, and utilizing as they see fit the various agricultural services provided by local, state, cooperative and Federal Government entities.

The U. S. Government welcomes the opportunity which is provided by the visit of the Soviet agricultural delegation to the Soviet experts these and other aspects of American agricultural practices.

30. EXCHANGE OF AGRICULTURAL DELEGATIONS: by the Departments of State and Agriculture, June 2,

The U.S. Departments of Agriculture and State on June 2 announced that 12 representatives of American agriculture will lead a delegation scheduled to visit the U.S.S.R. between July 1 and August 15.

Since the visit to the Soviet Union will be unofficial, no in agricultural research and extension. It is understood that the party will include various rural areas of the Soviet Union and cultural research and educational institutions.

At present, several hundred persons have expressed interest in making a trip. The national farm organizations, Iowa State College, Ames, Iowa, and other land-grant colleges are being invited to make preliminary nominations. Final selections will be made by a non-party public group to be designated.

The visit to the U.S.S.R. is of a reciprocal nature. The Soviet Union is sending to the United States an agricultural delegation of similar size during the approximate period July 10 to August 10. A considerable amount of time will be spent in Iowa, in accordance with the expressed Soviet interest in corn-hog production.

PROPOSED RUSSIAN-LANGUAGE MAGAZINE: Note From the American Embassy at Moscow to the Soviet Foreign Ministry, September 9, 1955¹

The Embassy of the United States of America presents its compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and has the honor to refer to the views expressed by the President of the United States in addressing the Heads of Government of the USSR, France and the United Kingdom at Geneva on July 22, on the topic of normalizing and increasing East-West contacts.² President Eisenhower said in part:

To help achieve the goal of peace based on justice and right and mutual understanding, there are certain concrete steps that could be taken: (1) to lower the barriers which now impede the interchange of information and ideas between the two sides . . .

The Government of the United States believes that publication, in the USSR, of a Russian language magazine for distribution within the Soviet Union, would constitute a concrete step furthering a fuller interchange of information and ideas.

Accordingly, the Government of the United States proposes the distribution within the USSR of an illustrated Russian language magazine, issued monthly, which would be cultural and nonpolitical in character, devoted to an objective presentation of various aspects of American life. The Government of the United States further proposes that distribution of this magazine be effected as follows: 100,000 copies of each issue to be distributed through Soviet distribu-

In view of the cultural and non-political character of the proposal proposed by the United States, it is assumed that the Soviet Government would not request pre-publication review or any other form of censorship, such as that previously imposed on foreign publications as a war-time emergency measure.

The Embassy awaits the favorable reply of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs to this proposal and is prepared to discuss the details of its implementation with the appropriate Soviet authorities at an early date.

32. EAST-WEST TRADE: Statement by the Secretary of State November 3, 1955 (Summary) ¹

Secretary of Commerce Sinclair Weeks announced on November 3, 1955, a plan to ease controls on private commercial trade in peaceable goods with the European Soviet bloc. In making the announcement, Secretary Weeks said:

This plan is designed to carry out further the objective urged by President Eisenhower at Geneva in July "to create conditions which will encourage to increase the exchange of peaceful goods throughout the world." At the Foreign Ministers Conference in Geneva on October 31, Secretary of State Foster Dulles indicated the intention of the U.S. Government to study and control procedures on shipments of peaceful goods to the Soviet bloc.

Secretary Weeks said that the Bureau of Foreign Commerce is now setting up an initial roster of certain peaceful goods which will be exportable to the European Soviet bloc under general licenses without prior application to the Bureau. Establishment of this roster thus will relieve U.S. exporters of the burden of applying for individual licenses for commodities included on the roster.

Strategic goods, which under present policy are not licit for export to the Soviet bloc, will be excluded from the new roster. Other goods will be included, such as are now being approved for export to the Soviet bloc under individual licenses. Examples of goods recently licensed for shipment to the bloc include tallow, hides, skins, wool rags, cigarettes and tobacco, phosphate rock, and rosin.

Secretary Weeks indicated that the new arrangements are expected to be in effect by the end of the year.

The new procedure will not affect U.S. export controls on goods to Communist China and other Far East Communist points.

D. ENTRY AND RESIDENCE PRIVILEGES OF AMERICAN AND SOVIET CLERGYMEN

33. STATEMENT BY THE DEPARTMENT MARCH 2, 1955 ¹

The American Embassy at Moscow has been advised by the Soviet Ministry of Foreign Affairs that the Soviet Government has expelled the Rev. Georges Bissonnette, an American Roman Catholic priest resident in Moscow. Father Bissonnette has been told by the Soviet authorities that he must depart from the Soviet Union immediately. No reason for Father Bissonnette's expulsion has been given. It is not known by the Soviet Government to Father Bissonnette's American Embassy.

The U.S. Ambassador to the Soviet Union on March 1, 1955, protested vigorously to the Soviet Ministry of Foreign Affairs that the expulsion of Father Bissonnette was a violation of those provisions of the Litvinov Agreement² (the exchange of notes of November 1942 between President Roosevelt and Maxim Litvinov, then Soviet Commissar for Foreign Affairs of the Soviet Union, which confirmed the relations were established between the United States and the Soviet Union) pertaining to freedom of conscience and religious freedom for nationals of the United States on the territory of the Soviet Union. The Soviet Government, however, thus far has refused to change its position regarding Father Bissonnette's ouster.

Pertinent portions of the Litvinov Agreement are as follows:

Father Bissonnette, who was born on July 22, 1892, in Falls, R. I., has been in Moscow since January 25, 1955, under the auspices of the Order of Assumptionists, a Roman Catholic religious organization with headquarters at Worcester, Massachusetts. Bissonnette has no official connection with the American Catholic Church but has served at Moscow under the provisions of the Litvinov Agreement to administer to the spiritual needs of American Catholics in that city.

The Department has been informed by the Order of Assumptionists that plans had already been made, before the recent expulsion, against Father Bissonnette, to send Father Louis F. ... this spring as a replacement for Father Bissonnette. The Order of Assumptionists intends to make application in the near future to the Soviet Embassy for a Soviet entry visa for Father ... he may proceed to Moscow to continue the work of the Order.

to cases of temporary visits to the United States and the Socialist Republics by ecclesiastical figures of the respective countries which have occurred from time to time in the past.

34. NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN EMBASSY TO THE SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTRY, JUNE 1955

The Embassy of the United States of America presents its compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and has the honor to refer to the Ministry's Note No. 20/OSA of March 8, 1955² in connection with the case of the Soviet Union of Father Bissonnette, an American citizen residing in Moscow under the terms of the exchange of notes of 1933 between President Roosevelt and Mr. Litvinov regarding freedom of religion for American nationals residing in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. The Ministry's note under reference, which makes reference to the action taken against Father Bissonnette was in retaliation for the refusal of the United States Government to extend the same to Archbishop Boris of the Russian Orthodox Church, concerning the agreement of November 16, 1933 both countries both agreed to "extend on the territory of their countries to citizens of the other party the right to satisfaction of their spiritual needs by providing pastors, rabbis, or other ecclesiastical functionaries within the territory of the other party".

It will be recalled that the exchange of notes in 1933 was effected by a note from President Roosevelt, the final paragraph of which reads as follows:

We will expect that religious groups or congregations composed of citizens of the United States of America in the territory of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics will be given the right to have their spiritual needs satisfied by clergymen, priests, rabbis or other ecclesiastical functionaries of the United States of America, and that such clergymen, priests or other ecclesiastical functionaries will be protected from all disabilities and will not be denied entry into the territory of the Soviet Union and their ecclesiastical status.³

This is the only paragraph of the note which deals with the question of the right of clergymen to enter the Soviet Union to satisfy the religious needs of American nationals. The final paragraph of the Soviet reply of the same date reads as follows:

Finally, I have the honor to inform you that the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, while reserving to itself the right of entry of Americans desiring to enter the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics apparent that, when considered together, these two notes can mean that American clergymen will be permitted to enter the Union to minister to the needs of American nationals resident although it is recognized that the Soviet Government reserved the right to refuse a visa on "personal grounds". The meaning of the reservation would appear to be that a visa would be refused if an individual applicant were objectionable on some ground other than being a clergyman.

The reservation made by the Soviet Union is not applicable in the present instance, since Father Bissonnette was not expelled because of objection to him personally but simply in retaliation for action taken by the United States Government in connection with Archbishop Boris.

There is no condition of reciprocity contained in the Soviet note of November 16, 1933, and the proposal in the United States note of the same date was confined to rights for American clergymen. That no reciprocity was provided for in these particular notes appears to have resulted from the fact that the Soviet Government gave no indication at the time of being concerned with the problem of sending Soviet clergymen abroad. Furthermore, the fact that the notes contained no provision for reciprocity cannot be regarded as accidental, since the exchange of notes between President Roosevelt and Mr. Litvinov on the same date relating to noninterference in political affairs contains a provision for reciprocal adherence to the engagements undertaken.

Therefore the view of the United States Government that there is no basis for the claim of the Soviet Government that the United States is bound by the terms of the November 16, 1933 agreement to permit American clergymen from the Soviet Union to minister to the religious needs of Soviet nationals in the United States.

On the other hand, the United States Government regards the action of the Soviet Government in expelling Father Bissonnette as a violation of the terms of the 1933 agreement. This violation is made more clear in that the expulsion of Father Bissonnette from the Soviet Union was undertaken, not because of objection to Father Bissonnette on personal grounds, but solely in retaliation for the action of the United States Government to permit the extension of a visa to the United States of the Soviet Archbishop Boris, whose position in the United States was not comparable to that of Father Bissonnette in the Soviet Union. Archbishop Boris was admitted into the United States on a temporary visa to deal with matters pertaining to the reorganization of the Russian Orthodox Church in the United States.

spiritual needs of Americans in Moscow and had no Soviet citizens of the Roman Catholic faith. Due to the Soviet Government, Father Bissonnette was unable to work in the Roman Catholic church in Moscow and was forced to live in a small apartment for this purpose.

The United States Government considers as irrelevant to the matter at issue the question raised in the Ministry's note of June 1955 with respect to the practice of the Moscow Patriarchate in designating heads of the Russian Orthodox Church in the United States. It may be noted, however, that no interference by the United States Government has ever been interposed to the appointment of the Moscow Patriarchate of officials of that segment of the Russian Orthodox Church in America which recognizes the right of the Moscow Patriarchate to make appointments of this kind. Where the appointees are not United States citizens, the conditions of their entry into the United States are necessarily determined in the context of the United States immigration laws and regulations. As is the case with the action of the United States Government in permitting the entry of the United States of Soviet clergymen, including most recently Archbishop Germogen and Archbishop Boris, the United States Government has not objected in principle to the temporary entry of United States of Soviet ecclesiastics for the purpose of conducting legitimate church affairs.

In reiterating its protest against the expulsion of Father Bissonnette the United States Government requests that favorable consideration be taken with regard to issuance of a Soviet entry visa for Louis Dion, who has been designated by the Assumption of the Virgin to succeed Father Bissonnette and who made application for a Soviet visa at the Soviet Embassy in Washington, D. C. on May 10, 1955.

If the Soviet Government now considers it desirable to permit Soviet clergymen be admitted to the United States in order to meet the religious needs of Soviet nationals, the United States Government is prepared in the interest of reciprocity to extend to a Soviet citizen the same possibilities of entry and religious activity as are accorded to American clergymen in the Soviet Union under the terms of the November 16, 1933 agreement.

35. STATEMENT BY THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE NOVEMBER 15, 1955 ¹

issued to Soviet Archbishop Boris constituted a violation of the terms of the November 16, 1933, Roosevelt-Litvinov agreement, which established diplomatic relations between the two countries and which provides for the presence of American clergymen in the Soviet Union to minister to the spiritual needs of American nationals. Nevertheless, the United States Government in this note stated:

If the Soviet Government now considers it desirable that Soviet clergymen be admitted to the United States in order to minister to the religious needs of Soviet nationals, the United States Government is prepared in the interest of reciprocity to extend to a Soviet clergyman the same possibilities of entry and religious activity as those accorded to American clergymen in the Soviet Union under the terms of the November 16, 1933 agreement.

The Embassy's note of June 27, 1955, pointed out the sharp contrast between the functions of an American priest ministering to American Catholics in the U. S. S. R. and the functions of a Soviet archbishop heading an American church organization in the United States, and requested that Father Bissonnette's appointed successor, Father Louis Dion, be granted the Soviet visa for which he had applied on March 23, 1955.

No direct reply was made by the Soviet Government to our note of June 27, 1955, and its voluntary offer of reciprocity permitting a Soviet clergyman to attend to the religious needs of Soviet nationals in the United States. On September 8, 1955, the Soviet Ministry of Foreign Affairs requested our Embassy to issue unlimited visas to Archbishop Boris and his secretary, and Father Dion was advised by the Soviet Embassy in Washington that it was prepared to issue him a Soviet visa. A request by our Embassy on September 14, 1955, to be informed if by its action of September 8 the Soviet Government was accepting the basis set forth in our June 27 note relative to the permissible activity of a Soviet clergyman in the United States elicited no Soviet response.

In the absence of such response and following Father Dion's acceptance of a Soviet visa, the American Embassy in Moscow was instructed to issue U. S. visas to the Archbishop and his secretary emphasizing at that time that these visas were being issued on the understanding that the Archbishop's functions in the United States would not exceed those permitted Father Dion in Moscow. This action was undertaken November 4, 1955.¹

From the text of a Soviet response of November 10, 1955,² it is apparent that the Soviet Government continues to insist that the admission of Father Dion to tend the spiritual needs of a few American Catholics in Moscow requires the admission of Archbishop Boris into so that their U. S. visas could be canceled. At the willingness of the U. S. Government to admit a Soviet clergyman to fulfill functions comparable to those permitted the American clergyman in Moscow was reaffirmed.

36. NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN EMBASSY TO THE SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTRY, DECEMBER 2, 1955

The Embassy of the United States of America presents to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the U. S. S. R. the following note: The U. S. Government has the honor to refer to its Note No. 118 of December 2, 1955.² Essentially, this note again supports the view of the Soviet Government that Archbishop Boris should be granted the privilege of traveling to the United States to function as resident Exarch of the Russian Orthodox Church in America before the American clergyman, Father Dion, will be permitted to enter the Soviet Union to perform the modest functions which his predecessors fulfilled under the November 16, 1933 agreement which established diplomatic relations between the USA and the USSR.³ It is regrettable that the Soviet Government has seen fit since its expulsion of Father Dion in March 1955⁴ to link these dissimilar cases.

Properly considering each of these matters in its own context, the United States Government holds to the position expressed in the Embassy's note of June 27, 1955⁵ that the right of American nationals to tend the spiritual needs of American nationals in the Soviet Union rests on the terms of the November 16, 1933 agreement. Consequently, the Soviet Government's expulsion of Father Dion and its present negative attitude toward the American clergyman constitute a clear violation of that agreement.

Although the Ministry's Note of March 8, 1955⁶ claimed that the November 16, 1933 agreement precluded reciprocity with regard to Soviet clergymen in the United States, the United States Government perceived no objection to the principle of reciprocity. Consequently, the Embassy advised the Soviet Government on June 27, 1955 and has subsequently reiterated that the United States Government is prepared to grant a Soviet clergyman the same privileges and facilities of tending to the religious needs of Soviet nationals in the United States as those accorded to American clergymen in tending the religious needs of American nationals in the Soviet Union. In spite of the absence of a positive Soviet response to this Order has been advised orally by the Soviet Embassy in Washington that Father Dion should not attempt to utilize his Soviet visa until such time as the question of the entry of Archbishop Boris into the United States is resolved. The United States Government requests that this counsel be revoked and that no further obstacles be placed in the way of Father Dion's early departure for the Soviet Union.

The Soviet Government's action in linking the entry of Archbishop Boris with that of Father Dion has tended to confuse the issues involved and to complicate a clear understanding of the United States Government's position with regard to the entry of Archbishop Boris. Divorced from the irrelevant and extraneous considerations introduced by the Soviet Government in dealing with these two distinctly different problems simultaneously, this position may be summarized as follows:

The United States Government has not objected to temporary visits to the United States by Soviet ecclesiastics for the purpose of conducting legitimate church affairs. Archbishop Boris and his predecessor, Archbishop Germogen, were admitted temporarily for this purpose, and in both cases their visas were extended subsequently to permit a longer stay in the United States than that for which they were originally admitted. However, the Department continues to feel that it is neither appropriate nor desirable for Archbishop Boris, a Soviet national who is a high-ranking official of the Orthodox Church in the Soviet Union, to reside indefinitely in the United States as head of one of the Russian Orthodox Church groups in the United States.

The Embassy's request of November 12, 1955¹ that the passports of Archbishop Boris and his secretary be made available for the cancellation of their visas is reaffirmed. This cancellation can be effected by United States consular officials at any United States diplomatic mission or consular office abroad.

E. DISCUSSION OF SOVIET-AMERICAN RELATIONS AT THE GENEVA CONFERENCE OF HEADS OF GOVERNMENT, JULY 18-23, 1955 duties as Commander-in-Chief in time of war or to conferences at the end of the war, and to provide for that would bring about a peace.

37. ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT ON THE EVE OF HIS DEPARTURE FOR THE CONFERENCE, JULY 15, 1955²

But now, for the first time, a President goes to conference with heads of other governments in order to in order to see whether in this time of stress and strain devise measures that will keep from us this terrible afflicts mankind.

Now, manifestly, there are many difficulties in the President going abroad for a period, particularly while Congress is in session. He has many constitutional duties. He must perform them. I am able to go on this trip only because of the generous cooperation of the political leaders in Congress and the parties who have arranged their work so that my absence will not interfere with the business of the Government.

On my part I have promised them that by a week on July twenty-fourth, I shall be back here ready to resume my accustomed duties.

Now, it is manifest that in a period such as this, the President to spend abroad, we cannot settle the details of the problems that afflict the world. But, of course, I go for a very specific purpose. This purpose is to attempt, with my colleagues, to change the situation that has characterized the intergovernmental relations of the world during the past ten years.

Now, let us think for a moment about this purpose. I will enumerate a few of the problems that plague the world: the arms race, the burden of armaments and the burdens that people are forced to bear because of the necessity for these armaments. The problem of the states, once proud people, that are not allowed their independence, their government freely chosen by themselves and under independent election by themselves.

The problem of divided countries, people who are related to each other by blood kinship and divided by force of arms in such a way that they are indeed expected to be hostile to each other. The problem of international interference in the internal affairs of free governments, bringing about a situation that leads to further difficulties and recriminations within a country, so that it leads to revolution.

These problems are made all the more serious by the competition between governments. These problems of which I speak have arisen as the aftermath of wars and conflicts. But go on, they are divided also by differing ambitions, by differing ideological and tedious negotiations that must take place before the details of these problems can be settled.

For many post-war conferences have been characterized too much by attention to details; by an effort apparently to work on specific problems rather than to establish the spirit, and the attitude in which we shall approach them. Success, therefore, has been meager. Too often indeed these conferences have been mere opportunities for the gratification of nationalistic ambitions, or indeed only for sounding the drums for the propaganda that the participants want to spread to the rest of the world.

If we look at this record we would say, "Why another conference? What hope is there for success?" Well now the first question I ask is "Do we want to do nothing? Do we want to sit and drift along toward the inevitable end in such a contest of war or increased tensions?" We want peace. We cannot look at this whole situation without realizing first that pessimism never won any battle, whether it was in peace or it was in war.

Next we will understand that one ingredient has been missing in all these conferences. An honest intent to conciliate, to understand, to be tolerant, to try to see the other fellow's viewpoint as well as we see our own. I say to you if we can change the spirit in which these conferences are conducted we will have taken the greatest step toward peace, toward future prosperity and tranquillity that has ever been taken in all the history of mankind.

I want to give you a few reasons for hope in this project. First, the people of all the world desire peace. This is peace for peace everywhere. I distinguish between people and governments. For the moment when we know that the great hordes of men and women who make up the world do not want to go to the battlefield. They want to live in peace. Not a peace that is a mere stilling of the passions but a peace in which they can live happily, tranquilly, and in confidence that they can raise their children in a world of which they can be proud. That common desire for peace is something that is a powerful force in this world and to which I believe all political leaders of the world are beginning to respond. They must recognize it.

Another item; did you note this morning the speech made by Nikhita Khrushchev in Moscow? Every word he said was along the line that I am now speaking. He talked of conciliation and tolerance and understanding. I say to you—I say to all the world—if the words he expressed are as truly reflective of the hearts and minds of the people in the Kremlin as we are sure they are reflective of the hearts and minds of all the people in Russia, as in the hearts and minds of the people in the rest of the world, then there will be no trouble or another, in a divine power. It believes in a Supreme this, my friends, is a very great factor for conciliation this time because each of those religions, each one of one of its basic commandments the words, terminology, to our Golden Rule. "Do unto others as you would have you." This means that the thinking of those people ideas of right and justice and mutual self-respect, con the other man. And this means peace, because only in p conceptions as these prevail.

This means that the free people of the world hate want peace and are fully dedicated to it. Now this cou free countries, maintains arms. We maintain formatio all the modern weapons. Why? Because we must. A spirit that has prevailed up to now is going to prevail we cannot expose our rights, our privileges, our homes, children, to the risk that would come to an unarmed co

But we want to make it perfectly clear these arma reflect the way we want to live; they merely reflect t present conditions we have to live.

Now it is natural for a people, steeped in a religiou when they come to moments of great importance, may such as now we face, to turn to the Divine Power th his own heart, believes in his own heart, for guidance for some help in doing the thing that is honorable an have no doubt that tonight, throughout this country throughout the free world, such prayers are ascendin mighty force. And this brings to me the thought that t we could also achieve a very definite and practical resul moment. Suppose, on the next Sabbath Day observe our religions, America, 165 million people of us, went to the places of worship and, crowding those places, and by so doing demonstrated to all the world the sincer of our aspirations for peace.

This would be a mighty force.

None could then say that we preserve armaments bec to—we preserve them because we must.

My friend, Secretary Dulles, and I go to this conf earnest hope that we may accurately represent your con beliefs, your aspirations. We shall be conciliatory country seeks no conquest, no property of others.

We shall be tolerant, because this nation does not s our way of life upon others. We shall be firm in the of your spiritual and material strength and your defens

38. STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT, JULY 18, 1955 ¹

We meet here for a simple purpose. We have come to find a basis for accommodation which will make life safer and happier not only for the nations we represent but for people elsewhere.

We are here in response to a universal urge, recognized by Premier Bulganin in his speech of July 15,² that the political leaders of our great countries find a path to peace. We cannot expect here, in the few hours of a few days, to solve all the problems of all the world that need to be solved. Indeed, the four of us meeting here have no authority from others that could justify us even in attempting that. The roots of many of these problems are buried deep in war, conflict and history. They are made even more difficult by the differences in governmental ideologies and ambitions. Manifestly it is out of the question in the short time available to the Heads of Government meeting here to trace out the causes and origins of these problems and to devise agreements that could with complete fairness to all eliminate them.

Nevertheless, we can, perhaps, create a new spirit that will make possible future solutions of problems which are within our responsibilities. And, equally important, we can try to take here and now at Geneva the first steps on a new road to a just and durable peace.

The problems that concern us are not inherently insoluble. Of course, they are difficult; but their solution is not beyond the wisdom of man. They seem insoluble under conditions of fear, distrust, and even hostility, where every move is weighed in terms of whether it will help or weaken a potential enemy. If those conditions can be changed, then much can be done. Under such circumstances I am confident that at a later stage our Foreign Ministers will be able to carry on from where we leave off to find, either by themselves or with others, solutions to our problems.

No doubt there are among our nations philosophical convictions which are in many respects irreconcilable. Nothing that we can say or do here will change that fact. However, it is not always necessary that people should think alike and believe alike before they can work together. The essential thing is that none should attempt to use force or trickery to make his beliefs prevail and thus to impose his system on the unwilling.

The new approach we of this conference should seek cannot be found merely by talking in terms of abstractions and generalities. It is necessary that we talk frankly about the concrete problems which create tension between us and about the way to begin in solving since the German armistice and Germany is still divided, the division does a grievous wrong to a people which is entitled to pursue together a common destiny. While the division continues, it creates a basic source of instability in Europe. Peace of peace has little meaning if at the same time we perpetuate conditions endangering the peace. Towards Germany, the Allies have special responsibilities. While any conclusions we reach must be invalid unless supported by majority opinion in Germany, the German problem should be a topic for our meeting here. Must we find ways to solve it promptly and justly?

In the interest of enduring peace, our solution should be in the interest of the legitimate security interests of all concerned. We insist a united Germany is entitled at its choice, to the inherent right of collective self-defense. By the same token, we are ready to take account of legitimate security interests of the Soviet Union. The Paris agreements¹ contain many provisions for this purpose. But we are quite ready to consider further safeguards which are reasonable and practical and contribute to the security of all concerned.

On a broader plane, there is the problem of respecting the right of peoples to choose the form of government under which they live and of restoring sovereign rights and self-government to peoples who have been deprived of them. The American people feel that certain peoples of Eastern Europe, many with a long record of national existence, have not yet been given this pledge of our United Nations wartime declaration,² and other wartime agreements.

There is the problem of communication and human understanding among our peoples. We frankly fear the consequences of isolation where whole peoples are isolated from the outside world. Can people want to be friends with the Soviet peoples despite the natural differences between our peoples or our nations? There are no territorial conflicts or commercial rivalries. Historically, European countries have always been at peace. But friendly relations between peoples does not readily develop when there are barriers such as now interfere with communication. If all curtains whether of guns or laws or regulations should come down. But this can only be done in an atmosphere of respect and confidence.

There is the problem of international communism. At present, now, its activities have disturbed relations between other nations and the Soviet Union. Its activities are not confined to one country. It seeks throughout the world to subvert lawful ally, there is the overriding problem of armament. This is at result and a cause of existing tension and distrust. Contrary basic purpose of the United Nations Charter, armaments now much of men's effort from creative to non-productive uses. Could all like to end that. But apparently none dares to do so because of fear of attack.

Nuclear attack has a capacity for destruction far beyond anything man has yet known. So each of us deems it vital that there be means to deter such attack. Perhaps, therefore, we should consider whether the problem of limitation of armament may not be approached by seeking—as a first step—dependable ways to verify and inspect military establishments, so that there can be no hidden surprises, whether by sudden attack or by secret violation of restrictions. In this field nothing is more important than that we explore together the challenging and central problem of effective mutual inspection. Such a system is the foundation for real disarmament.

When we think of this problem of armament, we need to remember the present burden of costly armaments not only deprives our own people of higher living standards, but it also denies the peoples of the less developed areas of resources which would improve their lot. These areas contain much of the world's population and many are now emerging for the first time into political independence. They are grappling with the urgent problem of economic growth. They badly need assistance particularly for capital development from the more developed nations of the world. However, their economic process is gravely retarded by the fact that the more developed industrial countries are dedicating so much of their productive effort to armament. Armament reduction would and should insure that part of the savings would flow into the less developed areas of the world to assist their economic development.

In addition, we must press forward in developing the use of atomic energy for constructive purposes. We regret that the Soviet Union has never accepted our proposal of December 1953¹ that nations possessing stockpiles of fissionable material should join to contribute to a "world bank" so as, in steadily increasing measure, to substitute cooperation in human welfare for competition in means of human destruction. We still believe that if the Soviet Union would accord to its ability contribute to this great project, that act would improve the international climate.

In this first statement of the Conference, I have indicated very briefly some of the problems that weigh upon my mind and upon the minds of the United States and whose solution is largely within the of the matters which it might be useful to discuss here at our time accordingly.

Let me repeat, I trust that we are not here merely to state differences. We are not here to repeat the same dreary pattern which has characterized most of our negotiations of the past. We are here in response to the peaceful aspirations of men everywhere, to the kind of discussions which will inject a new spirit of confidence and sincerity; and to launch fresh negotiations under conditions of good augury.

In that way, and perhaps only in that way, can our brief, necessarily brief, serve to generate and put in motion the new forces to set us truly on the path to peace. For this I am sure you will devoutly pray.

39. STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT, JULY 1950

According to the adopted agenda, today we meet to discuss the problem of normalizing and increasing the contacts between our peoples in many fields. I am heartened by the deep interest in this problem which interest implies a common purpose to understand each other better. Unfortunately there exist unnecessary restrictions and barriers between us of ideas, of things and of people.

Like other questions we have considered during the past few years, this one cannot be considered independently or in isolation. It is related by their direct importance to the general objective of reducing world fears and tensions.

To help achieve the goal of peace based on justice and mutual understanding, there are certain concrete steps which must be taken:

(1) To lower the barriers which now impede the free flow of information and ideas between our peoples.

(2) To lower the barriers which now impede the free movement of people to travel anywhere in the world for peaceful, friendly purposes so that all will have a chance to know each other face to face.

(3) To create conditions which will encourage national cooperation and the exchange of peaceful goods throughout the world.

Success in these endeavors should improve the conditions of life for all our citizens and elsewhere in the world. By helping to reduce poverty and ignorance, we can take another step in the achievement of peace.

Restrictions on communications of all kinds, including protection of our own interests, to place some restrictions upon the movement of persons and communications across our national frontiers.

This conference has the opportunity, I believe, to initiate concrete steps to permit the breaking down of both mild and severe barriers to mutual understanding and trust.

Now I should like to turn to the question of trade. I assume that each of us here is dedicated to the improvement of the conditions of life of our own citizens. Trade in peaceful goods is an important factor in achieving this goal. If trade is to reach its maximum capability in this regard, it must be both voluminous and world-wide.

The United Nations has properly been concerned in making available to the people of the under-developed areas modern technology and managerial abilities, as well as capital and credit. My country not only supports these efforts, but has undertaken parallel projects outside the United Nations.

In this connection the new atomic science possesses a tremendous potential for helping raise the standards of living and providing greater opportunity for all the world. World-wide interest in overcoming poverty and ignorance is growing by leaps and bounds, and each of the great nations should do its utmost to assist in this development. As a result new desires, new requirements, new aspirations are emerging almost everywhere as man climbs the upward path of human destiny. Most encouraging of all is the evidence that after centuries of fatalism and resignation, the hopeless of the world are beginning to hope.

But regardless of the results achieved through the United Nations effort or the individual efforts of helpful nations, trade remains the indispensable arterial system of a flourishing world prosperity.

If we could create conditions in which unnecessary restrictions on trade would be progressively eliminated and under which there would be free and friendly exchange of ideas and of people, we should have one much to chart the paths toward the objectives we commonly seek.

By working together toward all these goals, we can do much to transform this century of recurring conflict into a century of enduring and invigorating peace. This, I assure you, the United States of America devoutly desires—as I know all of us do.

not by any means be interpreted as acquiescence in it from it.

But it has seemed to me that in the closing conference there is no necessity for me to announce to and to the world the United States position on the imp we have discussed. These I hope and believe have al clear. Therefore, it has not seemed particularly fit to recite them in detail. Rather I content myself w tions on our work of the past week and an expression for the future.

This has been an historic meeting. It has been good week. But only history will tell the true worth of our session together. The follow-through from th our respective Governments will be decisive in the Conference.

We have talked over plainly a number of the m perplexing questions affecting our several peoples peoples of the entire world.

We did not come here to reach final solutions. W we might together find the path that would lead to sol brighten the prospects of world peace.

In this final hour of our assembly, it is my judgment of a lasting peace with justice, well-being, and b are brighter. The dangers of the overwhelming tra war are less.

The work of our Foreign Ministers as they strive to directives will be of great importance, perhaps of what we have done here. Theirs is the task, reflecting policies of their Governments, to reach agreement on which we here could discuss only in broad terms. I them well.

I trust we will all support the necessary adjustments may find our Governments must make if we are to ferences in these matters.

If our peoples, in the months and years ahead, broaden and their understanding of each other, as we, d have broadened our knowledge of each other, further between our Governments may be facilitated. May this of justice. May it result in improved well-being, and less of fear or suffering or distress for mankind marked by more of good will among men. These d deed be ever remembered.

I came to Geneva because I believe mankind lo from war and rumors of war. I came here because of in the decent instincts and good sense of the people this world of ours. I shall return home tonight with unshaken, and with the prayer that the hope of mankind be realized.

DIRECTIVE OF THE HEADS OF GOVERNMENT OF THE UR POWERS TO THE FOREIGN MINISTERS, JULY 23, 5¹

The Heads of Government of France, the United Kingdom, the S. R. and the U. S. A., guided by the desire to contribute to the reduction of international tension and to the consolidation of confidence between states, instruct their Foreign Ministers to continue consideration of the following questions with regard to which an exchange of views has taken place at the Geneva Conference, and to use effective means for their solution, taking account of the close connection between the reunification of Germany and the problems of European security, and the fact that the successful settlement of each of these problems would serve the interests of consolidating peace.

*European Security and Germany.*² For the purpose of establishing European security with due regard to the legitimate interests of all states and their inherent right to individual and collective self-defence, the Ministers are instructed to consider various proposals to this end, including the following: A security pact for Europe or part of Europe, including provisions for the assumption by member nations of an obligation not to resort to force and to deny assistance to an aggressor; limitation, control, and inspection in relation to armed forces and armaments; establishment between East and West of a zone in which the disposition of armed forces will be determined by mutual agreement; and also to consider other possible proposals pertaining to the solution of this problem.

The Heads of Government, recognizing their common responsibility for the settlement of the German question and the re-unification of Germany, have agreed that the settlement of the German question and the re-unification of Germany by means of free elections shall be carried out in conformity with the national interests of the German people and the interests of European security. The Foreign Ministers will make whatever arrangements they may consider desirable for the participation of, or for consultation with, other interested states.

The Four Heads of Government, convinced of the necessity, for secure peace and for the welfare of mankind, of achieving a system for the control and reduction of all armaments, nations, for raising their well-being, as well as for assistance to developed countries,

Agree:

(1) for these purposes to work together to develop a system for disarmament through the Sub-Committee of the United Nations Disarmament Commission;

(2) to instruct their representatives in the Sub-Committee to discharge of their mandate from the United Nations to take into account the views and proposals advanced by the Government at this Conference;

(3) to propose that the next meeting of the Sub-Committee be held on August 29, 1955, at New York;

(4) to instruct the Foreign Ministers to take note of the work done in the Disarmament Commission, to take account of the proposals advanced by the Heads of Government at this Conference and to consider whether the four Governments can take any useful initiative in the field of disarmament.

3. Development of Contacts between East and West

The Foreign Ministers should by means of experts studies including those possible in organs and agencies of the United Nations which could (a) bring about a progressive elimination of barriers which interfere with free communications and peaceful relations between people and (b) bring about such freer contacts and exchanges as are to the mutual advantage of the countries and peoples.

4. The Foreign Ministers of the Four Powers will meet during October to initiate their consideration of these questions and to determine the organisation of their work.

42. STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE AT THE CONFERENCE, JULY 26, 1955 ¹

The Geneva "Summit" Conference produced good results.

First of all, I would put the fact that it registered a considerable improvement in the relations between the Soviet Union and the Western Powers. They became less brittle. That should mean that in the predictable future, we can subject our differences to the processes of diplomacy with less fear that war will come off. That, of course, does not mean that early and easy solution is in sight. It does mean that the war danger has further receded.

Another development at the Geneva Conference was could be sure that the other was not planning a massive surprise attack.¹

This is the most dramatic, and at the same time most serious and sober, peace proposal that history records. The Soviets made no immediate reply, but that is not surprising for the proposal is one which no doubt they wish to take time to study. If, however, they have the genuine desire of peace which they indicated at Geneva, then I feel confident that positive results will come from President Eisenhower's proposal.

The Western powers also brought to the fore the problem of German reunification. This now is very much a matter of practical international statesmanship. German reunification is in the air and I am convinced that it will come about, not immediately, but surely. Of course, we recognized that it will come about more easily within a framework of European security. So the Western powers accepted the Soviet request that European security be studied. In that connection we put forward a series of practical suggestions which will come before the October Foreign Ministers Conference. These can give the Soviet Union assurance that German reunification, far from endangering the Soviet Union, can take place under conditions which will provide safety to all.

We had occasion to bring home to the Soviet rulers the importance which the United States Government and people attach to the right of the satellite nations to have governments of their own choosing. Also we made clear our grave objection to the revolutionary and subversive activities of international Communism. We obtained no assurance, but we hope that developments will in fact tend to eliminate these causes of tension.

The Conference in no way weakened the close ties and unity of purpose which exist between the three Western powers which were present at Geneva. On the contrary, their unity emerges stronger than ever from this new testing to which it was subjected.

The Conference did not press national viewpoints to a point where there would have been a breakdown, which would have dimmed the hopes of future peace. On the other hand, the Conference avoided the equal danger of creating an illusion that all was now so well that we could safely relax our efforts to build individual and collective self-defense.

President Eisenhower played a great role at this Conference, one of which our nation can always be proud. Also the people of the United States can themselves take pride in the contribution of each to an unprecedented peacetime demonstration of spiritual unity behind our determination to make peace both just and durable.

situation, but there are also possible hazards. The task of like diplomacy is to realize to the full the opportunities without the hazards.

F. DISCUSSION OF SOVIET-AMERICAN RELATIONS AT THE GENEVA MEETING OF FOREIGN MINISTERS, OCTOBER 27-NOVEMBER 16, 1955

43. PROPOSAL SUBMITTED BY THE FOREIGN MINISTERS OF THE UNITED STATES, THE UNITED KINGDOM, AND FRANCE, OCTOBER 31, 1955 ¹

Development of East-West Contacts

The Foreign Ministers of Great Britain, France, and the United States, mindful of the Directive issued at Geneva by the Western Government,² express their desire to explore, together with the Foreign Minister of the Soviet Union, measures designed about a progressive elimination of barriers which interfere with communications and with peaceful trade between peoples. They express about such freer contacts and exchanges as are to the mutual advantage of the countries and peoples concerned.

The three Ministers wish to point out that their Governments have consistently favored free communication of information, free exchange of persons, and the development of peaceful and constructive means of promoting an atmosphere of confidence between states and a better understanding among peoples. Their Governments have always sought to foster free expression of opinion, to promote the free development of individual conscience, and, with courage, through a free competition of ideas, the development of objective opinion. The three Western Governments believe that a constructive development of contacts with the Soviet Union, together with the progressive resolution of those substantial issues which constitute the true causes of international tensions, will contribute to the establishment of the durable peace desired by mankind.

It is the view of the Western Powers that the four Great Powers must contribute actively to the establishment of a better understanding between the peoples of the West and the peoples of the East.

THE SOVIET UNION

Foreign Ministers are convinced that this work of mutual understanding, which must eventually lead to peaceful changes in the area of those freedoms which mankind holds dear, will have the moral approbation of the peoples of Eastern Europe and the peoples of the West.

Accordingly the Western Powers consider that it is essential to reach an agreement with the Soviet Union, to determine forthwith the conditions in which it appears most appropriate to proceed with exchanges of information, in the mutual advantage of the peoples of Eastern Europe and the West.

It is with this intention that the three Western Governments have decided to submit a program of action. Cognizant of the fact that the evolution of free societies has produced individual traditions and procedures, it is understood that arrangements made by the Three Western Governments aimed at the implementation of this program would be in accordance with their national traditions and procedures. The program of the Three Governments comprehends the following concrete propositions:

1. Freer exchange of information and ideas should be facilitated. All censorship should be progressively eliminated. The conditions which hamper the flow of full factual information and varied opinions between the peoples of the West and those of the Soviet Union should be removed.

2. Arrangements should be made for the four Powers to establish information centers, on a basis of reciprocity, in each other's countries where these do not already exist. Everyone should be allowed the free use of these centers without hindrance or discouragement from their own government.

3. The four Powers, where they do not already do so should encourage the publication and facilitate the distribution to public institutions and private individuals in each other's countries of official publications printed in English, French or Russian.

4. Exchanges of books, periodicals and newspapers between the principal libraries, universities and professional and scientific institutions in the Soviet Union and the three Western countries should be encouraged. Such books, periodicals and newspapers should be made available for general and unimpeded public sale in the Soviet Union on the one hand and the three Western countries on the other.

5. There should be a substantial increase in the exchange of government publications and full lists, catalogs and indexes of such publications should be made available by Governments where they do not already do so.

6. The film producers of the three Western countries are

9. The Soviet Union and the Western Powers should consider the desirability of exchanging monthly uncensored broadcasts on world developments. This could take the form of half hours for the Soviet Union on the Western broadcasting systems with reciprocal arrangements for the Western Powers on the Soviet system.

10. The censorship of outgoing press despatches and the denial to journalists of access to normal sources of information are serious barriers to the free circulation of ideas. The four Governments, where appropriate should take immediate steps to remove such barriers.

11. Private tourism should be increased. This will require more liberal procedures as regards travel restrictions and other administrative practices. Above all it will require reasonable rates of currency exchange.

12. There should be further exchanges of persons in the professional, cultural, scientific and technical fields. Exchanges should be arranged on the basis of principles approved by the governments concerned.

13. Meetings of outstanding scientists and scholars of the four countries at reputable international congresses should be facilitated.

14. There should be cultural and sporting exchanges on a reciprocal basis, drawing on the best each has to offer under the auspices of the principal cultural institutions and sporting organizations on both sides.

15. A beginning should be made with exchanges of students[particularly those engaged in language and other area studies. It should be possible for the students to share fully and freely the student life of the country they visit.

16. Restrictions on the ability of the members of the diplomatic missions of the four governments to travel in each other's countries should be removed on a basis of reciprocity.

17. Agreement should be reached in principle for reciprocal exchanges of direct air transport services between cities of the Soviet Union and cities of the three Western countries.

So far as trade is concerned, the Western Powers sincerely desire to see an improvement in commercial relations between the countries of Eastern Europe and themselves, leading to an increase in mutual trade in peaceful goods. To this end they have made freely available to the countries of Eastern Europe a wide area of trade with respect both to exports and imports. That only small advantage has so far been taken of these opportunities is, in their view, basically a reflection of policies and conditions within the countries of Eastern Europe. While they feel, therefore, that the major initiative in securing a

If the Four Powers can agree on the above proposition, a step forward will have been made towards better understanding between nations. This might in due course serve as the basis for a further expansion of contacts on a broader international scale.

44. STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE OCTOBER 31, 1955 ¹

The Heads of Government meeting here last July directed the study measures, including those possible in the United Nations, for the progressive elimination of barriers interfering with international communication and peaceful trade and for the establishment of freer contacts and exchanges which are of advantage to both East and West.

The reductions of barriers and greater human contacts which we seek are not merely ends in themselves. They are designed to assure that the peace we seek is not passive, but a creative force which enables men and nations better to realize their individual and national aspirations which conform to moral principles.

The United States approaches hopefully, even though cautiously, a study of measures to eliminate barriers to free communication and peaceful trade. We know that, in an atmosphere of tension, communications are not readily made free, nor trade made normal. Unless we must break at some point a vicious circle in which lack of free communications and the absence of normal trade relations and personal contacts lead to further misunderstanding between peoples and increased tension.

We have already begun discussion of one of the fundamental causes of international tension, the division of Germany, and we shall now to discuss the world's vast armaments. However, as agreed by the Four Ministers at New York,² we are willing, simultaneously with our own consideration of European Security and Germany's disarmament, to proceed through a committee of experts³ with a view to the elimination of barriers to free communications and trade and the establishment of freer contacts.

Upon conclusion of their study, these experts should, we hope, report back to the Four Ministers, so that we may consider the results of their study, both upon individual topics and in the aggregate, so that we may be in a position likewise to coordinate our own proposals and conclusions under item III of our agenda with the results of our work on the other items.

In this matter of "contacts" the United States Delegation

When I saw President Eisenhower in Denver, just before leaving for Geneva, he re-affirmed his high hopes for progress at this conference not only with respect to the reunification of Germany within the framework of European security and disarmament, but also in the development of contacts between our peoples.

Contacts between peoples is not a new thing for the United States. It is part of our heritage. Our nation itself is composed of people from every land who have brought with them new ideas and have made valuable contributions enriching our society.

We are naturally a friendly people who like to know and be known. We have long wanted to learn more about the Soviet Union and its peoples and we have hoped that they would come to know us, and what we say and think and do. There is a solid basis for good will between us. It is a fact of history which should be remembered now that our peoples have never fought each other.

So we did not understand it when the rulers of the Soviet Union sought to seal off their people from outside contacts. But when this happened and strains developed, the United States, in its turn, placed restrictions on exchanges with the USSR. But these restrictions were solely in response to the actions initiated by the Soviet Government in this period.

Recently, we have noted that the attitude of the Soviet Government may be changing. We welcome this development. It provides a basis of hope for accomplishment in this item of our agenda.

II

The subject of contacts can be divided into three parts: (1) freedom for exchanges of information and ideas; (2) freedom for exchange of persons and travel; (3) development of trade between East and West.

Information

In the field of exchanges of information, we immediately encountered basic obstacles.

There is an all-embracing Soviet censorship of press and radio. There is systematic jamming of radio broadcasts from other countries. We hope that steps will be initiated at this conference looking to the removal of these obstacles.

In addition to the removal of obstacles, the United States will encourage specific projects in this field, such as an exchange of radio broadcasts between the United States and the Soviet Union. For example, there might, as a beginning, be a monthly exchange of commentaries on world developments as seen from Soviet and Western granted to the United States on the Soviet radio. Through such an exchange, the peoples of both our countries would have the benefit of free discussion, criticism and debate on outstanding issues of the day.

A concrete step promoting a mutually useful exchange of information and ideas was taken by the United States on September 9th of this year.¹ The United States proposed to the Soviet Government that it permit the renewed circulation in the Soviet Union of an official Russian-language magazine entitled Amerika. We are prepared to permit the comparable circulation of an official Soviet magazine in the United States.

We wish also to advance proposals for the distribution of American films in the Soviet Union and for the establishment, on a reciprocal basis, of information centers in the respective capitals.

Travel

In the field of exchanges of persons and travel, another basic obstacle is immediately encountered. The arbitrary rate of exchange of the ruble makes all travel in the Soviet Union excessively expensive for foreigners. The ruble rate also has an adverse effect on many aspects of the exchange of information and the development of trade. It is important that steps should be taken to eliminate this obstacle.

The United States has played an active role in recent months in effecting exchanges of persons with the Soviet Union. A group of Soviet agriculturalists toured the United States and a group of American farmers visited the Soviet Union.² Groups of Soviet construction experts and newspapermen are now travelling widely throughout our country. Two outstanding Soviet musical artists have been invited to make concert tours in the United States, one of which has already begun. These visitors will bear witness to the wide range of facilities and opportunities which they enjoy in the United States in line with the purposes of their visits.

We shall continue to consider such proposals favorably to the extent to which they accrue to the mutual advantage of both countries and contribute to and reflect a spirit of real cooperation.

It is to be hoped that, in general, visits between the United States and the Soviet Union will gradually become more normal occurrences in the future. Americans are fond of travel and many people from other countries visit us each year. In 1954 almost one million Americans went abroad. Four hundred and fifty thousand foreign travelers entered the United States.

In the general area of travel, the United States has specific proposals to advance. Among them is a proposal for an agreement controls which now are imposed on the movements of for Soviet Union will be reduced. The United States is reduce, on a basis of reciprocity, the controls which w Soviet citizens as a result of the restrictions in the Trade

The third aspect of contacts relates to peaceful trade. If strategic trade is concerned, I support fully the observ Mr. Macmillan and M. Pinay have already made.³ Stra a matter of security concern and is clearly outside the pu III of the Directive, which speaks of "peaceful trade". tions which govern strategic trade are a consequence, n tensions, and involve only a very narrow portion of the potential trade.

To a trading nation such as the United States, pe trade is most important. However, it is conducted b States primarily as a matter of individual enterprise i commercial motivation.

United States exporters and importers buy and sell range of diverse things. Judging from our limited kno present conditions of life within the Soviet bloc, there y be a great number of United States materials and produ those of other Western countries, which could fill imm

The state of trade, however, stands in marked contr praisal. Although the Western countries continue to Europe ready access to an enormous area of potential t of trade between them is still low as compared with pre- is only a very small proportion of total world trade and of most Western countries.

Plainly the reason for the continued low level of Ea has been an unwillingness or lack of interest on the part Union. While talking generalities about trade, the S ment has continued to confine its international trade ev of peaceful goods, within strict controls and the rigiditie barter trade arrangements. It has pursued a policy nationalism and regionalism which ignores the benefi and are now offered by the Western nations to the Soviet bloc countries.

The general question of Soviet interest in peaceful international trade can only be answered in specific terms. Is the Soviet Union now prepared to expand its exports sufficiently to make possible a much higher level of trade with the West? If so, what goods will be available? If the USSR believes that serious obstacles to peaceful trade exist on the Western side, we want to know what they are.

Before coming here to Geneva, I consulted with the heads of the appropriate departments of my Government and arranged for progressively simplifying certain of our operating procedures concerning exports to the Soviet bloc countries, so that the pathway to commercial enterprise might become smoother.

These measures can facilitate trade, but they cannot produce trade where commercial incentive is lacking or where Western interest in trade is not reciprocated in Eastern Europe. The discussions here, as hoped, will disclose the specific steps which can be taken to increase the peaceful trade between the West and Eastern Europe. We shall await with sympathetic interest the suggestions which the representatives of the Soviet Union may make upon this subject.

We agreed at New York that detailed discussion at Geneva of East-West contacts would be left to our experts. As the United States expert, I have appointed Mr. William H. Jackson. He is serving not merely at my request but at the personal request of President Eisenhower.

I hope that the experts may begin their important task without delay. I would suggest that they make a careful study of specific projects in the field of improved contacts and prepare recommendations concerning their implementation, including procedures which could be developed through the organs and agencies of the United Nations.

We shall eagerly await the results of the experts' work, which contains so much of hope and promise for a better and more peaceful world.

45. STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE, NOVEMBER 14, 1955 ¹

This item of East-West contacts, although last on our Agenda, is not the least. For in the long run peace depends upon fellowship between the peoples of the world.

We believe that the human race is, by the Supreme Will, which family may be artificially divided into hostile camps and the peoples may be brought to regard others as alien and hostile fact that is not the case. Sometimes those in power find it to promote this alienation of peoples. But that is a danger which we should erect such bulwarks as are to be found in exchange of information and in the free movement of people.

We realize that free information is not always correct and that those who travel do not always give or receive corrections. Nevertheless, the risks from such infirmities are infinitely less than the risk of allowing the thinking of one people about another to be determined by government controls.

The United States hoped that one of the good results to the Geneva Conference of the Heads of Governments would be exchanges of ideas, of persons and of goods.

This has happened to some degree. The United States has tried to help in that direction.

With respect to the exchange of ideas there was nothing the United States could do unilaterally. Already our free press has been fully on developments within the Soviet bloc that are known. Important statements by Soviet rulers are widely reported in the press, radio and television newscasts. The only limitation is Soviet censorship of news from the Soviet Union and the Eastern bloc, which reporters experience in getting access to the facts of the Soviet bloc. On our side there is no censorship or other restrictions.

With respect to the exchange of persons, the United States, in the earnest of its intentions, changed its passport regulations so that passports may be obtained valid for the Soviet Union and Eastern European countries with which we have diplomatic relations, and that passports are valid for Western European countries.

In the area of trade with the Soviet Union we have only minor restrictions. In anticipation of this Conference, and in order to promote trade further, we took steps to simplify export procedures.¹

However, the developments at this Conference have been disappointing.

The exchange of information and ideas is blocked on our side by an all-embracing Soviet censorship of press and radio and by systematic Soviet jamming of radio broadcasts from other countries.

In the Committee of Experts,² the Soviet representative maintained that these two obstacles—censorship and jamming—could not be admitted to the agenda for substantive consideration since they concerned internal affairs of the Soviet Union.

It can be argued that these matters are indeed internal people from learning objective facts about the rest of the world. Knowledge of the true way of life of the non-communist countries, including their eagerness to live in peace and friendship with the Soviet peoples, has been suppressed. At the same time, it is impossible for the rest of the world to receive adequate reports about developments in the Soviet Union.

The failure of the Soviet Delegation to indicate any willingness to take steps looking toward the progressive elimination of censorship, consequently, extremely discouraging.

The Soviet Delegation refused to consider Western suggestions for improvement in the treatment accorded to foreign journalists in the Soviet Union. The Soviet Delegation also evaded a precise answer to the proposal of the Western Powers for a regular exchange of uncensored broadcasts, responding only with vague pronouncements regarding the desirability of a general agreement for greater cooperation in the radio field.

We would welcome cooperation in radio communications. However, there is massive and systematic jamming of news broadcasts. Once this is eliminated, I am confident that we could reach general agreement on cooperation with regard to radio communications. This position was made clear in a note from the United States Government to the Soviet Union of December, 1953.¹

On other items to which the Western Delegations attach importance—items containing concrete proposals—such as the establishment of reading rooms in the respective capitals, the publication and distribution in each other's countries of official periodicals, and the public sale of books and magazines, the Soviet Delegation also refused to express agreement even in principle. These matters were consigned by the Soviet Delegation to possible bilateral discussions at a later date.

With respect to movement of people, significant progress is blocked by the Soviet failure to respond to the Western proposals for less travel restrictions on foreigners and more normal treatment of diplomatic missions.

The Committee of Experts agreed in general on the desirability of exchanges of persons and of delegations, but even here many differences exist regarding the procedures and principles under which such exchanges should be conducted.

Exchanges of persons with the Soviet Union of necessity assume a different character than with countries of the Free World. A travel abroad by Soviet citizens is carefully controlled by the Soviet Government and is undertaken only by carefully selected groups. Travel abroad, therefore, on the part of Soviet citizens is not such cannot be made haphazardly or on short notice but require a degree of planning and arrangement.

The Experts' studies in the field of transport and trade have largely been frustrated by the negative attitude of the Soviet Union.

In the course of the Working Group meetings the Western nations advanced four positive proposals:

- (1) That the Soviet Union agree that bilateral negotiations toward the early establishment of direct air links between the Soviet Union and the Western nations, under normal conditions of transport agreements, should be undertaken as soon as possible.

- (2) That the Soviet Union take measures to alleviate the difficulties now encountered by Western businessmen in establishing adequate representation and in performing usual business and financial services within the Soviet Union;

- (3) That the Soviet Union accord more adequate protection to Western industrial property rights and copyrights, recognize the generally accepted right of priority to new patents and inventions, and make data available concerning Soviet patents;

- (4) That the Soviet Union make available production, price and trade data, comparable to such information now available to the Soviet Union from the Western countries.

Each of these modest proposals was designed to eliminate the obstacles now thwarting the exercise of Western initiative in the mutually beneficial development of peaceful East-West trade. But of these proposals was ignored or summarily dismissed by the Soviet representatives.

France, the United Kingdom and the United States made repeated requests that the Soviet Union indicate that it was not unwilling itself to make the effort necessary to attain a substantially increased volume of peaceful East-West trade. But the Soviet representatives gave no positive response. Yet unless goods are made available to the Soviet Union and unless the Soviet Union takes concrete steps to open its market, unilateral willingness to trade on the part of the Western countries cannot convert itself into two-way trade.

In place of the positive response concerning peaceful trade which the United States had reason under the Heads of Government Directive¹ to expect from the Soviet Union, the Soviet representatives of the Experts' Committee confined their approach to an open-ended attack upon the Western system of security controls over international trade. In place of a relatively small range of strategic commodities, they precisely to avoid disputes and recriminations over the matter, and to direct attention to the vast problems of economic relations between East and West, that the Directive from the Heads of Government speaks of "peaceful" trade.

It was precisely to avoid wasting time over such distractions that the substance of our assignment that President Pinay, Mr and I, in our opening remarks ¹ on Item III, before constituting the Experts' Committee, took the pains to point out that the strategic trade controls are a matter of security—are a consequence, not a cause of tensions—and are outside the purview of Item III.

Soviet officials conduct a strong propaganda outside their own country about their desire for trade and the alleged denial to them of trade opportunity. Yet the only restrictions which exist are those on strategic goods related to war purposes touching only a very small percentage of normal international commerce. Actually, the Soviet officials speak differently at home. There they explain to their own people that the countries of the Soviet bloc must pursue an autarchic policy of self-sufficiency. Earlier this year Mr. Molotov, speaking before the Supreme Soviet, called attention to the existence of two parallel world markets, which he said were opposed to each other.

We had hoped for a change in policy but thus far we have hoped in vain. The discussions of the Experts concerning measures to expand peaceful trade have produced no basis of agreement for the simple and now unmistakably evident reason that the Soviet Union remains basically opposed to developing a high level of trade between East and West.

The fact is that the economic policies pursued by the Soviet Union and directed toward insuring the greatest degree of self-sufficiency leave for export no important stocks of consumer and other goods which normally enter into international trade. This consequence of Soviet economic policy, and not the small percentage of goods covered by strategic controls, has been and remains the chief limitation on any important development of trade with the Soviet Union.

The Soviet Union apparently at the present time does, however, have large stockpiles of discarded arms resulting from the production of new models for the Soviets' own use. It would be a matter of utmost concern to the other nations of the world if the Soviet bloc should try to meet its large import needs and serve its other aims, by exporting these surplus arms throughout the world. This is indeed something very different from the "peaceful trade between peoples" which the Heads of Governments said we should seek to develop.

As a result of my review of the work of the Experts, it seems clear that the Soviet Union is not at present disposed to take those important steps which lie within its power to promote the free circulation of information and ideas and to facilitate trade in peaceful goods.

The lack of progress on Item III should not, I suppose, come as a surprise. It is confirmation of the fact that the Soviet bloc system is based upon artificial conditions which cannot withstand free contact Russian people knowledge of the immense quantity and supply of goods which are produced by societies where labor is free.

We do not believe that peace will have a solid foundation unless it comes about free communications and peaceful trade between the Soviet bloc and the free Western peoples.

We cannot expect this to happen all at once. Indeed, our policy calls for a "progressive elimination of barriers." It does not call for that barriers should be pulled down all at once. We have made our proposals were modest and we greatly regret that virtually none of them has been accepted.

It would, of course, be possible for us to say that we have in a general way reaffirmed the desirability of increased contact. But merely to reaffirm is not our task. It is our task to formulate measures which could realize the principles which our Heads of Government set forth. Therefore for us merely to reaffirm in general would only gloss over our lack of common accord on the specific questions we have been asked to consider.

Therefore, it appears far preferable to state frankly that what has been achieved here to eliminate barriers and that basic impediments to freer contacts between East and West still exist and that we are far from achieving in practice the objectives set forth in the Declaration from the Heads of Government.

This is a disappointing conclusion, but the future is apt to be brighter if we face up now to what are the indisputable facts.

Nevertheless, we need not be disheartened. Since the Summit Conference last July some progress has been made. Some barriers have in fact been lowered. We believe that the process thus begun will not easily be reversed. Perhaps it will proceed more surely as a continuing living process than by dependence upon negotiation. The United States does not intend to slacken its efforts to make commerce freer and more free and thus to end a situation that is dangerous to peace as it sets off one great part of the world as against another.

I have often expressed the friendship of the American people for the Russian people. Our countries have never been at war and our people have never fought each other. And we do not believe that we could ever be brought to fight each other if only we knew the truth. The great danger comes from the carrying on year after year of a persistent campaign which distorts the mind of the Russian people.

That is the danger which the Heads of our Governments are trying to avert. I believe that the talks which have occurred and which though they have not resulted in any substantial agreements may help us in the future to find the way to make our peace

Yesterday, the French Delegation submitted a proposal² which, at the study, the United States was ready to accept had it been accepted by the Soviet Delegation. Apparently, however, that French proposal is now rejected by the Soviet Delegation. The Soviet Delegation has now submitted a proposed draft statement by the Four Powers which I have studied during the brief recess we have had. I regret to be forced to the conclusion that this present Soviet proposal does not adequately meet the Directive under which we are acting, primarily that it contains nothing, or practically nothing, designed to permit of an exchange of ideas and of information.

It will be recalled that President Eisenhower in his statement on July 22 on this topic put first of all the importance, as he put it, and I quote: "First to lower the barriers which now impede the interchange of information and ideas between peoples."⁴ The Soviet proposal does not seem to make any effort at all to meet the views of the Western powers with respect to the importance of free communication in the realm of information and ideas.

In view of the rejection by the Soviet Union of the French proposal, we have compared the present Soviet proposal with that which the three Western powers introduced on October 31st through the medium of the French Delegation:⁵

Item 1 of that proposal contemplated a freer exchange of information and ideas and a progressive elimination of censorship. That is rejected.

Item 2 proposed to have information centers on a basis of reciprocity which the people could freely use. That is rejected.

Item 3 proposed to permit the publication and facilitate the distribution of official periodicals. That is rejected.

Item 4 dealt with exchange of books. It is accepted insofar as it relates to the exchange. But the vital part, which dealt with making these books available for public sale, is rejected.

Item 5, with reference to the exchange of government publications and full lists, catalogues, and indices, also seems to be rejected.

Item 6, dealing with exchange of films at normal commercial prices and on normal terms, seems to be rejected subject to the possibility that there might hereafter be an agreement on this topic.

Item 8, dealing with the reduction of jamming of news and information broadcasts, is rejected.

Item 9, with reference to exchanging uncensored broadcasts, appears

Item 10, dealing with the elimination of the censorship of press dispatches and access by journalists to normal information, is rejected.

Item 11 relates to tourism. There is a reference in the to tourism, but the Soviet Union rejects any suggestion should, to facilitate this, be reasonable rates of currency.

Item 16, dealing with the restriction on the travel by the diplomatic missions on a basis of reciprocity, also is rejected.

Item 17, dealing with reciprocal exchanges of direct services[,] is rejected.

In other words, of our 17 concrete proposals only five are partially accepted. I emphasize that all of those which would free exchange of ideas, news, uncensored information are rejected. The Soviet Union seems to have picked out of the only four or five suggestions which it deems to its interest have rejected all the others, without any spirit of giving and with a complete omission of anything of substance in exchange of ideas.

I pointed out in my remarks yesterday that we consider this is not solidly based unless the peoples of the different countries have access to what other peoples believe and, I think, to peace upon the power of government to dictate what they think about each other is, in our opinion, a very dangerous thing. And because the Soviet paper would perpetuate what was a very great danger to peace and good understanding between and because it does not seem to us to comply with the Disarmament guides us, we do not find it acceptable.

47. BACKGROUND PAPER RELEASED TO THE THE DELEGATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES, UNITED KINGDOM, AND FRANCE, NOVEMBER 1950

1. The Foreign Ministers of the Four Powers instructed their experts to "study measures, including those possible in the agencies of the United Nations, which could:—

- (a) bring about a progressive elimination of barriers which interfere with free communications and peaceful trade between peoples, and

- (b) bring about such free communications and trade as

2 to November 10. They examined the proposals tabled by the French Foreign Minister on behalf of the Three Western Powers on October 31,¹ and the draft resolution tabled by the Soviet Foreign Minister on the same day.²

Elimination of Barriers

3. Unfortunately no significant progress was made. The Soviet delegation were unwilling to consider the progressive elimination of the barriers which interfere with free communications and peaceful trade.

4. The only barriers the Soviet delegation were prepared to discuss were the Western controls on the export of strategic goods and alleged interference with the freedom of navigation of Soviet vessels in the China Seas. The Western delegations reiterated that the controls exercised by the Western countries on exports of certain strategic goods are maintained for their own security. The fact that these controls are not negotiable was clearly and deliberately recognized in Item III of the Directive which covers only "peaceful" trade. The Western delegations showed that the situation in the China Sea was irrelevant since the specific matters complained of by the Soviet delegation either were outside the responsibility of any of the three Western Powers or, as in the case of the refusal to provide fuel to vessels carrying strategic goods to Communist China, followed from the United Nations Resolution of May 18, 1951.³

5. The barriers to the free movement of persons and to the free communication of ideas and information, which the Western delegation wished to see removed, were listed among the 17 points contained in the Western proposals of October 31. The chief barriers are:

- censorship,
- jamming,
- the artificial rate of exchange of the rouble,
- restrictions on foreign journalists,
- restrictions on diplomatic missions.

6. The Soviet Delegation showed no readiness to consider the Western proposals on these matters, which they declared to be of purely domestic concern to the Soviet Union, or matters which should be discussed bilaterally but not at the Four Power Conference. Sometimes they argued, in spite of evidence to the contrary, that Soviet actions were justified by Western actions; for example, that jamming was justified by the content of Western broadcasts. The Western Powers replied that systematic jamming had no relation to content and that no progress could be made towards cooperation in broadcasting until systematic jamming ceased.

advantage of their countries and peoples. To none of them did they receive a satisfactory reply. This was particularly with all proposals which would result in more individual trade. The Soviet Delegation suggested that certain of the Western proposals should be the subject of bilateral negotiations; but they did not receive express approval, even in principle, of the most important proposal proposed.

8. In putting forward their proposals, the Western Delegation took into account the contribution which could be made by the Governments and agencies of the United Nations in putting into effect the measures envisaged.

9. To the Western proposal for agreement in principle on the establishment of direct air links between the Soviet Union and Western nations, the Soviet delegation returned a negative reply.

10. The Soviet Delegation suggested that the text of the draft resolution¹ might serve as a basis for general agreement. III. The Western delegations pointed out that those proposals which could be considered to fall within the terms of the Directive consisted of generalised statements of good intention which require the four Governments to extend only the good offices which are already a characteristic feature of existing commercial relations between the Soviet and Western peoples. The Western Delegation welcomed such exchanges, but cannot regard them as fulfilment of the instruction in the Directive.

Development of Peaceful Trade

11. The Western delegations demonstrated that the strict controls cover only a small part of the trade field, and that freely available to the Soviet Union a wide area of peaceful trade, which, however, her monopoly buying and selling organs can obtain only meagre advantage. The wide opportunities for trade freely available by the West compare very favourably with the restrictions over all aspects of foreign trade which is still exercised by the Soviet Union. The prime requirement for any worthwhile development of peaceful East/West trade must be the discarding of the policy of self-sufficiency which the Soviet Union has applied since 1945.

12. Nevertheless, the Western Powers offered to consider favourably any proposals which the Soviet delegation might put forward as being likely to lead to a mutually beneficial development of peaceful trade. This offer elicited no positive response. The Soviet Delegation put forward a number of specific proposals for the development of peaceful trade.

statistics and trade data as is the case in Western countries. None of these specific proposals elicited any positive response from the Soviet delegation.

48. STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE, NOVEMBER 16, 1955¹

We must all feel the seriousness of this moment as our Conference draws to an end.

We came here carrying a heavy responsibility. Last July the Heads of our Governments met and agreed to make a new effort to solve some of the stubborn problems which have long defied solution—the problem of Germany, the problem of disarmament and the problem of breaking down the barriers which separate the Soviet bloc from the free world. They gave to us, the Foreign Ministers, the task of attempting to translate their purposes into concrete realities.

The United States undertook, with the utmost seriousness, its share of the common task. We dedicated immense effort to preparation for this Conference. I know that the Governments of France, and the United Kingdom, and so far as it was concerned, the Federal Republic of Germany also made similar efforts. All this involved work of unprecedented intensity between the close of the July Conference of Heads of Government and the opening in October of this Conference of Foreign Ministers.

We brought here the results of that preparatory work and we have presented them, not as rigid positions but as bases for negotiation. There is, however, little agreement to record, as our communiqué makes plain.

I.

The first item of our Agenda involved the problem of European security and Germany. The three Western Powers came forward with proposals both for European security and for the reunification of Germany²—two problems which the four Heads of Government agreed were closely linked. Our proposals for European security involved a great effort to give the Soviet Union assurance that its security would not be impaired if Germany should be reunified. Special safeguards were proposed to reassure the Soviet Union if reunified Germany, in the exercise of its inherent right of collective self-defense should elect to associate itself with the North Atlantic Treaty⁴ and the Brussels Treaty⁵ Organizations.

The merit of our security proposals is demonstrated by the fact that the Soviet Union seemed to find in them much with. It has been made apparent that security is not the why the Soviet Union does not agree to the reunification. That is an important demonstration, and it may be in the future.

However, the indispensable premise of our security is the reunification of Germany, without which we feel no solid peace in Europe. And the Soviet Union made no move to meet this point or to comply with that portio tive which called for the reunification of Germany by free elections. The Soviet Delegation refused to discuss the provision for reunification proposal and it never submitted a reunification proposal of its own. It pointed to alleged obstacles to German reunification: the existence of NATO and Western European Union. The Soviet Union said that it would permit the reunification of Germany if the alleged obstacles were done away with. Rather, it took the position that it would not permit the so-called German Democratic Republic regime which the Soviet Government has installed in East Germany, to be subjected to the test of free elections.

The Soviet refusal even to contemplate free elections in East Germany has a significance which goes far beyond the question of Germany. It highlights, as no words could, the situation in Eastern Europe. If the so-called German Democratic Republic does not stand the test of the people's choice, no more can the other peoples of Eastern Europe. This is a major item on our Agenda because the Soviet Government had refused to do so there. But we were all conscious of the fact that Soviet security with its problems in Eastern Europe weighed heavily on the Geneva Conference.

Last July, Chairman Bulganin agreed that there was a connection between German reunification and European security. The Great Powers had a responsibility for the reunification of Germany. If Germany should be reunified by free elections. The Government of the United States will find it hard to understand in the light of this, Chairman Bulganin sent to this Foreign Ministers Conference a Delegation which was apparently under orders to discuss seriously the matter of German reunification.

Conditions in Eastern Europe may be such that the Soviet Union feels that it cannot now agree to free elections in any form, not only because that would have a contagious effect. But we think it is probable that this was not foreseen by the Soviet Government. It was agreed at the highest level and under the most solemn assurances that Germany should be reunified by free elections.

gether through the Subcommittee of the United Nations Disarmament Commission to develop an acceptable system for disarmament. The Foreign Ministers here were given what might be called a watching and supporting role.

Nevertheless, I believe that our discussions on disarmament have been useful. I hope they have led the Soviet Delegation to realize the sincerity of United States purpose. We have made it clear that we are determined to seek reduction of armament, but we want reduction that can be checked and controlled, so that it will not be one-sided. President Eisenhower's proposal for exchange of blueprints and aerial inspection¹ was presented as a start toward that goal.

The Soviet Union has suggested the giving of pledges not to wage an atomic war.² We pointed out that the four of us here, and indeed most of the nations of the world, are already pledged not to wage any war in violation of the Charter of the United Nations.

The great weight of world opinion and the potency of moral judgment should be directed against the initiation of any war, and not merely wars with particular weapons. Any war is horrible. And any government which defied world opinion by going to war in violation of its previous solemn pledges could not be relied upon to keep its new pledge not to use atomic weapons.

Therefore, in the case of atomic as of other weapons, the primary task is to find means of supervision and control. Pledges alone are not enough.

We believe that the Western point of view in these respects is now better understood and that the representatives of the four of us, with Canada, on the Subcommittee of the United Nations Disarmament Commission will accordingly now be able more effectively to carry on their work. The agreement of the four Heads of Government to work through that Subcommittee is, of course, unchanged by anything we have done here.

III.

Item III of our Agenda dealt with the Development of Contacts. Here again, there is no agreement to record. It is apparent that there has been little change in the sensitiveness of the Soviet Government to the introduction into the Soviet Union of any ideas which conflict with the official ideology.

The free democracies believe that human beings were given minds with which to think, and consciences with which to judge right and wrong, and that human dignity requires freedom of thought and freedom of conscience. We also believe that the peoples of the world are essentially a single family, the members of which are naturally riers which interfere with free communications shall be only gradually and not abruptly. Recognizing this, we modest proposals which we believed the Soviet Government accept. However, no concrete proposal made by the West for the elimination of barriers to the free exchange of information between our peoples was acceptable to the Soviet Union. The Soviet Union was primarily interested in contacts which enable it to obtain valuable technological information or to obtain strategic goods rather than the commodities trade which our Directive specifies.

The talks here of our experts have for the first time brought new vistas into the realm of practical discussion. No agreement have been reached, but I think that the efforts made will

I expect that each of our Governments will act in these terms of particular items, and in terms of its judgment as to whether to reduce barriers is in its national interest. But one element of decision is bound to be the eagerness of people to know each other and to learn of new ideas.

Since the July Summit Conference certain barriers to communication have, in fact, been eliminated. The process now seems most sure to go on. It may proceed only slowly and unevenly. The process now started is, we believe, not easily reversed.

Conclusion

International conferences rarely produce as much as we hope from them. We should not complain that hopes are high. The existence of those hopes inspires us to do our best. Having lived through more conferences than are the lot of most human beings, I have learned not to be readily discouraged.

I recall that the three Western Powers took the initiative which led to the Heads of Government Conference. They presented their note to the Soviet Union of May 10, 1955, "We recognize that the solution of these problems will take time and patience. The solution will not be solved at a single meeting nor in a hasty manner."

And I recall that President Eisenhower on his return from the July Summit Conference said that he was "profoundly impressed by the need for all of us to avoid discouragement merely because our proposals, our own approaches, and our own beliefs are not immediately accepted by the other side".²

This Conference has had its merits. We have talked and we have in the main discussed seriously and without vituperation. The talks have not been wholly barren.

THE SOVIET UNION

could gain at the price of forfeiting the good relations at the Summit Conference, the Soviet rulers seemed to have decided.

On my return to the United States, I shall report to the President and the Congress on the basis of the day basis, and will evaluate its result against the background of the vast knowledge and abhorrence of war, and his dedication to a just and durable peace.

I am confident that our national policy will continue to serve the cause of human dignity, as represented by the cause of individuals to exchange ideas; the cause of human freedom represented by control of disarmament; and the cause of peace represented by the unification of Germany.

49. QUADRIPARTITE COMMUNIQUÉ, NOVEMBER 1955

In compliance with the Directive issued by the four Governments after their meeting in Geneva in July,² the President of the French Republic, the United Kingdom, the Soviet Union, and the Socialist Republics and the United States of America, from October 27 to November 16, 1955. They had a comprehensive discussion of the three items entrusted to them for discussion, namely: 1. European Security and Germany, 2. Disarmament, and 3. Development of Contacts between East and West.

The Foreign Ministers agreed to report the results of their discussions to their respective Heads of Government and to the future course of the discussions of the Foreign Ministers to be settled through diplomatic channels.

G. NEGOTIATIONS REGARDING A SETTLEMENT

50. STATEMENT BY THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE JANUARY 5, 1951³

U. S.—U. S. S. R. negotiations for a settlement of the Korean question.

Lease and that this Government's note of February 7, 1950, is in accordance with this agreement.

By "agreement" it is presumed that you have referred to the Government's notes of February 27, 1948, September 3, 1948, and August 8, 1949 which dealt with the disposition of lend-lease vessels.

With respect to the thirty-six war-built merchant vessels, the Government's note of February 27, 1948 stated:

The agreement of your Government concerning these vessels represents only one of the several points necessary to a satisfactory comprehensive settlement of the obligations under the agreement between our two Governments of June 11, 1942.

... Your attention is invited to the fact that at the first meeting of the Working Groups on May 3, 1947, United States Representatives stated that the object of the negotiations was to achieve a satisfactory comprehensive settlement, agreement reached on any particular subject was tentative and subject to agreement on all issues necessary to a general settlement. The Soviet Representatives indicated their concurrence. Accordingly, the first paragraph of the Outline of Main Points of Settlement Proposed by the United States Government with the above-mentioned understandings reached by the representatives of the two Governments on May 3, 1947 reads in part as follows: "As both Governments understood from the outset, the reaching of agreement upon a settlement is tentative and subject to the conclusion of a satisfactory comprehensive settlement."

With respect to pre-war-built merchant vessels and tugs, the Government's note of August 8, 1949 stated in part:

The Government of the United States considers this amount of cash payment satisfactory as the cash price for the sale of the vessels, effective as of August 2, 1945, it being understood that the sale will be consummated only upon the conclusion of the over-all Lend-Lease settlement. Agreement on this point is satisfactorily another of the several points of a comprehensive settlement. The Government of the United States will continue to reserve its rights under Article V of the Agreement of June 11, 1942, to require the return to the United States of the pre-war-built merchant vessels and the tugs as well as other articles until such time as a mutually satisfactory over-all settlement has been reached.

With respect to naval vessels, this Government's note of February 3, 1948 stated in part:

Provided a mutually satisfactory Lend-Lease settlement is reached, upon by our two Governments, the Government of the United States agrees to sell, at agreed prices, to sell to the Soviet Government as a part of such settlement in accordance with the surplus property procedures outlined to represent your Government on June 25, 1947, the following naval craft . . .

Moreover, on other occasions this Government has made it clear to the Soviet Government its position concerning the disposition of lend-lease vessels. In this Government's note of November 1949, which referred to the conditional nature of the agreement,

In this Government's note of September 3, 1948 in connection with the need for a prompt and satisfactory settlement, it was stated:

Therefore, notwithstanding certain offers which this Government has made in connection with its settlement proposals, unless a mutually satisfactory settlement is promptly agreed upon by our two Governments, this Government will have no alternative but to withdraw its offers to transfer full title to certain lend-lease articles to the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and will be obliged to exercise its rights under Article V of the Agreement of June 11, 1942 by requiring the return of such articles to the United States. This is particularly applicable to all merchant and naval vessels. It applies also to military vessels and to certain other lend-lease articles which would be of use to the United States.

From the above it is clear that the agreement referred to in your note of March 21, 1951 consists of a series of tentative offers by the Government of the United States which have been explicitly conditioned upon the conclusion of a prompt and satisfactory lend-lease settlement. In the current conversations on the subject of a lend-lease settlement, Ambassador John C. Wiley has repeatedly called to your attention the fact that the Soviet Government by avoiding the reaching of a prompt and satisfactory over-all settlement clearly has failed to meet the conditions for the sale of any of these vessels. Therefore, this Government is free to withdraw its conditional offer to sell such vessels and this was done in this Government's note of February 7, 1951.¹

Your note of March 21, 1951 advances as a second reason for not returning lend-lease vessels the argument that the vessels are not needed by the United States. Article V of the Master Lend-Lease Agreement of June 11, 1942 is clear and specific on this point, reading as follows:

The Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics will return to the United States of America at the end of the present emergency, as determined by the President of the United States of America, such defense articles transferred under this agreement as shall not have been destroyed, lost or consumed and as shall be determined by the President to be useful in the defense of the United States of America or of the Western Hemisphere or to be otherwise of use to the United States of America.

This article places upon the President of the United States alone the responsibility for the determination of the usefulness of lend-lease articles to the United States. The point raised in your note of March 21, 1951 that certain vessels of the United States may have been disposed of to third countries bears no relationship to the obligations of your Government under Article V and is not subject to discussion between our two Governments.

On July 7, 1948 the President of the United States of America demand. The Soviet Government has returned only one tug and one icebreaker. On February 7, 1951 the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics was informed that the Government of the United States of America had determined that all military and naval lend-lease vessels remaining in Soviet custody be returned to the United States and the prompt return of these vessels is being duly demanded. Therefore, the obligation of the Soviet Government to return the vessels listed in this Government's note of January 1, 1951 is clear and unequivocal.

With reference to the statement in your note of March 1, 1951 that United States naval vessels in Soviet custody are "in poor condition and for the most part unfit for navigation in the Arctic," I wish to emphasize that title to these vessels remains in the hands of the Government of the United States regardless of their condition. I repeat the request made in this Government's note of January 1, 1951 that representatives of the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics be permitted to examine all unserviceable vessels in order to determine their ultimate disposition.

The demand presented in this Government's note of January 1, 1951, that the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics immediately return to the Government of the United States all military, naval and merchant vessels as well as military watercraft transferred to it under the Master Lend-Lease Agreement of August 1, 1942 is hereby reiterated.

A prompt reply is requested in order that the necessary arrangements for return may be promptly agreed upon with the Soviet Government now in Washington.

53. NOTE FROM THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO THE AMBASSADOR AT WASHINGTON,¹ APRIL 27, 1951

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to refer to the negotiations between our two Governments for a settlement of the obligations of the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics under the Lend-Lease Agreement of June 11, 1942, and specific questions of compensation for lend-lease articles not lost, damaged or consumed during the war and the terms and conditions under which such articles may be retained by the Soviet Government. The Government of the United States has upon several occasions demanded the return under Article V of the Master Lend-Lease Agreement of all lend-lease ships and watercraft, particularly in its notes of February 7 and April 6, 1951.³ The question of States, however, has been that the terms of any settlement would reserve the right of the Government of the United States, as set forth in Article V of the Master Lend-Lease Agreement, to the return to the United States by the Soviet Government of such "military-type" articles and would maintain the obligation of the Soviet Government as stipulated in Article III of the Master Lend-Lease Agreement, to obtain the prior consent of the Government of the United States before retransfer of such articles to third parties. The position of the Government of the United States in this matter is in keeping with the settlements already concluded with other Lend-Lease countries having Master Lend-Lease agreements similar to that with the Soviet Government.

The Government of the United States also has requested no payment for "civilian-type" articles lost, destroyed, or consumed during the war. The Government of the United States has requested payment only for those "civilian-type" articles which remained in Soviet custody at the war's end and has offered to transfer title to such articles in consideration of payment of a mutually satisfactory sum on terms agreed by our two Governments. These "civilian-type" articles consist of lend-lease supplies having a peacetime value to the Soviet economy and remaining under the control of the Soviet Government on September 2, 1945, or subsequently received by it with the exception of ships, "military-type" articles as stated above, and certain lend-lease articles title to which had been transferred to the Soviet Government under the Agreements of May 30, 1945 and October 1, 1945.¹

In order to provide a basis for determination of the fair value of "civilian-type" articles remaining in Soviet custody at the war's end, the Government of the United States carefully compiled from its own records a detailed estimated inventory of such articles. In preparing this inventory most liberal allowances were made for wartime losses. The value of this inventory at landed cost less most liberal allowances for depreciation amounted to a total of $2.6 billion. The Government of the United States, in an effort to arrive at a mutually satisfactory sum representing the fair value of these articles to the Soviet peacetime economy, initially proposed the sum of $1 billion repayable in thirty annual installments beginning five years after July 1, 1946, with interest at 2 percent per annum accruing from July 1, 1946 and payable annually thereafter. Subsequently, in a further effort to speed the negotiations to a mutually satisfactory conclusion, the Government of the United States expressed its willingness to accept still lesser sums, first by proposing the amount of $ settlement, in the first place, must take into account the contribution to the victory against the common enemy, must conform with other existing lend-lease settlements. The Government, however, has cited only the settlement with the British Government.

With regard to the first principle put forward by the Soviet Government, the Government of the United States believes that full recognition to the Soviet contribution to the defeat of the enemy by writing off completely the entire lend-lease contribution of the United States to the Soviet war effort and asking for those "civilian-type" articles remaining in the Soviet Union at the war's end. It is to be noted that total lend-lease supplies provided by the United States to the Soviet Union during the war amounted to approximately $10.8 billion and represented the contribution of the skills, labor and resources of the United States to assist the peoples of the Soviet Union in the defeat of the Axis nations. It is also to be noted that the amount of compensation proposed by the Government of the United States is $10 billion. From these facts it may be clearly seen that the Government of the United States has asked no payment for war-time lend-lease totaling approximately $10 billion. This represents, in the opinion of the Government of the United States, great recognition of the community of interest of our two Governments in the achievement of a common victory and takes full cognizance of the part played by the Soviet Government in this effort.

With regard to the Soviet contention that a lend-lease settlement must conform to "precedents", specifically the settlement with the British Government, the Government of the United States invited the attention of the Soviet Government to the fact that the Government of the United States has never agreed to a favored-nation treatment in connection with any lend-lease settlement. Nevertheless, the Government of the United States has sought to reach a lend-lease settlement with the Soviet Government on the basis of the same principles which were used in the settlement with the British Government. In accordance with these principles the British Government was not asked to pay for articles lost, destroyed or consumed in the war; nor was it asked for "military-type" articles remaining in the United Kingdom at the end of the war. Payment was requested only for the "civilian-type" articles remaining in the United Kingdom at the end. The Soviet Government, however, has repeatedly and categorically refused to reach a settlement on the basis of the same principles. It will be recalled in this connection that the Soviet Government

The Soviet Government has thus refused to accept the principles on which it insists and upon which the settlement with the Soviet Government was based. The Government of the United States therefore, reject the contention of the Soviet Government that its offer fully conforms to the British settlement.

The Soviet Government, on the basis of its own principles, offered to pay to the Government of the United States a sum first in the amount of $170 million, later increased to $200 million and more recently has made an offer of $240 million stated by its representatives to be "final". The Soviet Government proposes that payment of this sum should be made over a period of 50 years at interest at 2 percent per annum, but with payment of the principal beginning five years after the conclusion of the war. The Government of the United States considers the amount of the offer of the Soviet Government to be inadequate and unacceptable.

In these circumstances the Government of the United States wishes to point out that four years of direct negotiations between our two Governments have yielded little progress toward a settlement of this question. Therefore, in order to achieve a solution satisfactory to both Governments, the Government of the United States proposes that there be established an arbitral panel consisting of three members, one each to be appointed by the Government of the United States and of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and a third member to be appointed by the President of the International Court of Justice, the question of whether the offer be fair and reasonable terms of financial settlement by the Soviet Government for the lend-lease articles having civilian utility, ships, which were not lost, destroyed or consumed during the war, which are not returned to the United States.

The Government of the United States expresses its hope that the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics will treat the decision of such an arbitral panel on this question as binding upon both Governments and will accept this proposal as a means of reaching final agreement on this issue.¹

54. NOTE FROM THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO THE AMBASSADOR AT WASHINGTON,² JANUARY 7, EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to refer to your Government's Note No. 71 of August 21, 1951⁴ concerning the request of the Government of the United States that the Soviet Government return to the United States lend-lease articles having civilian utility.

Lease Agreement of June 11, 1942.¹ I also have the to your Government's note No. 73 of August 28, 1951, the proposal of the Government of the United States that of the determination of a fair and reasonable lend-lease settlement be submitted to arbitration.

In the latter note your Government rejects the proposal of the Government of the United States that the question of financial settlement be submitted to arbitration. A verbal proposal of $300 million was made by the Soviet Government on August 24, 1951. It was indicated at that time that the Government of the United States considers this amount as fair and reasonable compensation for lend-lease articles of the type which remained in Soviet custody at the end of the war. Moreover, in your note of August 21, 1951, your Government indicates that it does not intend to meet its obligation to return lend-lease vessels as requested by the President of the United States. Instead your Government continues to evade this obligation. This is clearly and specifically stated in Article V of the Lend-Lease Agreement of June 11, 1942, to return lend-lease articles as requested by the President of the United States. In attempting to evade this obligation your Government refers to "understandings" relating to the sale of some of the vessels.

These so-called "understandings," however, were made long ago by the Government of the United States which conditioned upon the prompt conclusion of a mutual lend-lease over-all lend-lease settlement. This condition was never accepted by the Soviet Government. Therefore, the Government of the United States, acting within its legal rights and in full accord with the Lend-Lease Agreement of June 11, 1942, informed the Soviet Government on January 27, 1951,² that the lend-lease vessels which were loaned to the Soviet Government under lend-lease procedures and remain the property of the Government of the United States, are of use to the Government of the United States, and, at the same time, the return of these vessels to the United States was requested in accordance with Article V of the Lend-Lease Agreement of June 11, 1942. Moreover, on the same date the Government of the Soviet Government were informed that the previous offers by the Government of the United States to sell the lend-lease vessels had long since lapsed and that none of the vessels was available for sale to the Soviet Government. On February 1, 1951, the Government of the United States confirmed in a note to the Soviet Government for the return of all the lend-lease vessels.

It is to be noted that on October 12, 1948, the Government of the United States demanded the return to the United States of 186 naval craft in addition to 3 icebreakers and 28 frigates.¹ These 186 vessels at no time had been offered for sale to the Soviet Government on an equal basis. Even in this instance the Soviet Government has refused to meet its obligation.

It is the view of the Government of the United States that the return of all lend-lease vessels is essential to the conclusion of a satisfactory over-all lend-lease settlement. It is also the view of this Government that the Soviet Government is clearly in default on its obligations by not returning these vessels to the United States.

If the Soviet Government remains unwilling to return these vessels to the United States, the Government of the United States suggests that the question be resolved by submission of the matter to the International Court of Justice for adjudication. For that purpose, the Government of the United States proposes that the Soviet Government join with it in submitting the following question to the Court with the understanding that both Governments will be governed by the Court's decision.

Does the failure of the Soviet Government to return lend-lease vessels to the United States, as requested by the Government of the United States, constitute default by the Soviet Government in its obligation under Article V of the Lend-Lease Agreement of June 11, 1942, to return lend-lease articles when so requested?

The Government of the United States therefore requests that the Soviet Government immediately make the necessary arrangements for the return of the lend-lease vessels as requested or agree to the submission of the question of the vessels as stated above to the International Court of Justice for adjudication.

Accept, Excellency, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

56. NOTE FROM THE ACTING SECRETARY OF STATE¹ TO THE SOVIET AMBASSADOR AT WASHINGTON,² NOVEMBER
5, 1952³

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to refer to Mr. Karavaev's note No. 44 of June 16, 1952⁴ concerning the negotiations for a settlement of the obligations of the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics under the Master Lend-Lease Agreement of June 11, 1942.

In his note of June 16, 1952, Mr. Karavaev expressed the readiness of the Soviet Government to return to the United States 186 naval craft, the return of which the Government of the United States initially requested in its note of September 3, 1948,⁵ and has repeatedly requested since that time. On June 18, 1952, United States lend-lease representatives in a meeting with the Soviet lend-lease delegation proposed the immediate establishment of a working group to arrange the details of the return of these vessels. The Soviet delegation, however, was unwilling to agree to the establishment of such a working group or otherwise to arrange for the return of the vessels. Thus the Soviet Government, although formally professing its readiness to return these vessels, has not been prepared to take concrete action for this purpose. If it is in fact the intention of the Soviet Government to return these vessels, the Government of the United States desires that it be informed, without further delay, of the dates and ports of return, or alternatively of the date when Soviet representatives will be available to work out with representatives of the Government of the United States the details for the return of the vessels.

Mr. Karavaev's note also reiterates the desire of the Soviet Government to purchase lend-lease merchant vessels and certain of the lend-lease naval craft now in its custody. The Government of the United States had made its position with respect to lend-lease vessels clear in its notes of April 6, 1951⁶ and January 7, 1952⁷ and in meetings of the lend-lease delegations of our two Governments since January 1951. The offers of the Government of the United States early in the settlement negotiations to sell lend-lease merchant vessels and a number of lend-lease naval vessels were expressly conditioned upon the prompt conclusion of a satisfactory over-all lend-lease settlement. When it became unmistakably clear that the Soviet Government did not intend to conclude a settlement promptly, the Government of the United States in January 1951 withdrew these offers and requested the return of all lend-lease vessels.

That the Soviet Government has consistently avoided the con-the negotiations. A particular example of the attitude of the Soviet Government toward the prompt conclusion of a settlement is its failure to return the 186 vessels which were requested by the Government of the United States over four years ago and were never offered for sale. This attitude is further exemplified by the refusal of the Soviet Government to resolve the question of a financial settlement through arbitration as proposed by the Government of the United States in its note of April 27, 1951¹ and also by the refusal of the Soviet Government to submit the question of the return of lend-lease vessels to the International Court of Justice for adjudication, as proposed by the Government of the United States in its note of January 7, 1952.

Since the Soviet Government has not only failed to return the vessels but also has refused to submit the matter to adjudication, the Government of the United States must conclude that it is the intention of the Soviet Government to remain in default of Article V of the Agreement of June 11, 1942.

As regards the question of a financial settlement which is also mentioned in Mr. Karavaev's note, the Government of the United States has offered to accept the sum of $800 million which it considers fair and reasonable compensation for the vast quantities of civilian-type lend-lease articles remaining in Soviet custody at the end of hostilities. However, in the interests of achieving a settlement promptly, this Government offered to reduce further the amount requested provided a truly constructive offer was made by the Soviet side. The Government of the United States, in its note of January 7, 1952, has already stated that it considers the latest offer of the Soviet Government of $300 million as far from fair and reasonable compensation for the residual lend-lease articles. Furthermore, the Government of the United States must take into account the fact that by not returning the 186 naval craft and other vessels requested, the Soviet Government is in clear default of the very agreement under which negotiations of a lend-lease settlement have been carried on since April 1947. It is the position of the Government of the United States, therefore, that when the Soviet Government has made arrangements to fulfill its obligations under Article V of the Lend-Lease Agreement of June 11, 1942, the Government of the United States in the interest of a settlement will be prepared to make further proposals concerning a financial settlement.

If it is the serious intention of the Soviet Government to advance the conclusion of a mutually satisfactory settlement agreement, it can do so by returning the lend-lease vessels promptly.

57. AIDE-MÉMOIRE FROM THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE TO THE SOVIET EMBASSY AT WASHINGTON, SEPTEMBER 11, 1953 ¹

On November 5, 1952 the Acting Secretary of State addressed a note² to His Excellency the Ambassador of the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics concerning the negotiations for settlement of the obligations of the Soviet Government under the Master Lend-Lease Agreement of June 11, 1942. In this note it was pointed out that although the Soviet Government had expressed its readiness to return to the United States 186 naval craft, the return of which the Government of the United States initially requested in its note of September 3, 1948³ and repeatedly requested thereafter, the Soviet Government had not been prepared to take any concrete action for this purpose. It was suggested that if it was in fact the intention of the Soviet Government to return those vessels, the Government of the United States should be informed without further delay of the dates and ports of return, or alternatively of the date when Soviet representatives would be available to work out with representatives of the Government of the United States the details for the return of the vessels.

The Acting Secretary's note also reiterated the position of the Government of the United States with respect to the other lend-lease vessels remaining in the custody of the Soviet Government. As had been made clear in the United States notes of April 6, 1951⁴ and January 7, 1952⁵ and in meetings of the lend-lease delegations of the two Governments since January 1951, the offers of the Government of the United States early in the settlement negotiations to sell lend-lease merchant vessels and a number of lend-lease naval craft were expressly conditioned upon the prompt conclusion of a satisfactory lend-lease settlement. When in January 1951 the Soviet Government had not arrived at a settlement of its lend-lease obligations the Government of the United States withdrew these offers and requested the return of all lend-lease vessels. Furthermore, it had become unmistakably clear from the history of the negotiations that the Soviet Government had consistently avoided the conclusion of a prompt settlement.

With respect to the question of a financial settlement the note of the Acting Secretary recalled that the Government of the United States had offered to accept the sum of $800 million which it considered fair and reasonable compensation for the vast quantities of civilian-type lend-lease articles remaining in Soviet custody at the end of hostilities but that in the interest of achieving a settlement, the Government of the United States was willing to consider a financial settlement of of $300 million to be far from fair and reasonable compensation for the residual lend-lease articles and it was pointed out furthermore that the Government of the United States had to take into account the fact that by not returning the 186 naval craft and other vessels requested, the Soviet Government was in clear default of the very agreement under which negotiations have been carried on since April 1947. The note of the Acting Secretary of State affirmed that it is therefore the position of the Government of the United States that when the Soviet Government has made arrangements to fulfill its obligations under Article V of the Lend-Lease Agreement of June 11, 1942, the Government of the United States in the interest of a settlement, will be prepared to make further proposals concerning a financial settlement.

On March 20, 1953 a further note¹ was sent to the Embassy of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics inquiring when a reply to the note of November 5, 1952 might be expected. No replies to either of these notes have been received by the Government of the United States.

As His Excellency is aware, more than six years have elapsed since the beginning on April 30, 1947 of the negotiations for a settlement of the obligations of the Soviet Government under the Lend-Lease Agreement of June 11, 1942. Accordingly, the Government of the United States requests that it be advised at an early date of the intentions of the Soviet Government with respect to the return of United States-owned lend-lease vessels as required under Article V of the Agreement of June 11, 1942.

58. NOTE FROM THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE² TO THE SOVIET AMBASSADOR AT WASHINGTON,³ NOVEMBER
BER 24, 1953⁴

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to refer to your note No. 13 of October 20, 1953⁵ concerning the negotiations for a settlement of the obligations of the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics under the Master Lend-Lease Agreement of June 11, 1942.

The Government of the United States notes that the Soviet Government has again stated that it is prepared to return the 186 naval craft initially requested by this Government on September 3, 1948.⁶ The Government of the United States also notes that the Soviet Government states it is now willing to discuss the technical arrangements for the transfer of these vessels to the United States. Accordingly, it is proposed that representatives of our two Governments meet

The Government of the United States would appreciate being advised at the earliest possible date whether the above date is acceptable to the Soviet Government.

Accept, Excellency, the renewed assurances of my high regard and consideration.

59. AIDE-MÉMOIRE FROM THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE TO THE SOVIET EMBASSY AT WASHINGTON, DECEMBER 15, 1953¹

In its note of November 5, 1952,² the Government of the United States pointed out that the Soviet Government, by its failure to return the 186 naval craft and other lend-lease vessels requested by the United States, was in default of the very agreement under which the lease negotiations have been carried on since April 1947. The Soviet Government was advised that it is therefore the position of the Government of the United States that when the Soviet Government makes the necessary arrangements to fulfill its obligations under Article V of the Lend-Lease Agreement of June 11, 1942, the Government of the United States in the interest of a settlement, will be prepared to consider any proposals concerning a financial settlement.

The Soviet Government in its note of October 20, 1952, stated that it has agreed to return the 186 naval craft and other vessels and that it is willing to discuss the technical arrangements for the return of these vessels to the United States. Accordingly, the Government of the United States proposed in its note of November 24, 1952³ that representatives of the two Governments meet on December 15, 1952, at the Department of State to work out the details for the return of the 186 naval craft to the United States. His Excellency, the Ambassador of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, replied by note of December 3,⁴ stating that the Soviet Government was in agreement with the proposal of the Government of the United States and that representatives of the two Governments meet on December 15, 1952.

From these exchanges of correspondence it was the understanding of the Government of the United States that working groups of representatives of the two Governments would meet on December 15 to work out the details for the return of the 186 naval craft to the United States. On December 14, His Excellency advised the Acting Secretary of State that the Soviet Government desired to deal simultaneously with all of the issues in the lend-lease negotiations including the return of the 186 naval craft to the United States. The Acting Secretary replied that the Government of the United States Government that the meeting scheduled for December 15 should be cancelled.

The Government of the United States has carefully considered the position of the Soviet Government and has concluded that the various questions should be dealt with on a step-by-step basis. In reaching this conclusion, this Government has been guided by its belief that adherence to the terms of the Lend-Lease Agreement of June 11, 1942 can best contribute to the creation of the mutual understanding necessary to the negotiation of a final lend-lease settlement agreement.

With respect to the question of the 186 naval craft, the Government of the United States has taken into account the fact that the return of these craft was requested initially on September 3, 1948,¹ more than five years ago, and that at no time were these vessels offered for sale to the Soviet Government. Furthermore, Article V of the Lend-Lease Agreement of June 11, 1942 provides unconditionally that the Soviet Government shall return lend-lease articles to the United States when requested to do so by the President of the United States. Accordingly the return of lend-lease vessels requested by the President of the United States is not an issue for negotiation nor can it be made dependent upon the resolving of other questions in the lend-lease negotiations.

It is the position of this Government, therefore, that the first step should be the working out of detailed arrangements for the return of the 186 naval craft. In this connection, the United States working group previously designated for this purpose will be prepared to meet at the earliest convenience of the Soviet representatives. Following the working out of such arrangements the two Governments should be prepared to take up the remaining matters under the Lend-Lease Agreement.

60. STATEMENT BY THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE, MARCH 26, 1954 ²

Agreement was reached on March 26 with representatives of the Soviet Government on the dates and procedures for return to U. These craft are part of a group of 186 naval craft, the return of which the United States first requested on September 3, 1948. The Soviet Government agreed to return the 186 craft on October 2,

The Soviet Government agreed to return the 186 craft on October 1, 1945, and on December 28, 1953, representatives of the two Governments began to work out the necessary details for the return of the craft. In May and June 38 naval craft, consisting of 12 motor torpedo boats and 26 submarine chasers, were returned to U. S. Navy representatives at the port of Istanbul, Turkey.

Discussions are continuing on the ports, dates, and procedures for the return of the other 121 naval craft.

H. REPATRIATION OF GERMAN AND JAPANESE PRISONERS OF WAR

63. STATEMENT BY THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE, FEBRUARY 3, 1950 ¹

On the afternoon of February 1, 1950, the Soviet Ambassador handed a note² to the Secretary of State proposing the early appointment, in accordance with a Far Eastern Commission policy decision of April 3, 1946,³ of a special International Military Court to try as war criminals the Emperor of Japan and several former Japanese generals on charges of crimes against humanity.

The timing and content of the Soviet note—coming as it did 4 years after the surrender and many months after the war crime trials in Japan had been terminated—strongly suggest that the principal motivation of the note is to divert attention from Soviet failure to repatriate or otherwise explain the fate of over 370,000 Japanese prisoners detained in Soviet-held territory. Following repeated efforts by General MacArthur's headquarters to obtain information on the fate of these prisoners, the Secretary of State sent a note on December 30, 1949, to the Soviet Ambassador urging that his Government agree to the designation of an international humanitarian organization charged with making a complete survey of the situation.⁴ No reply, not even an acknowledgment, has been received to this note.

The minutes of the seventh meeting of the Far Eastern Commission on April 3, 1946, show that the Commission approved the policy decision referred to by the Soviet Ambassador with the express understanding that the directive to be forwarded to the Supreme Commander embodying the Far Eastern Commission decision should be so worded as to exempt the Japanese Emperor from indictment as a war criminal without direct authorization. Since the directive to the Supreme Commander was so worded, he can accordingly take no action against the Japanese Emperor without a new policy decision by the Far Eastern Commission.

These facts are known to the Soviet Government, which could have introduced a policy proposal in the Far Eastern Commission in accordance with normal procedure, along the lines of the recommendations contained in its note. That the Soviet Government did not elect to do so but made these belated charges in a sensational

64. STATEMENT BY THE FOREIGN MINISTERS UNITED STATES, THE UNITED KINGDOM, AND
MAY 13, 1950 ¹

The three Foreign Ministers have noted with surprise and concern the Soviet statement of May 4 which declared that repatriation of German prisoners of war from the Soviet Union and many has now been completed.² They recall the repeated promises made by the three Western Occupation Powers to secure the Soviet Government's compliance with the quadripartite agreement to repatriate all German prisoners of war by December 31, 1946.

The Soviet statement stands in sharp contradiction with the fact that a very large number of German families are still awaiting the return of their relatives taken prisoner of whom they have no direct news during their captivity in the Soviet Union. The Ministers note furthermore the inconsistencies among the reports furnished at different times by the Soviet Government concerning the numbers, whereabouts and fate of German prisoners of war and deported civilians. This situation reveals a grave disregard for the rights of these people.

It is moreover apparent that this is not an isolated incident. The Soviet Government has also failed to repatriate numerous prisoners of war from German occupied countries taken prisoner during the war, as more than 300,000 Japanese nationals who still remain unrepatriated for in Soviet territory.

The Ministers have agreed that they will take all possible steps to obtain information bearing on the fate of prisoners of war and civilians not yet repatriated from the Soviet Union and to secure their repatriation in the largest possible number of cases.

65. NOTE FROM THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE SOVIET EMBASSY AT WASHINGTON, JUNE 8,

The Department of State acknowledges the receipt of a note of May 11, 1950 ³ from the Embassy of the Union of Soviet Republics. The note calls attention to Circular No. 5 "On the Issue of War Criminals" issued by command of General Marshal Zhukov on March 7, 1950.⁴ It is alleged that the circular runs counter to the Charter of the International Military Tribunal for the Far East.

the decision of the Far Eastern Commission of April 3, 1946,¹ relating to the apprehension, trial and punishment of war criminals in the Far East. The Government of the United States is urged to take measures to have Circular No. 5 revoked.

Inasmuch as the matters referred to in the note are within the jurisdiction of the Far Eastern Commission, the request of the Soviet Government should have been addressed to the Commission. In this connection the attention of the Soviet Government is called to the minutes of the 193d meeting of the Fec, May 18, 1950² which contain a statement of the views of the United States on the parole of Japanese war criminals. Nevertheless, as the position of the Soviet Government is at variance with the views of the Government of the United States, those views are set forth for the Soviet Government's information.

The Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers is the sole executive authority for the Allied Powers in Japan, and as such, has the responsibility for carrying out the judgments of any international court appointed by him. This is specifically recognized by Article 17 of the Charter of the International Military Tribunal for the Far East and by paragraph 5 (b) (1) of the Far Eastern Commission policy decision of April 3, 1946.

Under Article 17 of the Charter of the International Military Tribunal for the Far East the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers may "at any time" reduce or otherwise alter a sentence of the Tribunal except to increase its severity and paragraph 5 (b) (2) of the Far Eastern Commission policy decision of April 3, 1946 confirms that he has "the power to approve, reduce or otherwise alter any sentences," imposed by any international courts appointed by him. Whether the Supreme Commander can exercise his power to reduce or otherwise alter a sentence "only while considering the question of the approval of this sentence" as contended in the Soviet Government's note or whether this may be done "at any time" as provided by Article 17 of the Charter quoted above is unnecessary to consider at this time as no reductions or alterations in the sentence imposed by the International Military Tribunal for the Far East have been made by the Supreme Commander and none are contemplated by him.

The Soviet Government is apparently under the impression that paroles such as are provided for by Circular No. 5 are alterations of the sentences imposed by the International Military Tribunal. This is a fundamental error. A parole is in no sense an alteration of a sentence but permission by the appropriate authority for the convicted criminal to serve part of his sentence outside of prison under are violated. This method of dealing with convicts in accordance with the practice in enlightened and democratic countries.

For the reasons indicated the Government of the United States declines the request of the Soviet Government that the United States be looking to the revocation by the Supreme Command of the Soviet No. 5.

66. NOTE FROM THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO THE AMERICAN CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES AT WASHINGTON, 1950

The Secretary of State presents his compliments to the American Chargé d'Affaires ad interim of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and refers to the Secretary's note of December 30, 1949, regarding cooperation of the Soviet Union in the matter of releasing Japanese prisoners. The figures accounting for over 370,000 Japanese nationals, whose names are in figures considered reliable, are in areas under Soviet control or alive.

The note under reference alluded to the repatriation of Japanese prisoners by the Soviet Union under the Potsdam Declaration and pointed out that the prolonged detention of prisoners of war after the cessation of hostilities is in patent conflict with accepted humanitarian concepts of fundamental human rights and freedom of movement as set forth in the Geneva Convention of 1949 relative to the treatment of prisoners of war⁴ which was signed by the United States and the Allied Powers including the Soviet Union. In the interim, the problem of long-standing concern to the Allied Powers has remained. The note specifically requested that the Soviet Government designate an international humanitarian body to be charged with making a complete first-hand survey of Japanese prisoners in a view to obtaining exact information on Japanese prisoners since the cessation of hostilities.

The Embassy is reminded that the note under reference has not been answered or acknowledged, directly or indirectly, over five months ago and that an early indication of the Soviet Government to the United States Government would be appreciated.⁵

67. NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN AMBASSADOR AT MOSCOW¹ TO THE SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTER,² JULY 14, 1950³

The Ambassador of the United States of America presents his compliments to the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and on instructions from his Government has the honor to refer to the Soviet press announcement of May 5, 1950 stating that the repatriation of German prisoners of war from the Soviet Union to Germany has been completed with the exception of 9,717 persons convicted of grave war crimes, 3,815 persons whose alleged war crimes are in the process of investigation, and 14 persons detained owing to illness.

The Government of the United States shares the shock and concern of the German people⁵ over this public announcement, and is unable to give credence to the Soviet statement that there are only 13,544 German prisoners of war in its custody. These figures are completely at variance with the information in the possession of the Government of the United States, showing that large numbers of German prisoners of war known to have been in the Soviet custody have not yet been returned to their homes.

The Soviet Government is again informed that, in accordance with the agreement reached by the Council of Foreign Ministers at Moscow in April 1947 for the repatriation before December 31, 1948, of all German prisoners of war in the custody of the four occupying powers, the United States, the United Kingdom, and France did in fact repatriate all German prisoners of war in their custody prior to the agreed date. The United States, on its part, actually completed its program of repatriation of German prisoners of war as early as June 30, 1947.

The Government of the Soviet Union has repeatedly failed to respond to requests for pertinent information of its actions under the agreement of April 1947.⁷ On January 24, 1949, the Soviet Minister of Foreign Affairs, in acknowledging receipt of one of these inquiries, admitted that an unspecified number of German prisoners of war were still held in Soviet custody, failing however to furnish any information concerning them, but stating unequivocally that the Soviet Government would complete the repatriation of German prisoners of war remaining in its custody during 1949.⁸ It is clear from the announcement of May 5, 1950, that the Soviet Government has failed to honor this commitment just as it has failed to honor its earlier of April 1947. In this connection, the Government of the United States desires to make it plain that the arbitrary reclassification of the Soviet Government of prisoners of war as civilians will, of course, have the effect of relieving the Soviet Government of its obligation to return these persons to their homes and families.

By its delay in repatriating these German prisoners of war, the Soviet Government's repeated refusal to furnish information concerning their whereabouts has caused suffering and anxiety for large numbers of prisoners of war in the Soviet custody and their relatives and has demonstrated a complete disregard for the human rights of the unfortunate persons concerned. The United States Government alone has the power to mitigate this suffering and could do so by taking the following steps:

(1) Furnish full information on the identification of persons alleged to have been convicted of grave war crimes, persons whose alleged war crimes are in the process of investigation, and the 14 persons said to be under treatment for illness, retained by the Soviet Union as stated in the Soviet announcement of May 5. This information would include the present location and treatment of these persons, data on the sentences imposed on persons said to have been convicted of war crimes, and the status of investigations pending, as well as information with respect to steps taken by the Soviet Government to ensure the right of the persons of war to correspond with their families in Germany.

(2) In accordance with the Geneva Convention of July 1929 to which the Soviet Union is a party, to provide information on the number, identity, date of death and place of burial of prisoners of war and civilian internees who have died in captivity in the Soviet Union or in transit.

(3) Permit investigation in the Soviet Union by an impartial international body in order that the actual fate of the prisoners of war known to have been in Soviet custody may be ascertained. For this purpose, the Government of the United States suggests the establishment of an ad hoc commission designated by the United Nations group composed of representatives of the four powers not aligned with Germany, or representatives of neutral powers, or any other group mutually acceptable. It is noted in this connection that the United States, the United Kingdom, and France, at the time when they had German prisoners of war in their custody, furnished information concerning them to the interested parties, and permitted impartial access to the prisoners of war by international taken prisoners during the war, or who were brought to the U.S.S.R. as civilian internees.

Information concerning the action which the Soviet Government is prepared to take on this matter would be welcomed by the Government of the United States, which would be willing to cooperate in any appropriate way.¹

58. LETTER FROM THE DELEGATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES, THE UNITED KINGDOM, AND AUSTRALIA TO THE SECRETARY-GENERAL OF THE UNITED NATIONS AUGUST 25, 1950²

We have the honour to refer to our telegram of 20 August 1950 (A/1327), submitting the item "Failure of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to repatriate or otherwise account for prisoners of war detained in Soviet territory" to be placed on the provisional agenda of the fifth session of the General Assembly.

The explanatory memorandum, referred to in the above-mentioned telegram, follows:

At the end of hostilities in Europe and in the Far East in 1945 large numbers of military personnel of various nationalities were in the hands of the Allied Powers. The prompt repatriation of these prisoners was demanded by accepted international practice and necessity by the elementary principles of humanity.

The Allied Powers clearly recognized at the outset this responsibility and entered into agreements to repatriate prisoners of war (see paragraph 9 of the Potsdam Proclamation of 26 July 1945; the Foreign Ministers Agreement in Moscow of 23 April 1947; the Agreement between the U.S.S.R. and the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers in Japan of 19 December 1946, which are reproduced in annexes I, II and III).

The Soviet Union has not complied fully with these agreements. Moreover, the other governments concerned have on various occasions requested the U.S.S.R. to furnish information concerning its repatriation programmes and have even in certain cases offered transportation facilities for repatriation. However, on 22 April 1950 and 5 May 1950, TASS announced that the U. S. S. R. had completed the repatriation of all Japanese and German prisoners of war from its territory except for persons detained in connexion with war crimes or on account of illness (see annexes IV and V).

Evidence exists to show that these statements are not true. More assistance to bring about an early settlement of the p annexes VI and VII).

On the basis of the evidence of Soviet non-compliance, having control responsibility in Germany and Japan have occasions stated to the Soviet Government their inab credence to the TASS announcements, and have requested to the designation of an international humanitarian body tion which should make a thorough examination of the programme at first hand (see annexes VIII, IX, and X).

Since all these efforts have been without avail, the Gov Australia, the United Kingdom and the United States it essential to place the matter before the General Ass Articles 10, 14, and 1, paragraph 3, of the Charter. Governments hope that the General Assembly will cor whereby full information on all these persons may be obtained. repatriation of all those now living may be secured.

Further documents will be supplied later.¹

Part XII

EASTERN EUROPEAN COMMUNIST REGIMES AND THE BALTIC STATES

A. GENERAL

Basic United States Policy

1. STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE AT A NEWS CONFERENCE, FEBRUARY 24, 1950 ¹

I should like to say a few words about our relations with certain countries of Eastern Europe, particularly Bulgaria and Hungary which have been highlighted by the events of the past week.

The conduct of the Bulgarian Government has given us no alternative but to suspend diplomatic relations with that country.² The sentencing by a Hungarian court of an American citizen to 15 years imprisonment on false charges without a fair trial ³ is part of a general pattern common to all those countries which now have Communist governments and are closely tied to the Soviet Union. This pattern must now be absolutely clear to even the most casual observer.

The principal purpose behind what these governments have been doing is plainly to make the so-called iron curtain impenetrable. Their purpose is to cut off the people of Eastern Europe from the free world, to deprive them of all hope of any other fate than that reserved for them by their present rulers, and to liquidate all signs and symbols of Western influence to the accompaniment of a flood of propaganda and denunciation of "spies," "warmongers," and the other familiar whipping boys.

In pursuit of their aims, the present Communist rulers of these nations have ruthlessly used the power of the state to frighten their own populations and to take action against the diplomats and citizens appropriately can give them as evidence of hostility and action in their internal affairs. But here we are dealing with the fundamentals of human and political behavior. It is the responsibility of the Government and of the American people to promote and protect human rights. That is why we have vigorously supported the provisions of the United Nations Charter and of the protocols on this subject and attempted to make them as effective as possible.

It is notable that the Governments of Bulgaria, Rumania, besides making it increasingly difficult for them to maintain diplomatic missions and virtually impossible to give protection to American citizens and American interests, systematically denied human rights and fundamental freedoms to their own peoples in flagrant violation of the provisions of the treaties.¹

The countries of Eastern Europe claim to be sovereign and equal members of the international community. The United States has treated them as such, for these nations have had no choice in the past and have a right to it. We have wished to maintain normal relations with them regardless of their political philosophies and institutions. We have wished to maintain our ties of friendship with the peoples of these countries with whose welfare and freedom the American people are very deeply concerned.

On the other hand, states which claim to be sovereign and equal members of the international community must act in accordance with the principles of the United Nations. Governments must observe accepted standards in their relations with the rest of the world, and they must maintain the attributes of independence.

With regard to Bulgaria and Hungary, whose recent actions have brought their relations with the United States to a new point since the war, it is well to remember that a few years ago these states were allies of Nazi Germany. It was the policy of the Allied Powers, in proceeding rapidly to the conclusion of treaties with them, to give them a full opportunity to place again in the family of nations. Their present actions, in regard of the wishes of their peoples, seem bent on denying them this opportunity.

I should like to repeat that we do not regard the people of Eastern Europe as responsible for the deterioration of our relations with these governments, and the measures which the United States is taking to take in order to meet the situation created by the actions of those governments are in no sense directed against the people, who after their experience with Nazi rule have a right to expect freedom and independence. This country will not diminish its concern for their rights and their well-being.

. STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT, FEBRUARY 8, 1955

I am happy to be with you tonight for I strongly believe that Radio Free Europe and the Crusade for Freedom are vital to success in the battle for men's minds.

Many of us learned during the war that the most potent force is spiritual; that the appeal to men's minds produces a dedication which surmounts every trial and test until victory is won.

To toughen, strengthen, fortify such dedication to the cause of freedom is the mission of Radio Free Europe.

Substantial progress has already been made. The free world is growing stronger because its peoples are growing in their determination to stand together and in their faith that freedom and justice will triumph.

Radio Free Europe, each day of the year, nourishes this growth.

Here at home, we Americans face the future with confidence. But we must also face up to the dangers that still lurk about us. We must ever work to strengthen our posture of defense and to reinforce our alliances and friendships in the free world.

While we maintain our vigilance at home and abroad, we must help intensify the will for freedom in the satellite countries behind the Iron Curtain. These countries are in the Soviet backyard, and only so long as their people are reminded that the outside world has not forgotten them—only that long do they remain as potential deterrents to Soviet aggression.

The great majority of the 70 million captives in these satellite countries have known liberty in the past. They now need our constant friendship and help if they are to believe in their future.

Therefore, the mission of Radio Free Europe merits greater support than before. It serves our national security and the cause of peace.

I have long given the Crusade for Freedom my strong endorsement. I did that because I am familiar with its purposes, its operations, the people who run it, and, perhaps, most important, its hard-hitting effectiveness as an independent American enterprise.

I know that our country and our friends behind the Iron Curtain can count on you for active participation and leadership in this most critical of all battles—the winning of men's minds. Without this victory, we can have no other victories. By your efforts, backed up by America, we can achieve our great goal—that of enabling us and all the peoples of the world to enjoy in peace the blessings of freedom.

3. NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN LEGATION AT BUCHAREST TO THE RUMANIAN FOREIGN MINISTRY, JANUARY 1950¹

The Legation of the United States of America presents its compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Rumania and has the honor to refer to the Legation's note of August 1, 1949² and to the Rumanian Government's note of August 1, 1949³ inviting the United States Government to join the United States Government in naming a Commission, in accordance with Article 38 of the Peace Treaty,⁴ to settle the dispute which has arisen over the interpretation and execution of Article 3 of the Treaty. Reference is also made to the Ministry's note of September 2, 1949⁵ and to the Legation's note of September 19, 1949⁶ on the same subject.

The Legation has the honor to inform the Ministry that the United States Government has designated Mr. Edwin D. Dickinson as its representative on the proposed Commission. It is requested that the Rumanian Government designate its representative for the Commission and enter into consultation immediately with the United States Government through the American Minister in Bucharest, with a view to the appointment of the third member of the Commission as provided for in Article 38 of the Peace Treaty.

4. ADVISORY OPINION OF THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE, MARCH 30 1950 (Excerpts)⁶

On October 22nd, 1949, the General Assembly of the United Nations adopted the following Resolution:⁷

"Whereas the United Nations, pursuant to Article 1 of its Charter, shall promote universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Whereas the General Assembly, at the second part of its Regular Session, considered the question of the obligation of the United States to negotiate a peace treaty with Bulgaria, Hungary, and Rumania, ¹ Department of State Bulletin, Jan. 16, 1950, p. 97. The American Legations at Sofia and Budapest sent similar notes to the Bulgarian and Hungarian Governments. The United States Government's note to the Rumanian Government was dated August 1, 1949.

Bulgaria and Hungary of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Whereas the General Assembly, on 30 April 1949, adopted Resolution 272 (III) ¹ concerning this question in which it expressed its deep concern at the grave accusations made against the Governments of Bulgaria and Hungary regarding the suppression of human rights and fundamental freedoms in those countries; noted with satisfaction that steps had been taken by several States signatories to the Treaties of Peace with Bulgaria ² and Hungary ³ regarding these accusations; expressed the hope that measures would be diligently applied, in accordance with the Treaties, in order to ensure respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms; and most urgently drew the attention of the Governments of Bulgaria and Hungary to their obligations under the Peace Treaties, including the obligation to co-operate in the settlement of the question,

Whereas the General Assembly has resolved to consider also at the Fourth Regular Session the question of the observance in Romania of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Whereas certain of the Allied and Associated Powers signatories to the Treaties of Peace with Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania have charged the Governments of those countries with violations of the Treaties of Peace and have called upon those Governments to take remedial measures,⁴

Whereas the Governments of Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania have rejected the charges of Treaty violations,⁵

Whereas the Governments of the Allied and Associated Powers concerned have sought unsuccessfully to refer the question of Treaty violations to the Heads of Mission in Sofia, Budapest and Bucharest, in pursuance of certain provisions in the Treaties of Peace,

Whereas the Governments of these Allied and Associated Powers have called upon the Governments of Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania to join in appointing Commissions pursuant to the provisions of the respective Treaties of Peace for the settlement of disputes concerning the interpretation or execution of these Treaties,⁶

Whereas the Governments of Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania have refused to appoint their representatives to the Treaty Commissions, maintaining that they were under no legal obligation to do so,

Whereas the Secretary-General of the United Nations is authorized by the Treaties of Peace, upon request by either party to

if the parties fail to agree upon the appointment member,

Whereas it is important for the Secretary-General to authoritatively concerning the scope of his authority in the Treaties of Peace,

The General Assembly

1. Expresses its continuing interest in and its increase at the grave accusations made against Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania;

2. Records its opinion that the refusal of the Governments of Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania to co-operate in examining the grave charges with regard to the violation of human rights and fundamental freedoms justifies the report of the General Assembly about the state of affairs in Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania in this respect;

3. Decides to submit the following questions to the International Court of Justice for an advisory opinion:

I. Do the diplomatic exchanges between the Governments of Bulgaria and Romania, on the one hand, and the Allied and Associated Powers signatories to the Treaties of Peace, on the other, concerning the implementation of Article 2 of the Treaty of Peace with Bulgaria and Hungary and Article 3 of the Treaty of Peace with Romania, disclose disputes subject to the provisions for the settlement of disputes in Article 36 of the Treaty of Peace with Bulgaria and Hungary, Article 40 of the Treaty of Peace with Romania and Article 38 of the Treaty of Peace with Romania?

In the event of an affirmative reply to question I,

II. Are the Governments of Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania obligated to carry out the provisions of the articles referred to in question I, in accordance with the provisions for the appointment of their representatives to the Treaty Commissions?

In the event of an affirmative reply to question II, will the Governments deliver their opinion, the Governments concerned notified the Secretary-General that they have agreed to the provisions of the Treaty Commissions?

the Treaty Commission, is the Secretary-General of the United Nations authorized to appoint the third member of the Commission upon the request of the other party to a dispute according to the provisions of the respective Treaties?"

In the event of an affirmative reply to question III:

'IV. Would a Treaty Commission composed of a representative of one party and a third member appointed by the Secretary-General of the United Nations constitute a Commission, within the meaning of the relevant Treaty articles, competent to make a definitive and binding decision in settlement of a dispute?"

4. Requests the Secretary-General to make available to the International Court of Justice the relevant exchanges of diplomatic correspondence communicated to the Secretary-General for circulation to the Members of the United Nations and the records of the General Assembly proceedings on this question.

5. Decides to retain on the agenda of the Fifth Regular Session of the General Assembly the question of the observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania, with a view to ensuring that the charges are appropriately examined and dealt with."

In conformity with the Resolution of the General Assembly of October 22nd, 1949, the Court is at present called upon to give an Opinion only on Questions I and II set forth in that Resolution.

The power of the Court to exercise its advisory function in the present case has been contested by the Governments of Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania, and also by several other Governments in the communications which they have addressed to the Court. This objection is founded mainly on two arguments.

It is contended that the Request for an Opinion was an action ultra vires on the part of the General Assembly because, in dealing with the question of the observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the three States mentioned above, it was "interfering" or "intervening" in matters essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of States. This contention against the exercise by the Court of its advisory function seems thus to be based on the alleged incompetence of the General Assembly itself, an incompetence deduced

Peace Treaties concerning the observance of human fundamental freedoms. For the purposes of the present it suffices to note that the General Assembly justified its Resolution by stating that "the United Nations, in accordance with Article 55 of the Charter, shall promote universal peace and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms of all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion."

The Court is not called upon to deal with the questions before the General Assembly since the Questions put to it relate neither to the alleged violations of the provisions of the Treaty nor to the interpretation of the articles relating to these matters. The scope of the Request is much more limited. It is directed solely at obtaining from the Court certain clarifications of a legal nature concerning the applicability of the procedure for the settlement of disputes provided for in the express terms of the Treaty with Bulgaria, Article 40 of the Treaty with Hungary and Article 38 of the Treaty with Romania. The interpretation of the terms of a treaty for this purpose could not be considered a question essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the parties. It is a question of international law which, by its very nature, falls within the competence of the Court.

These considerations also suffice to dispose of the objections based on the principle of domestic jurisdiction and directed against the competence of the Court, namely, that the Court, as an organ of the United Nations, is bound to observe the provisions of the Charter, including Article 2, paragraph 7.

The same considerations furnish an answer to the objection that the advisory procedure before the Court would take the form of a procedure instituted by the Peace Treaties for the settlement of disputes. So far from placing an obstacle in the way of the advisory procedure, the object of this Request is to facilitate the provision of information for the General Assembly as to its application in the circumstances of the present case.

It thus appears that these objections to the Court's competence to give the Advisory Opinion which has been requested are unfounded and cannot be upheld.

Another argument that has been invoked against the Court to answer the Questions put to it in this case is the opposition of the Governments of Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania to the advisory procedure. The Court cannot, it is said, give an Advisory Opinion requested without violating the principle of international law according to which no state is bound by a decision of the Court unless it has accepted the jurisdiction of the Court.

o advisory proceedings even where the Request for an Opinion relates to a legal question actually pending between States. The Court's reply is only of an advisory character: as such, it has no binding force. It follows that no State, whether a Member of the United Nations or not, can prevent the giving of an Advisory Opinion which the United Nations considers to be desirable in order to obtain enlightenment as to the course of action it should take. The Court's Opinion is given not to the States, but to the organ which is entitled to request it; the reply of the Court, itself an "organ of the United Nations", represents its participation in the activities of the Organization, and, in principle, should not be refused.

Question I involves two main points. First, do the diplomatic exchanges between Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania on the one hand and certain Allied and Associated Powers signatories to the Peace Treaties on the other, disclose any disputes? Second, if they do, are such disputes among those which are subject to the provisions for the settlement of disputes contained in Article 36 of the Treaty with Bulgaria, Article 40 of the Treaty with Hungary, and Article 38 of the Treaty with Romania?

Whether there exists an international dispute is a matter for objective determination. The mere denial of the existence of a dispute does not prove its non-existence. In the diplomatic correspondence submitted to the Court, the United Kingdom, acting in association with Australia, Canada and New Zealand, and the United States of America charged Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania with having violated, in various ways, the provisions of the articles dealing with human rights and fundamental freedoms in the Peace Treaties and called upon the three Governments to take remedial measures to carry out their obligations under the Treaties. The three Governments, on the other hand, denied the charges. There has thus arisen a situation in which the two sides hold clearly opposite views concerning the question of the performance or non-performance of certain treaty obligations. Confronted with such a situation, the Court must conclude that international disputes have arisen.

The next point to be dealt with is whether the disputes are subject to the provisions of the articles for the settlement of disputes contained in the Peace Treaties. The disputes must be considered to fall within those provisions if they relate to the interpretation or execution of the Treaties, and if no other procedure of settlement is specifically provided elsewhere in the Treaties.

Since no other procedure is specifically provided in any article of the Treaties, the disputes must be subject to the method of settlement contained in the articles providing for the settlement of all disputes.

The Court thus concludes that Question I must be answered in the affirmative.

In these circumstances, it becomes necessary to take up Question II, which is as follows:

"Are the Governments of Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania obligated to carry out the provisions of the articles mentioned in Question I, including the provisions for the appointment of representatives to the Treaty Commissions?"

The articles for the settlement of disputes provide that disputes which are not settled by direct diplomatic negotiations shall be referred to the Three Heads of Mission.¹ If not resolved by the end of the period of two months, the dispute shall, unless the parties agree upon another means of settlement, be referred to the Commission of either party to the dispute to a Commission composed of one representative of each party and a third member, to be selected by agreement with the relevant articles of the Treaties.

The diplomatic documents presented to the Court show that the United Kingdom and the United States of America on the one hand, and Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania on the other, have not agreed in settling their disputes by direct negotiations. They have agreed that these disputes were not resolved by the Heads of Mission within the prescribed period of two months. It is a fact that the parties to the disputes have not agreed upon any other means of settlement. It is also a fact that the United Kingdom and the United States of America, after the expiry of the prescribed period, requested that the disputes should be settled by the Commissions mentioned in the Treaties.

This situation led the General Assembly to put Question II to obtain guidance for its future action.

The Court finds that all the conditions required for the settlement of the stage of the settlement of disputes by the Commissions have been fulfilled.

In view of the fact that the Treaties provide that any dispute may be referred to a Commission "at the request of either party" and that either party is obligated, at the request of the other, to co-operate in constituting the Commission, in particular by appointing its representative. Otherwise the method of settlement

5. NOTE FROM THE AMERICAN LEGATION AT TO THE HUNGARIAN FOREIGN MINISTRY, 1950 ¹

The Legation of the United States of America presents to the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Hungary honor to direct the Minister's attention to the advisory interpretation of the Peace Treaties with Bulgaria, Rumania which was given by the International Court March 30, 1950.²

In the light of this opinion, it is assumed that the Hungarian Government will now nominate its representative on the Commission and will inform the Secretary-General of the conditions of the nomination in accordance with the United Nations Assembly Resolution of October 22, 1949. It is further assumed that the Hungarian Government will also be willing to consult with the United States Government with a view to the appointment of a third member in accordance with Article 1 of the Treaty of Peace.

As the United States Legation informed the Minister for Foreign Affairs in its note of January 5, 1950,³ the United States Government has appointed Mr. Edwin D. Dickinson as its representative on the proposed Commission.

6. ADVISORY OPINION OF THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE, JULY 18, 1950 (Excerpts) ⁴

gives the following Advisory Opinion:

[The opinion quotes the resolution adopted by the United Nations General Assembly on October 22, 1949;⁵ it then quotes the Court's answers to questions I and II which were asked in that resolution; and concludes with an account of certain subsequent developments.]

Having stated, in its Opinion of March 30th, 1950,⁶ that the obligations of Bulgaria, Hungary, and Rumania are obligated to carry out the provisions of those articles of the Peace Treaties relating to the settlement of disputes, including the provisions for the presence of their representatives to the Treaty Commission, the Court received information from the Secretary-General of the United Nations that the Hungarian Government had opinion, or the appointment of its representative to the Treaty Commission, the Court is now called upon to answer Question III in the Resolution of the General Assembly of October 22nd, 1949, which reads as follows:

[Here follows the Court's reasoning by which it reached its conclusion]

Consequently, Question III must be answered in the negative. It is therefore not necessary for the Court to consider Question IV which requires an answer only in the event of an affirmative answer to the preceding Question.

For these reasons,
THE COURT IS OF OPINION,
by eleven votes to two,
that, if one party fails to appoint a representative to a Treaty Commission under the Peace Treaties with Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania where that party is obligated to appoint a representative to the Treaty Commission, the Secretary-General of the United Nations is not authorized to appoint the third member of the Commission upon the request of the other party to a dispute.

Judge KRYLOV, while joining in the conclusions of the opinion and the general line of argument, declares that he is unable to concur in the reasons dealing with the problem of international responsibility which, in his opinion, goes beyond the scope of the request for opinion.

Judges READ and AZEVEDO, declaring that they are unable to concur in the Opinion of the Court, have availed themselves of the right conferred on them by Article 57 of the Statute¹ and appended to the Opinion statements of their dissenting opinion.²

7. RESOLUTION 385 (V) OF THE UNITED NATIONS ASSEMBLY, NOVEMBER 3, 1950¹

The General Assembly,

Considering that one of the purposes of the United Nations is to achieve international co-operation in promoting and maintaining respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Having regard to General Assembly resolutions 272 (I) and 273 (IV)² concerning the question of the observance in Bulgaria and Romania of human rights and fundamental freedoms and the decision in the latter resolution to submit certain questions to the International Court of Justice for an advisory opinion,

1. Takes note of the advisory opinions delivered by the International Court of Justice on 30 March 1950³ and 18 July 1950⁴ and the effect that:

(a) The diplomatic exchanges between Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania on the one hand, and certain Allied and Associated Powers and signatories to the Treaties of Peace on the other,⁵ concerning the implementation of article 2 of the Treaty with Bulgaria and article 3 of the Treaty with Romania, disclose discrepancies in the provisions for the settlement of disputes contained in articles 40 of the Treaty of Peace with Bulgaria, article 40 of the Treaty of Peace with Hungary, and article 38 of the Treaty of Peace with Romania;

(b) The Governments of Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania are obligated to carry out the provisions of those articles of the Treaties of Peace which relate to the settlement of disputes, in accordance with the provisions for the appointment of their representatives to the respective Commissions;

. NOTE FROM THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO THE RUMANIAN CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES AT WASHINGTON,¹ MARCH 18, 1952²

The Secretary of State presents his compliments to the Chargé d'Affaires ad interim of the Rumanian People's Republic and transmits herewith, for the information of the Rumanian Government, three copies of Department of State publication No. 4376 entitled "Evidence of Violations of Human Rights Provisions of the Treaties of Peace by Rumania, Bulgaria and Hungary, submitted by the United States Government³ to the Secretary General of the United Nations pursuant to the resolution of the General Assembly of November 3, 1950,⁴ Volume I, Violations by the Rumanian Government, Freedom of Expression and of Press and Publication," together with three submitted by the United States Government to the Secretariat of the United Nations on November 16, 1951, and the same being submitted presently.

The Secretary of State takes this occasion to note that the Rumanian Government has referred to the contents of Volume I of its submission to the Secretary General of the United Nations as "a collection of lies and falsifications." Such references were made by the Rumanian Government in a declaration in its control on December 6, 1951.

This declaration the Rumanian Government repeated at the meeting distributed by it during the meeting of the last General Assembly of the United Nations in Paris, entitled "The Aggressive Policies and Machinations of American Imperialism Against the Soviet People's Republic."

The attention of the Rumanian Government is called to the fact that of the eighty-nine exhibits, with sub-exhibits, contained in Volume I, evidence offered by the United States Government to the United Nations charges that the Rumanian Government has violated the terms of the Treaty of Peace by which the Rumanian Government agreed to secure the enjoyment of freedom of expression and free press and publication in Rumania, sixty-five, including sub-exhibits reproduced in the supplement in facsimile of the originals. These sixty-five include articles or statements by Soviet authorities (four exhibits), quotations from the Rumanian press (three exhibits), quotations from the official Rumanian press or Rumanian newspapers appearing during the war when the press has been under the Rumanian Government (six exhibits), and official legislation and decrees of the Rumanian Government as published in the official gazette, "Monitorul Oficial" or "Buletinul Oficial," and similar government publications (three exhibits). Since these sixty-five exhibits, including sub-exhibits, have been in documents believed to be official, the Rumanian Government is invited to specify which, if any, of these exhibits fall in the category of "lies and falsifications" and to specify the respects in which the "lie" or "falsification" is comprised.

The remaining exhibits offered by the United States Government in Volume I consist, for the most part, of certain declarations sworn to before persons authorized to administer oaths in various countries. These include forty documents and sub-exhibits. If the remarks of the Rumanian Government are intended to apply to these latter exhibits, the Rumanian Government is invited to specify which of them it believes fall into the category of "lies and falsifications," giving again the respects in which while not charging that the signatures of affiants have been forged or falsified or that the affiants have wilfully lied, differs with respect to the facts to which the affiants have testified, the attention of the Rumanian Government is called to the introductory statement of the United States Government in Volume I as follows (page vi):

The Rumanian Government is invited to offer in any appropriate way such evidence—in the legal sense—as it may have in rebuttal and to submit that evidence to further objective verification.

The United States Government has looked in vain in the publications of the Rumanian Government on this subject to which reference has been made above for the submission of any evidence in any legal sense; it has instead found unsupported conclusions, unresponsive and irrelevant assertions, always without factual proof, and statements which, insofar as they might be relevant, the United States would be prepared to demonstrate, in any appropriate forum governed by rules of legal procedure, to be false.

It is clear to the United States, as it must be to objective persons examining these documents, that the failure of the Rumanian Government to meet the issues of fact and of law in this matter, coupled with that Government's evasion of its established legal duty to submit these issues for trial by the Commission provided in the Treaty of Peace, or by any other judicial body, constitute an unquestionable admission by the Rumanian Government that the charges made by the United States against that Government were correct, that the evidence submitted by the United States amply sustains its charges against the Rumanian Government and that, therefore, the Rumanian Government stands convicted in accordance with the normal legal rules obtaining in civilized countries of violating the Treaty of Peace by wilfully and systematically denying to its citizens and other persons in its jurisdiction the enjoyment of elemental human rights and fundamental freedoms which the Rumanian Government pledged.

The Secretary of State takes this occasion to repeat what he said in submitting Volume I to the Secretary-General of the United Nations:

From its past performance one may expect the Rumanian Government—and the other accused governments—to say, always in general terms, that the charges to which this first installment of evidence relates have not been proved and that its persecutions have been directed solely to the suppression of Nazism and Fascism and to make other self-serving statements of sweeping generality. That will not do. Verifiable facts are called for from the accused, not mere conclusions or name calling. The truth is that, since the charges and the evidence in support thereof relate to facts localized in the territory of Rumania, their truth or falsity in the event of dispute may best be determined by inquiries on the spot.

tions by joining in the establishment of commissions must be taken. A substantial part out of the suspicion that such a tribunal would serve as a way to obtain evidence which these governments prefer to conceal.

In submitting its material, the United States Government is guided by the meaning of the word "evidence" used in the General Assembly resolutions, as denoting testimony which is logically probative of issues of fact in charges made and the replies thereto, and which is acceptable for use under standards for the conduct of judicial proceedings generally in civilized countries.¹

Travel of American Citizens in Iron Curtain Countries

9. STATEMENT BY THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE MAY 1, 1952²

The Department of State announced today that it is taking additional steps to warn American citizens of the risks of travel in Iron Curtain countries by stamping all passports not valid for travel in those countries unless specifically endorsed by the Department of State for such travel.

In making this announcement, the Department emphasizes that this procedure in no way forbids American travel to those countries. It contemplates that American citizens will consult the Department or the Consulates abroad to ascertain the dangers of travel in those countries where acceptable standards of protection do not exist, and that, if no objection is perceived, the travel may be permitted.

All new passports will be stamped as follows:

THIS PASSPORT IS NOT VALID FOR TRAVEL TO ALBANIA, ARABIA, CHINA, CZECHOSLOVAKIA, HUNGARY, POLAND, RUMANIA, TURKEY, UNION OF SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLICS UNLESS SPECIFICALLY ENDORSED UNDER AUTHORITY OF THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE. THIS PASSPORT BEING VALID FOR SUCH TRAVEL

All outstanding passports, which are equally subject to the same restriction, will be so endorsed as occasion permits.

10. STATEMENT BY THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE, OCTOBER 31, 1955 ¹

The Secretary of State announced today in Geneva that United States passports will henceforth not require special validation for travel to the following countries in the European Soviet bloc: Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland, Rumania, and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. Instead of the previous endorsement necessitating special validation for travel in those areas passports will now carry the following stamp:

"This passport is not valid for travel to the following areas under control of authorities with which the United States does not have diplomatic relations: Albania, Bulgaria, and those portions of China, Korea and Viet-Nam under Communist control."

3. ALBANIA

11. STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE, NOVEMBER 27, 1954 ²

November 28 marks the anniversary of the two historic events most cherished by the Albanian people: the first proclamation of Albanian independence in 1443 and the reemergence of Albania as an independent nation in 1912.

The traditional friendship of the United States for the people of Albania has sprung from a natural American sympathy with Albanian aspirations for liberty. Since World War I, this sympathy has expressed itself in important actions of support by the United States for the sovereign independence of the Albanian nation and for the welfare of its people. Whenever contacts between Americans and Albanians occur, we are reminded that the Albanian people retain a keen appreciation of past evidences of U. S. interest and that, in consequence, a special bond of understanding between the peoples of the two countries has been firmly established.

The present sufferings of the Albanian people under Communist oppression and their strong desire to be rid of this alien yoke are matters of deep concern to the United States. The American Government and people recognize the right of the Albanian people to the United States has noted with satisfaction declarations of spokesmen of the neighboring countries in support of a free and independent Albania. Americans look forward to the ultimate recognition by Albania of its rightful place in the community of nations and the U. S. Government will not cease its advocacy of this goal.

12. AIDE-MÉMOIRE FROM THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO THE MINISTER OF LITHUANIA,¹ THE CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES OF LATVIA,² AND THE ACTING CONSUL GENERAL OF ESTONIA IN CHARGE OF LEGATION,³ AUGUST 9, 1950

With reference to the aide-mémoire of July 27, 1950,⁵ presented to the Department of State by the Honorable the Minister of Lithuania, the Chargé d'Affaires of Latvia, and the Acting Consul General of Estonia in charge of legation and in confirmation of a conversation of that date, the Secretary of State informs the named representatives of the Baltic States as follows:

The Department of State is pleased to receive the expressions of appreciation tendered by the representatives of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania on behalf of their respective countries for the friendship followed by the United States Government toward the Baltic States. The Department is also pleased to note the approval expressed by the representatives of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania of the policy followed by the United States and the United Nations with respect to the recent developments in Korea. As is well known, this policy conforms with the traditional views of the United States Government concerning the rights of all peoples to self-determination and freedom from aggression.

The request of the representatives of the Baltic States for continued United States support consideration by the United Nations of the "genocidal mass deportations and of the appalling situation in the Baltic States" will be brought to the attention of the United States Government's representatives who are directly concerned with United Nations affairs.

STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE BEFORE THE HOUSE COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE AND STUDY
THE SEIZURE AND FORCED INCORPORATION OF LITHU-ANIA, LATVIA, AND ESTONIA BY THE UNION OF SOVIE SOCIALIST REPUBLICS AND THE TREATMENT OF SAID
BAL TIC PEOPLES, NOVEMBER 30, 1953 ¹

Chairman Kersten and Members of the Committee, I appreciate having this opportunity to talk to you of the Baltic republics of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania. I shall speak of their past, the present, and their future. Each of these phases is full of meaning.

The Baltic peoples proclaimed their independence of Russia in 1918. In 1920, Soviet Russia made peace treaties with them.² By these treaties Soviet Russia recognized, without reservation, the independence and sovereignty of the Baltic States. It declared in these treaties that it voluntarily and forever renounced all sovereign rights over the Baltic peoples and the territories of the Baltic States.

On July 28, 1922, the United States extended diplomatic recognition to the Baltic governments.³ We did so in application of our traditional concepts.

Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania had shown, by four years of existence as independent states, that their independence had a solid reality. They had successfully maintained internal stability, both political and economic. They had conducted themselves internationally in accordance with good practice. Therefore, they were entitled to our recognition. Indeed, their independence fulfilled the kind of hope for a peoples which our Nation had entertained since its own beginning.

For two decades the Baltic republics showed the good fruits of freedom. Their creative accomplishments were impressive. Their natural resources were meager. But the peoples were skilled in agriculture and by their hard work they achieved a good measure of economic well-being. National arts and crafts flourished. They established a high standard of social justice and won worldwide respect as exemplary members of the family of nations. Their spiritual and moral strength, their love of liberty, their energy, and their self-discipline showed that they possessed those qualities which, more than mere numbers, area, or wealth, make for national worth.

The Baltic republics, during this period, gave the whole world a never-needed demonstration of the creative power of self-discipline and freedom.

The present dark period began in 1939. It was begun by the of mutual assistance" upon these Baltic countries.

The Soviet Minister of Foreign Affairs carefully explained the defensive and protective nature of these pacts in a major address on October 31, 1939.² I quote his words:

The Soviet Union has concluded pacts of mutual assistance with Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania which are of major political importance. The character of these mutual assistance pacts in no way implies any interference on the part of the Soviet Union in the affairs of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania. Some foreign newspapers are trying to make out. On the basis of these pacts of mutual assistance strictly stipulate the inviolability of the signatory states and the principle of non-interference in their internal affairs. . . . We declare that all the nonsensical talk about the Soviet Union's interest in the Baltic countries is only to the interest of our common enemy, the Soviet provocateurs.

Scarcely had these passionate and authoritative words been spoken when the "Sovietization" began. The concluding acts of the pacts came into effect eight months later when the Soviet Union marched into the Baltic territories, set up puppet governments, and demanded that they apply for admission into the Soviet Union, an admission which was graciously granted. The "nonsensical talk" of the "Soviet Union's interest" had come true.

The free nations of the world were shocked by this action. The United States promptly made its position known. On September 17, 1939, our Government described and denounced the "devious processes" whereunder the political independence and territorial integrity of the three small Baltic republics—Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania—were to be deliberately annihilated by one of their neighbors."³

The "devious processes" still went on until today. The Baltic independent nations, representing much of the human race, have been "Sovietized."

Today the Soviet leaders still ask the free people of the world to rely on Soviet mutual security pacts. We should know that when the Soviet rulers use the word "security" they mean no security for the Soviet Union to secure new victims.

What of the future? First of all, let us never lose sight of the fact that there is a future.

I recall some of the earliest history recorded in the Bible. The nations there mentioned are such as Egypt, and Lebanon. How many times have these nations, over thousands of years ago been submerged, to rise again

The Baltic peoples, in the face of every imposition, retain the will to be free and maintain their steadfast opposition to Soviet despotism. Terrorism has been prolonged now for thirteen years. Many of their courageous and noble representatives have been executed, deported, or driven into exile. But their martyrdom keeps patriotism alive.

The United States, for its part, maintains the diplomatic recognition which it extended in 1922 to the three Baltic nations. We continue to deal with those diplomatic and consular representatives of the Baltic countries who served the last independent governments of these states.

Some may say that it is unrealistic and impractical not to recognize the enforced "incorporation" of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania into the Soviet Union. We believe, however, that a despotism of the present Soviet type cannot indefinitely perpetuate its rule over hundreds of millions of people who love God, who love their country, and who have a sense of personal dignity.

The Soviet system, which seeks to expunge the distinctive characteristics of nation, creed, and individuality must itself change or be doomed ultimately to collapse. The time of collapse depends largely on whether the peoples who remain free produce spiritual, intellectual, and material richness and a faith which can penetrate any iron curtain. The captive peoples should know that they are not forgotten, that we are not reconciled to their fate, and, above all, that we are not prepared to seek illusory safety for ourselves by a bargain with their masters which would confirm their captivity.

These are our purposes. We have not forgotten the Atlantic Charter¹ and its proclamation of "the right of all peoples to choose the form of government under which they will live." We still share the wish expressed in that Charter, "to see sovereign rights and self-government restored to those who have been forcibly deprived of them."

This is an hour when it is particularly important that our Nation's dedication to these principles should be made manifest. We approach a possible meeting with the representatives of the Soviet Union. I can assure you that we welcome opportunities to settle specific disputes between us; to end the race in armament, particularly atomic armament; and to reduce the risks of war.

But let me also assure you of this. We do not look on the conference as a place where we surrender our principles, but rather as a place for making our principles prevail. That is our resolve, a resolve which I am confident is backed by the Congress and by the American people.

14. REMARKS BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE LATVIAN CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES AT WASHINGTON
24, 1954 ²

I have received from your hands the letters of April which Mr. Charles Zarine, Minister of Latvia in London, of the special emergency power of the last independent of the Republic of Latvia, presents you to me as Chargé of Latvia in the United States. You come in succession to Jules Feldmans whose distinguished and devoted service in sending his country to the United States were cut short by death last year.

In accepting you as Chief of the Latvian Mission in Washington in the capacity of Chargé d'Affaires, this Government reaffirms its heartfelt support for the Republic of Latvia and for the principle, expressed in the Atlantic Charter, that sovereignty and self-government shall be restored to those who have been deprived of them.

I am confident that in carrying on the work to which your predecessors gave themselves unsparingly in defense of the cause of Latvia, you will enjoy, as they did, the dedicated support of Americans everywhere. I am happy to welcome you to this country and to assure you every success in undertaking your duties here. I am assured that my associates in the Department and I will be ready to help you in every way we can.

I would ask you to thank Minister Zarine for his expressions of good wishes, which are warmly reciprocated, on behalf of the Latvian people and himself for the welfare and prosperity of the United States.

15. STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE
FEBRUARY 15, 1955 ³

The peoples of Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia will celebrate this year the 37th anniversary of the declaration of their independence. On this occasion I would like to express the deepest sympathy and warmest friendship of the American people. Despite the efforts of Soviet rulers to hide the nature of their administration in the Baltic States, the plight of the Baltic peoples is much in our thoughts.

There are many signs that the Baltic peoples have resisted the devices of Soviet terror and propaganda.

EASTERN EUROPEAN COMMUNIST REGIMES

Through our contributions to the material and spiritual s of the free world, we seek to create conditions under which th of the Baltic peoples to resume their place in the community nations will be universally respected. We are convinced world community in which the Baltic peoples are free to choo own form of government and their own political and econo stitutions is likely to be one which will assure peace, with just all nations, large and small.

D. BULGARIA

16. SEVERANCE OF DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS: Note From American Legation at Sofia to the Bulgarian Foreign Ministry, February 20, 1950¹

The Legation of the United States of America presents its compliments to the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of Bulgaria and has the honor to refer to the Legation's note of January 20, 1950,² in reply to the note delivered by the Bulgarian Legation in Washington to the Department of State on January 19, 1950,³ requesting the recall from Bulgaria of the American Minister Donald R. Heath, as persona non grata.

As indicated in the statements of the Under Secretary of State James E. Webb to the Bulgarian Chargé d'Affaires ad interim in Washington on December 12, 1949,⁴ the United States Government took a most serious view of the Bulgarian Government's conduct toward Minister Heath in connection with the trial of Traicho Kostov and others, in particular the charges against Mr. Heath, the results of which the Bulgarian Government itself was in a position to maintain. The Under Secretary made it quite clear that these accusations coming as they did on top of a long series of intolerable restrictions and indignities to which the American Legation in Bulgaria has been subjected, inevitably affected relations between the two countries and compelled the United States Government to warn the Bulgarian Government that it could not ignore such deliberate and unwarranted actions which were in complete disregard of normal practice and the proper conduct of international relations.

The Bulgarian Government, however, persisted in its con-conduct. On January 19, 1950, it requested the immediate recall of Minister Heath from Bulgaria on the grounds that, by alleged "contacts" with Kostov and others, he had "allowed himself to take action not in line with his diplomatic functions" and thus had "shown abrupt interference in the interior affairs of the People's Republic of Bulgaria concerning its sovereignty as well as its national security." This action on the part of the Bulgarian Government, in putting forward wholly unfounded charges against the principal diplomatic representative of the United States as the basis of a demand for his recall, could be taken by the United States Government only as a confirmation of the mounting evidence that the Bulgarian Government was unwilling, in its relations with the United States, to observe accepted standards of international comity.

The United States Government, in its note of January 20, 1950, stated that unless the Bulgarian Government withdrew its note of January 19 and demonstrated its willingness to observe established international standards of conduct, the United States Government must conclude that the Bulgarian Government did not desire to maintain normal relations. Over a period of 4 weeks the Bulgarian Government did not have the courtesy to reply. On February 16, 1950, it was advised by the Department of State that the long delay had created a situation which could not continue indefinitely and was requested to reply immediately. No reply has been received. The conclusion is inescapable that the Bulgarian Government is unwilling to modify the position it has taken that it is unwilling to treat American official representatives in Bulgaria in accordance with the standards of established international practice; and, consequently, that it is unwilling to maintain normal diplomatic relations with the United States.

Diplomatic relations between the United States and the postwar Government of Bulgaria, since their establishment in September 1947,¹ have not been on a basis which could be called friendly or cordial. Cordiality was scarcely to be expected when Bulgarian officials and the controlled press were constantly denouncing and insulting the United States, and when the Bulgarian Government was violating its peace treaty² obligations, ignoring resolutions of the United Nations, and supporting armed action against Greece. It was the hope of the United States Government, however, that relations if not cordial, at least might be correct. But the treatment accorded to the American Legation in Sofia, including crippling restrictions on the entry and movement of American officials assigned to the Legation and an unprincipled campaign of persecution against the Legation's Bulgarian employees, left no doubt that the Bulgarian Government with the Bulgarian people, with whom ties of friendship have linked them in the past.

The Government of the United States will continue to maintain its feeling of friendship for the people of Bulgaria and to manifest in every appropriate way its deep interest in their welfare. The Government of the United States, however, is reluctantly compelled to conclude that it is no longer possible, in view of the present attitude of the Bulgarian Government, for the American Minister and his staff to remain in Bulgaria. They have received instructions to leave Bulgaria as soon as possible. At the same time, the Government of the United States requests the recall of the Bulgarian diplomatic mission from the United States.

17. RELIGIOUS PERSECUTION IN BULGARIA: Statement by the Department of State, October 20, 1952¹

The Bulgarian Government has just staged (Sept. 29–Oct. 3) another of its elaborate “trials” of religious leaders, designed, in this instance, to destroy the last remnants of the Catholic Church in Bulgaria. As in the infamous trials of Bulgarian Protestant leaders in the spring of 1949, the 40 Catholic leaders accused in this latest “trial” were charged with various vaguely defined anti-State activities, including, in the course of the proceedings, allegations that certain of the defendants had engaged in espionage as employees of “the Americans” and had for this purpose been in touch with a U.S. Government official on duty with the former American Legation in Sofia.

These charges are groundless and absurd. The same crude attempt to accuse the U.S. Government and its official representatives in Bulgaria of being involved in clandestine efforts to overthrow the Bulgarian Government has recurred in each of the many “trials” in which the Soviet satellite dictatorship in Bulgaria has sought to eradicate every form of opposition to its regime.

Cynical disregard for the truth characterized the whole “trial.” At the end, the court dutifully meted out the sentences—four defendants, including one bishop to be shot, all but five of the rest sentenced for periods ranging from 10 to 20 years.

In a speech just prior to the trial, Bulgarian Minister of Interior Georgi Tsankov revealed with crude brutality the atmosphere in which the trial was to be staged. “Let all [who oppose the Communist regime] know,” he said, “that the People’s Rule, through the organs of the Ministry of Interior, is able to put everyone where he belongs.”

tions of its solemn obligation to guarantee human rights and mental freedoms to its citizens, has by this new act proved justly its vicious tyranny deserves the condemnation everywhere.

18. BULGARIAN SUGGESTION FOR RENEWAL OF DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS: Statement by the Department of State, September 10, 1953¹

The Department has noted with interest the recent statement of the Bulgarian Prime Minister regarding the present lack of relations between his government and the United States. It does not serve any useful purpose to review at this time the circumstances which led to the suspension of relations in 1950.² The Department would like to take this opportunity, however, to reaffirm the strong and deep and abiding friendship which the American people have toward the people of Bulgaria.

19. DESTRUCTION OF ISRAELI AIRCRAFT: Note of Protest from the United States Government to the Bulgarian Government, August 1953, submitted by the Swiss Chargé d'Affaires at Sofia), August 1953

The United States Government protests emphatically the brutal action of Bulgarian military personnel on July 23, 1953, in firing upon a commercial aircraft of the El Al Israel Airline, which was lawfully engaged as an international carrier. This action resulted in the destruction of the aircraft and the death of several persons aboard, including several United States citizens, a grave violation of accepted principles of international law. The Bulgarian Government has acknowledged responsibility for this action.

The United States Government demands that the Bulgarian Government (1) take all appropriate measures to prevent a recurrence of incidents of this nature and inform the United States Government concerning these measures; (2) punish all persons responsible for this incident; and (3) provide prompt and adequate compensation to the United States Government for the families of the United States citizens killed in this attack.

20. EIGHTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE EXECUTION OF NIKOLA PETKOV: Statement by the Under Secretary of State,¹ September 22, 1955²

Eight years ago tomorrow Nikola Petkov, a great Bulgarian patriot, was hanged in Bulgaria. After a trial which made a mockery of justice, he was judicially murdered on September 23, 1947, in order that communism in his country might triumph.³

Nikola Petkov was a courageous liberal and a valiant defender of democracy in his country. His countrymen will never forget the boldness and selflessness with which he and his colleagues fought Communist injustice even after their cause seemed lost. That the Communist press in Bulgaria should finally have described his death as an "imperative state necessity" is striking evidence of the vigor of his struggle.

Although Nikola Petkov's voice and pen have been silenced, his spirit still lives. His devotion to the cause of justice and democracy will ever serve as inspiration to his countrymen and to all liberty-loving people who look forward to the day when the captive people can once again live in freedom under governments of their own choosing.

E. CZECHOSLOVAKIA

21. CLOSING OF UNITED STATES INFORMATION SERVICE LIBRARIES AND THE CZECHOSLOVAK CONSULATE GENERAL AT CHICAGO: Note From the American Embassy at Prague to the Czechoslovak Foreign Ministry, April 21, 1950⁴

The American Embassy presents its compliments to the Czechoslovak Ministry of Foreign Affairs and has the honor to refer to its note dated April 19, 1950⁵ demanding that the United States Information Service libraries of the Embassy in Praha and the Consulate General in Bratislava be closed immediately and that the United States press attaché, Joseph C. Kolarek, be recalled.

The United States Government considers the demand for the closing of the United States Information Service libraries and the recall of the United States press attaché as utterly unwarranted and based on demonstrably untrue charges. These offices of the Embassy are activities to efforts to promote mutual understanding between the people of Czechoslovakia and the people States. Such activities have departed in no way from functions of diplomatic and consular establishments in the information fields.

The United States Government, therefore, strongly regrets that the legations of the Czechoslovak Government made demands directly that Mr. Kolarek, other American official representatives, and Czechoslovak employees were engaged in any improper activity in the pursuit of their duties. Mr. Kolarek concerned himself only with his official functions relating to press, information, and cultural relations and never acted in any way which might be regarded as prejudicial to his diplomatic office. In view of the allegations of the Czechoslovak authorities, the United States Government can only conclude that the Czechoslovak Government does not adhere to the diplomatic standards normally observed by the community of nations.

The methods employed by the Czechoslovak authorities to obtain a pretext for this provocative action will themselves refer to the before the judgment of world opinion. Thus, the statement of Czechoslovak citizens, Ivan Elbl and Ruzena Soumarova, at the United States Information Service library in Praha, was obtained and cited by the Czechoslovak authorities only after the Czechoslovak local employees of the library were arrested on April 6, 1955, to police pressure for 36 hours prior to their release. The Czechoslovak authorities also cited the declaration of Jaroslav Elsner and Dagmar Kacerovska, two other Czechoslovak citizens formerly employed by the library, who were convicted of espionage and plotting against the Czechoslovak Republic in a court of law and sentenced to 18 and 15 years of imprisonment. Such "confessions" as were obtained from these unfree prisoners of police action resulted only after they had been arrested and held for approximately one month prior to the trial.¹

The complete worthlessness of such charges as are made in these statements is demonstrated by the facts set forth in the affidavit of the director of the United States Information Service in Praha, Miss Katherine Kosmak, a copy of which was furnished to the Embassy's note of April 17.² This affidavit makes clear how the Czechoslovak police tried to intimidate and exploit a citizen in the official employ of the Embassy and exploit the relationship in the effort to build a propaganda case, whatever, against the United States Information Service in the Embassy. This affidavit reveals the hollowness of the charges and the improper conduct of the Czechoslovak police.

Service libraries have functioned without legal title. The United States Government does not accept this unusual conception of international relations. The United States Information Service libraries of the Embassy in Praha and the Consulate General in Bratislava were established in Czechoslovakia as in other countries as an integral component of the official representation of the United States. Such cultural and information functions are carried on without special agreement as a universal element in the diplomatic life of nations today.

The Czechoslovak Government never contested this principle until it felt obliged to seek excuses for its attempt, in accordance with an emerging pattern of procedure among the Communist-dominated countries of Eastern Europe, to isolate the Czechoslovak people from the outer world. The United States and other countries can only infer that the present government by its demand to close the libraries reveals its fear of the free exchange of information and the maintenance of free cultural contacts with other peoples. It is only too evident that the present government is moved by fear to impose barriers to the entry of truth from abroad and to the free inquiry of minds at home. This obvious fear of truth is not in the tradition of the Czechoslovak people, who have shown throughout their history a stubborn aversion to attempts at thought control. The Government and people of the United States are convinced that such efforts of the Czechoslovak Government to repress freedom of thought and the desire for impartial information will never stand the test of time in the modern world.

It is, likewise, obvious that the Czechoslovak Government professions in behalf of world peace and mutual understanding between nations lack any meaning and constitute, on the contrary, a systematic campaign to mislead the public of Czechoslovakia and other countries. The United States Government is reluctantly obliged to conclude that the Czechoslovak Government no longer cares whether it observes diplomatic principles and the conventions of courtesy in international life.

The United States Government is obliged to comply with the Ministry's demand that it close its information libraries in Czechoslovakia and recall the press attaché, Mr. Kolarek. The Czechoslovak Government must, however, expect that its action cannot escape serious consequences affecting various aspects of the relations between the two governments. The attitude of the Czechoslovak authorities compels the United States Government to review the scope of activities of Czechoslovak establishments in the United States. Since the Czechoslovak Government has unjustifiably insisted on the curtailment of the normal diplomatic and consular functions of the United States in Czechoslovakia it will understand the request made hereewith, as an immediate result of that review, that it close its Consulate General in Chicago, Illinois, not later than May 1, 1950.

22. REDUCTION OF UNITED STATES REPRESENTATION IN CZECHOSLOVAKIA AND CLOSING OF CZECH CONSULATE GENERAL AT NEW YORK: Note of American Ambassador at Prague¹ to the Czechoslovak Minister,² May 27, 1950³

I am directed by my Government to state that it can conforming to the generally accepted principles and international comity that a receiving state shall attempt and unilaterally to determine the composition of the missions of a state with which it maintains relations. My Government has previously rejected, and rejects on such allegations the Czechoslovak Government has put forward as pretext for the reduction of United States representation in Czechoslovakia. The United States Government, furthermore, expressing confidence in the good will and traditional friendship of the people of Czechoslovakia toward the United States, and the efforts of the Czechoslovak Government to sever friendly relations between the American and Czechoslovak people.

In view, however, of the repeated provocations and attacks against the United States and United States residents in Czechoslovakia during the past few weeks, it is clear that the Czechoslovak Government has belied its stated intention of maintaining peaceful relations among nations and has made clear that it is no longer interested in maintaining normal diplomatic relations with the United States. The United States Government, while reserving its rights and customary privileges, intends to reduce its official representation to conform with conditions arbitrarily imposed by the Ministry's note under reference.

In view of the forced reduction of its personnel in Czechoslovakia and in recognition of the curtailed relations between the United States and Czechoslovakia imposed by the Czechoslovak Government, the United States Government hereby announces its intention to close its Consulate General in Bratislava and requests the Czechoslovak Government to close within two weeks its Consulate General, including the office of the American counselor, in New York.

23. CZECHOSLOVAK CHARGES REGARDING BORDER VIOLATIONS AND RADIO BROADCASTS: Note From the American Embassy at Prague to the Czechoslovak Foreign Ministry, June 19, 1951¹

The American Embassy presents its compliments to the Czechoslovak Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and with reference to the Ministry's note of May 21, 1951,² concerning the question of border violations, certain broadcasts in Czech and Slovak languages, and related matters, has the honor, pursuant to instructions of the United States Government, to make the following reply:

With respect to the charges of violations of the border between Czechoslovakia and the Federal Republic of Germany by United States military personnel, the Ministry's note states that on May 4 at 6 or 7 a. m., military personnel in two autos crossed the Czechoslovak frontier between frontier markers 22 and 23, drove around frontier barriers on both sides of the frontier, studied frontier installations, used field glasses and photographed certain objects.

The Embassy informs the Ministry that the United States Government does not condone any violation of the Czechoslovak frontier by members of its armed forces whether on the ground or in the air.

An investigation of the incident referred to in the Ministry's note has been made. The results of this investigation indicate that the crossing of the Czechoslovak frontier by American military personnel at the place indicated did in fact take place and that it was unintentional and inadvertent. The American military personnel in question entered Czechoslovak territory to the maximum depth of 5 yards and remained there approximately 5 minutes.

The report received by the Ministry is inaccurate in two respects. Members of the American patrol, which numbered six men, took no photographs; furthermore, they drove around one road barrier but not two, as they stopped before reaching the second barrier.

The explanation of this unwitting crossing of the Czechoslovak frontier appears to be that all members of the patrol, including the leader, were unfamiliar with this segment of the frontier and were carrying out their first patrol in this area. Furthermore, there was no sign indicating the presence of the border which led the patrol leader to assume that the second barrier marked the international boundary. He, as well as members of his patrol, failed to see the unpainted border stones in line with the first barrier. No member of this patrol realized he had been in Czechoslovakia until so informed later by the investigating officer.

before passing the first barrier constituted a failure to judgment.

The Embassy assures the Ministry that all possible steps taken by the appropriate United States authorities to prevent recurrence of such an incident.

As stated, the United States Government does not consider a violation of the Czechoslovak frontier by members of its armed forces and by the same token will not tolerate the violation of the United States Zone of Germany by Czechoslovak personnel. In addition the United States Government calls the attention of the Czechoslovak Government to two recent violations in which armed forces of the Czechoslovak armed forces crossed the border. On May 23 from approximately 0930 to 1000 hours six Czechoslovak soldiers crossed illegally within the United States Zone of Germany at the Regnitz River east of Hof in the American area. Furthermore, Czechoslovak soldiers threatened a German national, Margarete Rausch, with a machine-pistol while within the United States Zone of Germany.

At approximately 0930 May 24 two Czechoslovak soldiers mounted from vehicles in Czechoslovakia, crossed the border at the Regnitz River and penetrated into the territory of the United States Zone of Germany to the depth of approximately 350 yards. The Czechoslovak soldiers told Mrs. Rausch that she had been cutting grass in Czechoslovakia and must return with them. Despite her insistence that she had no time had she been in Czechoslovakia, one of the soldiers pointed a machine-pistol into her back and forced her to return to a place, likewise in Germany, where she had been working. There more Czechoslovak soldiers joined the group and laughed at her. They told them they were all standing in Germany. Her husband, Hans Rausch, came up and also told the soldiers they were in Germany. During the course of this conversation a seventh Czechoslovak soldier, presumably the one in command, remained in Czechoslovakia near one of the border markers and finally signalled to the others who thereupon left the United States Zone.

The American military authorities were immediately alerted to this violation of the United States Zone of Germany and on the morning (May 24) undertook an investigation. The investigating officer and a sergeant while standing at the spot in Germany where the Czechoslovak soldiers first intercepted Mrs. Rausch, observed the Czechoslovak soldiers partially concealed in the brush on the Czechoslovak side of the border with their weapons aimed at the Americans. American soldiers started towards the Rausch house, but the Czechoslovak soldiers fired two shots, apparently not aimed at the Americans.

ing three unarmed civilians and a member of the uniformed Czechoslovak Security Police armed with a machine pistol, was observed crossing the border twice and penetrating the United States Zone each time to a depth of 10 or 15 yards near Wies. The improvised road used by the Czechoslovak personnel was clearly in the United States Zone. After the second unauthorized entry of the armed member of the Security Police, he was apprehended by a patrol of the United States constabulary. He was returned to Czechoslovak authorities at approximately 2330 on June 7.

The United States Government considers these actions as entirely uncalled for and regards the first incident as particularly flagrant. The Ministry is requested to undertake a careful investigation to determine who was responsible for these border violations and to ensure that the guilty person or persons be appropriately disciplined. The Embassy expects the Ministry to show the same diligence in informing it of the results of the investigation and in assuring it that measures to prevent recurrence have been taken, as was shown by United States authorities in connection with the incident which is the subject of the first part of this note.

As to radio broadcasts, the Czechoslovak Government asserts that the United States Government utilizes broadcasting stations for activities hostile to Czechoslovakia and in so doing broadcasts false news and propaganda of incitement against Czechoslovakia and its people. Although the Ministry may by this reference intend to make accusations against the Voice of America and Radio Free Europe as well as purely commercial broadcasting stations, its statements on the subject appear to relate chiefly to Radio Free Europe. It should be made clear at once that the Voice of America represents a radio broadcasting organization of the United States Government while Radio Free Europe was organized and is operated by a group of private citizens. It is a division of a corporate body, the National Committee for a Free Europe, which is incorporated in the State of New York. More than 6 million American citizens are supporting Radio Free Europe. Thus while the American people have a direct interest in the activities of Radio Free Europe, the United States Government does not.

Since Radio Free Europe has established broadcasting stations in Germany the interest of the United States Government as an occupying power is involved but it is limited to matters concerning frequency usage and observance by Radio Free Europe of any laws and regulations of the Allied High Commission that may be applicable. Radiocensorship does not exist in the territory of the Federal Republic of Germany and freedom of speech prevails there as in the United States. It is believed that this policy is fully in accordance with the obligation States Government does not attempt to censor the American or nonofficial radio transmissions either from the United States or from the United States Zone of Germany. It is not, therefore, desirable to exercise control over these organizations in violation of the principle of freedom of information.

Nothing in this policy violates any international agreement concerning Germany, or any other international agreement to which the United States Government is a party, or is contrary to any principle of international law in connection with broadcasting activities. The United States Government, therefore, fails to find any basis for the charges of the Czechoslovak Government in this matter. On the contrary in observing the principle of freedom of information the United States Government considers that it is faithful to principles generally recognized among nations. If the Czechoslovak Government refers in this accusation to the use of the frequency by Radio Free Europe allocated in accordance with the "Copenhagen Plan"¹ it should be noted that neither the United States Government nor the United States authorities in Germany were signatories to the Copenhagen agreement and that it is in no way binding on them. It should also be noted that even some of the countries which have signed this agreement have deviated from its frequency assignments.

Objection is found by the Czechoslovak Government to the employment by Radio Free Europe of those persons described in the Ministry's note as "traitors of the Czechoslovak people" and "members of the mercenary Czechoslovak emigration." These men are widely recognized by the world as political refugees simply desiring a democratic government. Moreover whom the Radio Free Europe employs seems an irrelevant matter clearly not appropriate for consideration by the Czechoslovak Government, as it is not a matter for the United States Government.

The Ministry's note finally refers to a regulation of the Ministry of Finance of the Federal Republic of Germany dated February 1948 allegedly on the treatment of persons claiming to be American citizens. The Western occupation powers upon entering the territory of the Federal Republic of Germany. The United States Government has no knowledge that any such notice had been officially promulgated by the Federal Republic of Germany on a matter presumably directed to its own administrative officials and, before considering the matter further, would be greatly interested in receiving a copy of the document in the possession of the Czechoslovak authorities. The United States Government would also like an explanation of how it was acquired and what means the Czechoslovak Government has established in Western Germany for the gathering of such matter.

24. AIRPLANE INCIDENT OF JUNE 8, 1951: Note From the American Ambassador at Prague¹ to the Czechoslovak Foreign Minister,² June 24, 1951³

I have the honor to refer to the Embassy's Note No. 651 of June 17 and Your Excellency's reply of June 21⁴ concerning the unintentional landing near Prague on June 8 of two United States jet planes, the pilots of which are still being detained by the Czechoslovak Government.

Your Excellency's reply takes the position that notwithstanding the unequivocal statements made by me during my conversation with you on June 15 and confirmed by the Embassy's note of June 17, the Czechoslovak authorities must examine "whether this really was a training mission and whether the Czechoslovak aerial border has truly been violated unintentionally." Your communication indicates that the investigation is still in progress, apparently seeking thereby to justify the continued detention of the two pilots.

My Government directs me strongly to reiterate the request made orally on June 15 and repeated in the Embassy's note of June 17 that the pilots in question be released without further delay. Your Excellency is reminded that these two young men have already been in the hands of the Czechoslovak authorities for 16 days, although according to the information the pilots could possibly possess concerning the plane having become lost on a training flight and their landing in Czechoslovakia must have been communicated by them to the authorities during the first few hours, if not during the first few minutes after their emergency landing in this country on June 8.

Your Excellency is further reminded that although during our conversation on June 15 you declared the pilots are not prisoners, they have been and are still being held incommunicado, and efforts on the part of the Embassy to visit them and ascertain their personal welfare have been unavailing.

With respect to the statement in Your Excellency's note that the United States planes intentionally and systematically cross the Czechoslovak border, my Government declares that such charges are false and furthermore an unintentional crossing of the border by lost planes, as occurred on June 8, does not constitute, and would not be so considered by nations generally, "flagrant violation of the most fundamental principles of international law prohibiting any flights of military planes over the territory of another state without its express consent."

Furthermore, with reference to 116 alleged violations of Czechoslovak territory referred to in the enclosure to Your Excellency therefore it is difficult for a proper investigation to be made by the appropriate authorities. I may mention that the Embassy has brought to the Ministry's attention the importance of speedily supporting alleged violations.

In view of the fact that it was not the intent of the flight over Czechoslovakia, the presence of guns and ammunition on board was unintentional vis-à-vis Czechoslovakia as was the presence of the aircraft themselves. Loaded guns are frequently carried on United States military aircraft on operational training flights over the United States Zone as is common of air forces of all nations. The key matter after all is that the planes were lost and did not cross the Czechoslovak frontier by intention.

I must again remind the Ministry, as the Embassy did in Note No. 558, February 7,¹ that no reply was received to the Note No. 422, August 28, 1950,² requesting that investigation be made of a number of violations of the United States Zone by Czechoslovak aircraft. The aircraft guilty of these violations are described in detail. Also, the requested assurances that no instructions be issued to Czechoslovak aviators to perpetrate further violations have not been received. Furthermore, the Embassy has been informed that such violations are continuing.

The United States Government does not admit the right of Czechoslovakia to continue to detain the two pilots of the jet plane which was shot here unintentionally on June 8, the immediate release of which is again requested.

25. OATIS CASE: Statement by the Department of State July 4, 1951³

The mock trial of the Associated Press representative William N. Oatis, has now been brought to a conclusion. The sentencing is but an epilogue to this ludicrous travesty in which the victim was required to speak his prefabricated "confession" as a part of a public spectacle exhibiting all the

³ Department of State Bulletin, July 16, 1951, pp. 92-93. Mr. Oatis was arrested Apr. 23, 1951. On July 4, 1951, he was found guilty of espionage and sentenced to 10 years' imprisonment, subject to reduction to 5 years for good behavior. Three Czechoslovak employees of the Associated Press Bureau were also sentenced to terms ranging from 16 to 20 years. For the details relating to the Oatis trial, see ibid., Aug. 20, 1951, pp. 283-288, and Aug. 27, 1951, pp. 311-312. See also H. Con. Res. 140, Aug. 23, 1951, in when Oatis was held incommunicado for 70 days between his arrest and presentation in court.

The proceedings revealed the flimsiest kind of alleged "evidence," even more insubstantial than the Communists are accustomed to produce in trumped-up trials of this type. For example, the normal routine requests of the Associated Press for news reports, openly transmitted by wire, were distorted into "espionage missions" on orders from centers in New York and London."

Such an attempted hoax on the intelligence of world opinion would fool no one. While it had all the trappings of legal procedure, it was in fact a kangaroo court staged before the klieg lights of propaganda. Its purpose was purely intimidation and propaganda designed to strike at the United States press services and against the free press of the world.

The "confession" of "espionage" was in truth but the admission of an American reporter that, in the high traditions of his profession, he was attempting under the most unfavorable conditions to report a true picture of conditions and events in Czechoslovakia as he saw them.

The Czechoslovak regime has clearly demonstrated that it considers legitimate and normal news gathering and reporting as "espionage." As the prosecutor publicly stated, Oatis was held to be a particularly dangerous "espionage" agent because he insisted on obtaining accurate, correct, and verified information. To do this is "a crime," according to the concepts of the present Czechoslovak authorities, who find any press activity except the transmission of official propaganda to be "espionage." The Czechoslovak Government thus rejects completely the principle of freedom of information. It is presumed that the press of the free world will so view this turning back of the clock.

The proceedings of this especially arranged spectacle also included a number of groundless accusations against the American Ambassador and other members of the United States Embassy staff. These were invented as a part of the entire propaganda performance in attacking the United States.

This action comes as a climax in the treatment of American citizens in Czechoslovakia. It has accordingly been necessary to recognize that it is no longer safe for American citizens to go to that country and to prohibit private travel there until further notice.¹

If further evidence were needed, the arrest, the detention for months without access to friend, Embassy representative, or trusted legal counsel, the forced "confession" to fabricated charges, the shabby "conviction" of William N. Oatis shows that the present regime in Czechoslovakia fears truth, hates liberty, and knows no justice.

Congress, 1st Session), August 23, 1951¹

WHEREAS the arrest and conviction of William N. Oatis, correspondent for the Associated Press in Prague, Czechoslovakia, is a shocking violation of the fundamental human freedoms guaranteed in the United Nations Charter; and

WHEREAS the treatment of William N. Oatis demonstrates that the Czechoslovak Government has willfully repudiated the principle of free information which is so essential to peaceful cooperation and friendly relations among the people of the world; and

WHEREAS the persecution by the Government of Czechoslovakia of other American citizens is condemned and deplored by the Congress of the United States, and throughout the free world: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring): That the Congress of the United States expresses its profound indignation at the arrest, sham trial and unjust conviction of William N. Oatis; that the executive agencies of the Government be directed to take all possible action to bring about his release; and that the sense of this resolution be conveyed by the proper officials of the Government to the United Nations and to the officials of the Czechoslovak Government.

Be it further resolved, That it is the sense of the Congress that commercial relations with Czechoslovakia should be suspended immediately, and should be resumed only if and when the Government of Czechoslovakia restores to William N. Oatis his freedom.

27. CZECHOSLOVAK CHARGES REGARDING AMERICAN FOREIGN POLICY IN GERMANY: Note From the American Embassy in Prague to the Czechoslovak Foreign Ministry, September 1951²

The American Embassy presents its compliments to the Czechoslovak Ministry of Foreign Affairs and has the honor to acknowledge instructions from its Government, to the Ministry's note of September 1951,³ setting forth various charges about U.S. policy in Germany and the activities of the Sudeten population transferred to Germany. The Embassy emphatically rejects the allegation that the American Government is fostering militarism and irredentism in Germany. Such charges have no basis whatever in fact and the Embassy

As indicated in the Embassy's statement of November 8, 1947, the objective of the U.S. authorities in Germany has been, and is, to bring about as soon as possible the assimilation of Germans transferred from Czechoslovakia to the U.S. zone into the German economic and social structure as well as the identification of their interests with those of Germany. This purpose is, of course, being accomplished in a democratic manner, permitting organizations among such persons seeking to protect or improve the welfare of members, and permitting also peaceful and orderly expression of views.

The basic democratic principle of free expression of views including those not concurred in by others is apparently not understood by the present Government of Czechoslovakia. Strict controls over freedom of speech such as are imposed on the people of Czechoslovakia do not accord with democratic traditions on which the Federal Republic of Germany, as well as the Western occupying powers, is based.

In pursuance of the policy of fostering the development of free and democratic institutions in Germany, the Occupation Statute of April 10, 1949,² was enacted. Under this statute the U. S. authorities no longer exercise control over the establishment of organizations in the U.S. zone which engaged in political activity. The activities of such organizations are within the scope of the Constitution of the Federal Republic of Germany, which became effective on May 22, 1949.³ This constitution does not provide for controls by a single totalitarian party, such as once existed in Nazi Germany and now exist in certain other countries.

The Ministry has protested because Franz Bluecher, Vice Chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany, attended a meeting at Frankfurt on July 1, sponsored by the Union of East German Compatriots, and made a statement described by the Ministry as "provocative."

The U.S. Government has found no evidence that Dr. Bluecher in his statement manifested "aggressive designs" as alleged by the Ministry and regrets that his remarks were distorted in this fashion. Dr. Bluecher spoke of the Charter of East German Compatriots adopted August 5, 1950, and took as his principal thesis the following sentence from the charter: "We, the expellees, renounce all thoughts of revenge and retaliation and shall support with all our strength every endeavor directed towards the establishment of a United Europe in which nations may live in freedom from fear and force."

The U.S. Government fails to understand how a speech based on the concept of "a united Europe in which nations may live in freedom from fear and force" which appears to accord with the interests and hopes of all European peoples, is considered "provocative" and "aggressive" by the Czechoslovak Government.

³ Germany, 1947-1949: The Story in Documents (Department of State publication 3556; 1950), pp. 283-305.

Steps are now being taken toward the ideal of such a union by various democratic Governments in Europe, including the Republic of Germany. This development is encouraged by the U. S. Government as an important contribution to the stability and progress of Europe so that smaller nations can live in peace and freedom, without fear of attacks and impositions from neighbors such as took place in Central Europe prior to the last war, and again in Eastern Europe since 1945.

The U.S. support of peaceful international cooperation provides a striking contrast to the apparent intent of the Czechoslovak Government as evidenced by the note under reference and the Prague Declaration. By consistent distortion of facts, by attacking freedom of speech and information both at home and abroad, by seeking to isolate the Czechoslovak people from contact between the people of Czechoslovakia and other peoples of Europe whereby free international cooperation may be achieved, the Czechoslovak Government is contributing not to peace but to increased international tension. Such actions, in the interest of the Czechoslovak Government, are not in the interest of the people of Czechoslovakia or of Europe as a whole.

Despite the accusations of the Czechoslovak Government, the policy of the United States and its allies is aggressive and defensive. Consideration is being given to including German armed units in the Western defense forces, the reasons for the present strengthening of European defenses is clear to all who objectively examine the recent developments. At the close of the war the United States and other Western countries, looking forward to a peaceful future free of bloodshed, effectively demobilized their forces.

In contrast the Soviet Union alone maintained vast numbers of men under arms. At the same time that country employed a policy of breaking agreements designed to serve as a basis for future peace, initiated a policy of conquest and threatened future peace further by arming satellite regimes, including those in the Soviet zone of occupation in Germany.

The free countries of Europe, in cooperation with the United States, had no recourse therefore but to take measures for common defense. While undertaking such a program, however, the concept of a free Europe is not lost sight of but strengthened. The Czechoslovak Government in abetting Soviet propaganda and tactics stands firmly opposed to efforts of free countries to live in peace, freedom and working peacefully together.

28. TRAIN INCIDENT OF SEPTEMBER 11, 1951: Note From the American Embassy at Prague to the Czechoslovak Foreign Ministry, October 1, 1951¹

The American Embassy presents its compliments to the Czechoslovak Ministry of Foreign Affairs and has the honor to acknowledge the Ministry's note of September 20² with an enclosure concerning the unscheduled departure from Czechoslovakia for Germany on September 11 last of a train carrying approximately 100 persons, a number of whom have since freely indicated their desire not to return to Czechoslovakia. In this connection the Ministry makes a number of assertions, accusations, and complaints, as well as several requests in regard to all of which the Embassy has been directed to reply on behalf of the American Government as follows:

The contents of the Ministry's note, and of publicity simultaneously emanating from official sources in Prague on the same subject, seem founded on the notion that the train in question was seized by Czechoslovak "terrorists" and that this seizure was part of a conspiracy involving these so-called terrorists and certain foreign agents. The Ministry implies that these conjoined forces are sinister, and their purposes hostile and, furthermore, that their behavior has been irritating to the Czechoslovak Government. The Ministry further implies that the Czechoslovak Government would like to get its hands on the persons who ran off with their train.

The Ministry's note employs this fiction apparently with the purpose to conceal, if possible, the fact that the direction and departure of the train from Czechoslovakia was an unaided undertaking of certain citizens of that country who adopted this somewhat unconventional method of leaving the country and simultaneously indicated their attitude. It is noted, moreover, that this explanation does not conform with the original attempt to intimate that defective brakes were responsible for the entry of the train into Western Germany. However much the Czechoslovak Government has chosen thus to explain the occurrence or attempt thereby to keep from the Czechoslovak people the actual circumstances of this departure, the United States cannot understand how the Czechoslovak authorities can seriously attempt to use this fiction in a diplomatic note to a foreign government.

To declare that a foreign agency aided in the execution of this enterprise is not only contrary to the facts but underestimates the ingenuity of the Czechoslovak citizens concerned, in which connection the Embassy has been authorized to make clear that the part played granting political asylum to all those asserting that they desire to return to Czechoslovakia.

According to such information as has come to the knowledge of the United States Government, recent departures from Czechoslovakia have been effected among other means by such vehicles as automobiles, and trucks, as well as considerable assortment of small planes and even a glider, whereof the train is merely the largest conveyance to be employed. In addition there has been a rather substantial exodus of Czechoslovak citizens proceeding to the West. World opinion has not been accustomed to hold, as the Ministry apparently attempts to do, that such persons who have sought to leave their country in order to obtain political asylum abroad are "criminals." Based on records of the United States in Germany, one quality which these Czechoslovak citizens who have fled to Western Germany have in common is the desire for human freedom.

The American Government accordingly rejects the assertion that "grave crimes" were committed in an action involving the departure from Czechoslovakia for political reasons, or that the act can be considered to come within the purview of the extradition law mentioned in the Ministry's note. In this connection the United States made to the United States position when the Czechoslovak Government asked for the extradition as "criminals" and "terrorists" leaving Czechoslovakia for political reasons by three Czech transport planes which landed at Erding Field near Munich on January 24, 1950.¹ It was explained at that time that no basis existed for making or complying with such an extradition request under the Extradition Treaty of 1925² nor any other treaty in force between the United States and Czechoslovakia. The Treaty can be considered applicable to the question of returning to the United States Zone in Germany any of those now accepted by the Czechoslovak Government. It may be noted that Article I of the Extradition Treaty specifically excludes its application to the act or offense of a political character and recognizes the right of the receiving country to decide whether a case is of a political character. The United States has never recognized, as in the case with many other countries, any obligation to extradite in the absence of a treaty. No basis therefore exists for the claim of the Czechoslovak Government that the United States has violated any principles of international law or the stipulations of the Extradition Treaty.

The train in question had aboard approximately 100 persons when it reached Germany. Those who of their own free volition desired to return numbered 79 individuals, all of whom expressed their

States custody all appropriate facilities were provided for the comfort and welfare. The Czechoslovak Government may care to note how the United States authorities carried out this obligation of comity in comparison with the retention by Czechoslovak authorities for 26 days of two Western jet pilots in the United States jet plane who, on becoming lost and running out of fuel, were obliged to land near Praha on June 8.¹

The train itself, which has been in the custody of appropriate authorities, will be released at the frontier near Asch. It will not be necessary for Czechoslovakia to send a delegation to Germany for this purpose. It may be pointed out in this connection that the Ministry did not proceed properly in attempting at the outset to obtain release of the train by sending four representatives to the United States Zone without official notification to the United States Government.

Finally, note is taken of the statement in the communication under acknowledgment to the effect that Czechoslovakia seeks to reserve the assertion of a claim for "full compensation for damage caused to the Czechoslovak state," in reply to which the Embassy is directed to observe that whenever Czechoslovakia may feel impelled further to promote this project, that the Government may expect to receive a counter-claim including various expense incurred by the American Government in connection with the train in Germany.

As of probable interest to the appropriate Czechoslovak authorities the Embassy encloses the original signed statement of seven passengers on the train, six of whom were listed in Annex A of the Ministry's note as being "forcibly abducted . . . against their will and unlawfully detained." As the Ministry will observe, no assertion could be farther from the truth.

Since the Czechoslovak Government has already published its communications of September 20 to the American Government, it is requested that comparable publicity be given by the Czechoslovak Government to this communication.

9. THE SLANSKY TRIAL: Statement by the Secretary of State December 10, 1952²

The recent trial of Slansky³ and others which concluded with the imposing of drastic sentences of death or life imprisonment for all of the accused is another in the series of staged spectacles patterned on the purge trials at Moscow during the 30's. There is nothing new or who survive. We may expect it to recur in the Soviet empire wherever it is deemed necessary to teach the lessons of utter unquestioning dependence upon the Kremlin and unswerving and successful compliance with its purposes.

It is an elaborate pretense with innumerable false charges, forced testimony, and induced confessions but its essence is a technique of totalitarian control. It is designed to terrorize satellite regimes, to punish them for shortcomings, to compel greater exertions, to produce scapegoats, and to provide a propaganda demonstration of the Kremlin's favorite hates whether states, organizations, or individuals of the free world.

As to the anti-Israel, anti-Zionist and anti-Jewish aspects of the trial, occasion was taken to introduce numerous hostile allegations against the Zionist movement and the State of Israel. It is not yet clear what consequences this development may have for Jews generally in Czechoslovakia and in other satellite areas of Eastern Europe.

The record of the proceedings presents an interesting review of all the deficiencies of the regime in Czechoslovakia since the February coup as adjudged by Moscow. That it was necessary to have this trial is evidence of Moscow's dissatisfaction with what the Communists have done or failed to do in Czechoslovakia, especially with [the] performance of that country in the economic sphere.

30. AIRPLANE INCIDENT OF MARCH 12, 1954: Note From the American Embassy at Prague to the Czechoslovak Foreign Ministry, March 24, 1954¹

The competent American military authorities have made a detailed investigation of the incident alleged in the Ministry's note² and have found that two American aircraft on a routine training flight did in fact through error in navigation cross the Czechoslovak border at approximately the hour stated in the Ministry's note and thus penetrated inadvertently into Czechoslovakia. Unaware of their error these aircraft were peacefully returning to their base when set upon without warning by Czechoslovak fighter aircraft who crossed into the territory of the German Federal Republic.

The investigation established without any question that no warning was given by the Czechoslovak aircraft before opening fire and despite this hostile act neither of the American aircraft ever fired upon or attempted to fire upon the Czechoslovak aircraft. Reports from reliable witnesses and empty shell cases found within the territory of meet when the American aircraft were flying over the territory of the German Federal Republic. This penetration of the German border by the Czechoslovak MIG 15 fighter took place near the town of Waldmuenchen, longitude 49 degrees 23 minutes north and latitude 12 degrees 43 minutes east.

The Embassy wishes to express its regrets for the unintentional violation of the Czechoslovak territory by American aircraft but must at the same time protest against the unjustifiable hostile act committed by Czechoslovak fighters against American aircraft.

The Embassy wishes also to request that investigation be undertaken regarding both the unwarranted attack on American aircraft and the violation of the territory of the German Federal Republic by at least one Czechoslovak MIG 15 fighter plane. The Embassy would appreciate being informed of the results of the investigation as well as disciplinary action taken against the guilty persons involved.

31. CZECHOSLOVAK PROTEST REGARDING ARRIVAL OF AMERICAN BALLOONS IN CZECHOSLOVAKIA: Note From the American Embassy at Prague to the Czechoslovak Foreign Ministry, May 24, 1954¹

The American Embassy presents its compliments to the Czechoslovak Ministry of Foreign Affairs and has the honor, upon instructions of the U. S. Government, to refer to the Ministry's note of May 5, 1954,² concerning the arrival of balloons in Czechoslovakia.

The U. S. Government is informed that the Crusade for Freedom Committee has sent messages to the people of Czechoslovakia by the vehicle of balloons. The Crusade for Freedom, an organization of private citizens, is supported by millions of Americans and expresses the aspirations of the American people for the freedom of all peoples. The messages, it has been learned, transmitted news items and discussed concrete goals in which the Czechoslovak people would be interested.

The operation was undertaken by this private organization and neither the U. S. Government nor the U. S. authorities in Germany were involved. The U. S. Government rejects the protest of the Czechoslovak Government which is without foundation.

As has been previously suggested, the United States holds firmly to the view that there must exist unobstructed communication between peoples if nations are to live in peace and freedom with one another. When a government violates this principle by trying to slovak Government continues to deprive the Czechoslovak people the possibilities of free contact with other peoples, the free exchange of ideas and the free reception of uncensored news.

It is understandable that the American people would seek the means as are available to maintain contact with the people of Czechoslovakia with whom they had formerly enjoyed free association and with whom they share many common traditions and beliefs. The American people take a profound interest in the welfare and progress of the people of Czechoslovakia. The leaflets borne to Czechoslovakia express the interest of the American public in seeing the people there improved through the attainment of their legitimate goals. Notwithstanding, the Czechoslovak Government has declared these leaflets were subversive and inciting. It consequently has taken steps that in the eyes of the present regime in Czechoslovakia are of concrete steps to better the lot of the common man in Czechoslovakia is subversive in nature.

If the Czechoslovak Government desires that this free communication between peoples not be utilized, it lies within its power to remove the need for such media by opening the barrier to free communication to the people of Czechoslovakia. The United States is convinced that free contact between peoples everywhere will contribute to support world peace in which the Government of Czechoslovakia professes continuing interest. The U. S. Government would not be on a basis for interfering with attempts by private American citizens to establish communication with the people of Czechoslovakia or to convey to them the interest of the American people in Czechoslovakia.

32. BORDER INCIDENT OF JULY 4, 1954: Note From the United States Embassy at Prague to the Czechoslovak Foreign Ministry, July 7, 1954¹

The Embassy of the United States of America presents its compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and has the honor to inform you that United States authorities in Germany have reported that the following members of United States armed forces are in the custody of Czechoslovak border authorities . . . [names and ranks of personnel].² These soldiers were proceeding innocently with their arms along the border in the vicinity of Barnau on July 4, 1954, when they were seized by a Czechoslovak patrol at approximately 10:00 p.m. The Czechoslovak border patrol in this area has already advised that these American soldiers are in Czechoslovak custody.

3. AIRPLANE INCIDENT OF MARCH 10, 1953: Application by the United States to the International Court of Justice, March 22, 1955¹

SIR:

1. This is a written application, in accordance with the Statute² and Rules of the Court, submitted by the Government of the United States of America instituting proceedings against the Government of Czechoslovakia on account of certain wrongful acts committed by MIG-type aircraft from Czechoslovakia within the United States zone of occupation in Germany on March 10, 1953.

The subject of the dispute and a succinct statement of the facts and grounds upon which the claim of the Government of the United States of America is based are adequately set forth in a note delivered to the Czechoslovak Government on August 18, 1954. A copy of the note is attached to this application as an annex.³ The Czechoslovak Government has failed, although the time therefor has long since elapsed and although the United States Government has duly urged the Czechoslovak Government to make reply, to respond to the United States Government's note, but the Czechoslovak Government asserted its contentions in prior diplomatic correspondence on this subject, and the nature of those contentions is adverted to in the annex.

2. The United States Government notes that the present dispute concerns matters of the character specified in Article 36 (2) of the Statute of the Court, including subdivisions (a) through (d). As will be seen from the annex, the legal dispute of the United States Government with the Czechoslovak Government involves, among other questions of international law, the scope and application of international obligations relating to the overflight of intruding military aircraft, embodied in part in the Convention on International Civil Aviation, adopted December 7, 1944;⁴ the duties of the ground controllers and pilots of intruding military aircraft with respect to interception and identification by patrolling domestic aircraft in the country of intrusion; the content and application in case of such overflight of obligations to signal between patrolling and intruding aircraft; the nature of the rights, prerogatives and powers of the United States Government and the United States Air Force in the United States zone of occupation in Germany with respect to the control of a gether with numerous issues of fact which it reserved in the United States Government would constitute breaches of obligation by the Czechoslovak Government; and the extent of the reparations to be made by the Czechoslovak to the United States Government for all these breaches.

The United States Government, in filing this application with the Court, submits to the Court's jurisdiction for the purpose of this case. The Czechoslovak Government appears not to have made any declaration with the Court thus far, although it was invited to do so by the United States Government in the note annexed to the application. The Czechoslovak Government, however, is qualified to submit its views on the jurisdiction of the Court in this matter and may upon notice be given by this application by the Registrar, in accordance with the Rules of the Court, take the necessary steps to enable the Court's jurisdiction over both parties to the dispute to be confirmed.

The United States Government thus founds the jurisdiction of the Court on the foregoing considerations and on Article 3 of the Statute.

3. The claim of the Government of the United States is briefly that the Government of Czechoslovakia on May 5, 1958, willfully and unlawfully caused MIG-type military aircraft to cross the Czechoslovak-German border, and without any provocation to pursue and attack United States Air Force F-84-type aircraft which were engaged in peaceable routine patrol of the air space over the United States zone of Germany, destroying one F-84-type aircraft and causing physical injury to the pilot thereof, an American citizen, as well as other damage specified in the annexed note. The United States Government claims that in the circumstances described in the annex these actions constituted serious violations of international obligation on the part of the Czechoslovak Government and constitute breaches of international obligation the United States Government has demanded and demands monetary and other reparation from the Czechoslovak Government.

At earlier stages of the diplomatic negotiations, which it is to be determined to have been exhausted, the Czechoslovak Government asserted an entirely contrary version of the facts, which is set forth in the annexed note. The United States Government, in its pleadings herein, will more fully set forth such issues of fact and issues of law in this dispute, for the purpose of hearing by the Court in accordance with the Statute and Rules of the Court. It requests that the Court find that the Czechoslovak Government is liable to the United States Government for the damage described in the annex and that the Court award damages in favor of the United States Government against the Czechoslovak Government in the sum of $10,000,000, with interest, and such other reparation and redress as the Court may deem to be fit and proper; and that the Court make all other orders and awards, including an award of costs, to be determined by the Court.

34. VOGELER CASE: Note From the American Minister at Budapest¹ to the Hungarian Foreign Minister,² February 1, 1950³

I have the honor to refer to the Hungarian Government's reply of January 7, 1950,⁴ to the note which I communicated to you under date of January 3⁵ concerning the case of Mr. Robert A. Vogeler.

I am instructed by my Government to state that it regards the above-mentioned reply of the Hungarian Government as wholly unsatisfactory. The Hungarian Government cannot, in the view of my government, avoid its international responsibilities and obligations in the Vogeler case by asserting this matter is entirely an internal affair of Hungary. The United States Government considers that it has every right to concern itself with the treatment of this American citizen, who has been detained for over two months without access to American Consular representatives or, so far as I am aware, to legal counsel. The United States Government will continue to concern itself with Mr. Vogeler's situation and until his release will hold the Hungarian Government responsible in every particular as regards his well being.

In an interview on January 19 the Deputy Prime Minister of Hungary informed me that, in spite of the repeated representations of the United States Government, Mr. Vogeler would shortly be brought to trial. The United States Government cannot accept such action as justified, especially since the Hungarian Government has not given me any explanation of the charges against Mr. Vogeler. I refused all of my requests concerning an opportunity for American Consular Officers to see him.

The Deputy Prime Minister further informed me that Mr. Vogeler would be public in order that the world might know the correctness of Hungarian justice and assured me that he would have full opportunity to defend himself and might employ as many Hungarian lawyers as he desired. In the light of these assurances, I am directed by my government to invite your attention to the following:

Without prejudice in any way to its continuing demands for Mr. Vogeler's prompt release and liberty to depart from Hungary, the reservation of rights respecting possible claims contained in the Declaration of December 20, 1949,¹ the United States Government requests the right of Mr. Vogeler to the services of legal counsel retained on his behalf irrespective of the membership of such counsel in the Hungarian bar. In this connection, the United States Government requests that the Hungarian Government agree to the entry of a private American lawyer and such assistants as he may require, whose purpose will be to consult at once with Mr. Vogeler, the Hungarian legal counsel retained on Mr. Vogeler's behalf, to associate himself, together with his assistants, in the preparation of Mr. Vogeler's defense. Arrangements are now being made for the retention of such an American lawyer, whose name will be announced promptly to the Hungarian Government.

The United States Government insists that American Consular Officers and the legal counsel retained on Mr. Vogeler's behalf be afforded immediate and thereafter continuous access to Mr. Vogeler with assurance of adequate opportunity to converse freely with him, to prepare his case, and inquire fully into all matters which he may wish to discuss with Officers, his legal counsel, or Mr. Vogeler may consider proper for discussion. The United States Government requests that the Hungarian Government give unqualified assurances that the legal counsel serving Mr. Vogeler will be wholly free to represent his client in a forthright manner and to conduct the latter's defense in the manner best calculated to serve his interests. Further, the United States Government requests that Mr. Vogeler's legal counsel be given free access day by day to the verbatim record of the proceedings in the court in this case. The United States Government requests assurance that representatives of the American Legation, or other persons, otherwise, will be allowed to attend the trial and the what any such allegations, if they are to be made at the trial, and a explanation of the grounds on which they are based, be communicated to me at once as a matter of right and courtesy, since such charges obviously affect the relations between our two countries.

The Hungarian Government is requested to make a prompt reply on the above matters in order that its intentions may be clearly understood and full opportunity given to Mr. Vogeler's counsel to prepare adequately for his defense and in order that the conduct of the trial may correspond with the Deputy Prime Minister's assurances. Accept [etc.]¹

5. RESTRICTIONS ON TRAVEL OF HUNGARIAN DIPLOMATS IN THE UNITED STATES: Note From the Secretary of State to the Hungarian Minister at Washington,² January 29, 1951³

The Secretary of State presents his compliments to the Honorable the Minister of the Hungarian People's Republic and has the honor to inform him as follows:

Effective immediately, members of the Hungarian diplomatic mission in the United States and Hungarian employees of that mission as well as the dependents of these persons, are prohibited from staying or traveling beyond a specified area except by express permission. The perimeter of the designated area is fixed at a distance of eighteen miles from the White House, Washington, D. C.

Permission to stay or travel outside the specified area shall be requested in advance through the Chief of Protocol, Department of State, according to a prescribed form, of which a facsimile is enclosed and copies may be obtained from the Department upon request. Travel beyond the designated area should not be undertaken prior to the receipt by applicants of signed authorization from the Department of State.

The Secretary of State further informs the Minister of the Hungarian People's Republic that the Department of State will take into account in its application of the foregoing restrictions, with particular reference to the issuance of travel permits, the consideration accorded to members of the American Legation in Budapest who travel beyond the limits of the restrictive zone established by the Hungarian Government on January 22, 1951.¹

36. VOGELER CASE: Statement by the Department
April 28, 1951²

Robert A. Vogeler, an American citizen who has been detained in Hungary for over 17 months, was today released by the Hungarian authorities and has arrived at the American Legation in Vienna. Mr. Vogeler was delivered by Hungarian officials into the hands of a representative of the American Legation in Vienna at the Austrian frontier at 11 a.m. today (5 a.m. e.s.t.) and escorted directly to Vienna.

The Department is gratified that this American citizen has regained the freedom of which he was unjustly deprived and that he has safely reunited with his family. The release of Mr. Vogeler is the result of continuous efforts by the United States Government on his behalf since the beginning of his detention and brings to a close negotiations which the American Minister in Budapest, P. Davis, has carried on personally with the Hungarian Government over a long period of time, with skill and determination under trying conditions.

In connection with the understanding reached with the Hungarian Government for freeing Mr. Vogeler, assurances on various points have been communicated by Mr. Davis to the Hungarian Government, and, in consequence of the latter's action in releasing Mr. Vogeler and of his safe arrival at the American Legation in Vienna, these assurances now enter into effect:

(1) The United States Government will approve the release of American citizens detained in Hungarian consular establishments in New York City and Ohio.

(2) It will also, through its appropriate agencies, arrange for the passports of private American citizens who may wish to travel to Hungary.

(3) Finally, the United States Government will facilitate the delivery of all Hungarian goods in the United States zone of occupation, which, in the light of the provisions of article 30 of the 1947 Peace Treaty with Hungary,³ have been found available for release, including Hungarian cultural property, and will permit to the representatives to enter the United States zone of German occupation.

United States civil and military officials in Germany will facilitate the entry of the Hungarian representatives for the purpose stated and render them all proper assistance as regards the collection and shipment of the property in question, and regard them as official representatives of the Hungarian Government.

With regard to the matters dealt with under points (1) and (2) above, it is, of course, the expectation of this Government that the Hungarian Government's observance of consular rights and the rights of American citizens will be in accord with international law and practice and with the provisions of existing treaties between the United States and Hungary. Moreover, private American citizens who may wish to travel to Hungary will undoubtedly wish to inform themselves through the Department or American missions abroad concerning conditions in that country.

37. HUNGARIAN CHARGES REGARDING ACTIVITIES OF AMERICAN OFFICIALS: Note From the American Legation at Budapest to the Hungarian Foreign Ministry, July 7, 1951 (Excerpt)¹

The Government of the United States categorically rejects the allegations directed against the Legation of the United States and members of its staff by the Hungarian Government in its note of July 2² and regards the demands put forward by the Hungarian Government on the basis of these charges as arbitrary and unwarranted. The activities of the United States Legation in Hungary have been legitimate in every respect and in full conformity with international diplomatic practice. The United States Government concludes, therefore, that the conduct of United States Legation officials has been called into question only to serve the propaganda aims of the Hungarian Government.

In the view of the United States Government, the proceedings in the trial of Archbishop Grösz establish nothing except the fact that the Hungarian authorities are continuing by ruthless and unconscionable measures to terrorize the Hungarian people into mute submission to the existing regime and its totalitarian program. In this instance as on many past occasions, the Hungarian Government has contrived a tissue of falsehoods in a brazen though futile attempt to justify before the world its continuing campaign to crush all dissent and to suppress the human rights and fundamental freedoms of its citizens.

ian people, despite unending Communist propaganda and continue to maintain their feelings of deep friendship to the United States as well as their firm confidence that the United States Government will not cease to concern itself with their welfare.

Without accepting or crediting in any way the preposterous charges which the Hungarian Government has advanced, the United States Government has taken the decision to discontinue cultural and informational activities mentioned in the Hungarian Government's note, since it is clear that the Hungarian Government has rendered impossible the maintenance of open and normal relations and the free exchange of ideas and information between the two peoples. The United States Government believes, however, that the attitude of the Hungarian Government in this regard is a source of deep resentment and regret by the Hungarian people. The United States has shown a great interest in cultural contacts with the Hungarian people. The United States and who are fully aware that this policy of the Hungarian Government is aimed at further isolating them from the rest of the world. By its behavior in this matter, the Hungarian Government has effectively demonstrated before the entire world that it is not prepared to tolerate, even to a limited degree the exercise of freedom of expression.

38. MASS DEPORTATIONS FROM HUNGARY: the President, July 27, 1951¹

Many Americans have expressed concern about the mass deportations from Hungary which are being carried out by the Hungarian Government of that country. Their condemnation of these acts against the people of Hungary is in the best American tradition of concern for liberty and justice. I am deeply moved by the plight of the Hungarian people, who bear a heavy burden of oppression and I share the abhorrence which has been expressed by the American people at these measures which the Hungarian Government has taken with a wanton disregard of every principle of right and decency.

The Government of the United States is giving the closest attention to the deportations in Hungary with a view to taking such action as will appropriately expose this situation to public view and render the Hungarian Government accountable before the American people for its infamous conduct. The forced removal of thousands of Hungarians from their homes by the Hungarian Government under the pretext of the human rights provisions of the treaty of peace with Germany. The United States Government has already formally charged the

...in the terms of a Resolution passed by the General Assembly of the United Nations on November 3, 1950,¹ this Government will submit to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, and through him to all member Governments of the United Nations, detailed evidence which the Department of State has in its possession regarding many such violations. In view of the significant bearing which the present deportations have on the general question of the Hungarian Government's suppression of human rights and freedoms, the United States Government will also submit to the Secretary-General all evidence which may be available from reliable sources regarding the conditions under which such expulsions are being conducted.

39. AIRPLANE INCIDENT OF NOVEMBER 19, 1951: Statement by the Secretary of State, December 28, 1951²

Every American will be relieved that the four American flyers are now safely in our hands. But underlying relief is a deep current of indignation over the treatment they have received.

The American people are rightfully indignant. Because we value the welfare of the individual above all else, we have paid the so-called "fines." But we have not paid willingly, and we state clearly, in order that there may be no misunderstanding of our attitude in the future, that our patience is not inexhaustible.

In this whole performance, the Budapest regime has ignored the basic rules of long-established international conduct.

Repeated requests were made to the Hungarian authorities to permit American officials to visit the airmen. No such access was allowed either before trial or subsequently when the request was renewed. In the circumstances, in view of the refusal of the Hungarian authorities to permit American officials to exercise this normal right, which is basic to the extension of customary consular protection to American citizens abroad, the U.S. Government will no longer validate the passports of American citizens for travel in Hungary. Furthermore, since the reciprocal basis of the exchange of consular privileges has been nullified by Hungary, this Government is also notifying the Hungarian Legation in Washington that the Hungarian consulates in this country, which are located in Cleveland and New York, should be closed immediately.³

Any further statement on this matter must await the opportunity to talk with the released airmen.

40. RESTRICTIONS ON TRAVEL OF HUNGARIAN IN THE UNITED STATES: Note From the Secretary of State to the Hungarian Minister at Washington,¹ October 13, 1951

The Secretary of State presents his compliments to the Minister of the Hungarian People's Republic and has the honor to refer to the regulation of travel of United States diplomatic personnel in Hungary and of Hungarian diplomatic personnel in the United States.

The restrictions on the travel of Hungarian Legation staff members in the United States which were notified to the Minister of the Hungarian People's Republic on January 29, 1951³ were imposed after the Hungarian Ministry of Foreign Affairs informed the American Legation in Budapest on January 19, 1951 that restrictions were being imposed on the travel of United States diplomatic personnel in Hungary. The Department of State affirmed clearly that in applying restrictions on the travel of Hungarian Legation staff members in the United States it would take into consideration accorded to members of the American Legation in Budapest who might wish to travel beyond the limits of the zone established by the Hungarian Government.

The Secretary of State welcomes the decision of the Hungarian Government, made known in a circular note of August 1, 1951, to cancel the regulations communicated in its note of July 1, 1951 and to establish new procedures and regulations for the more extensive movement by foreign diplomatic personnel in Hungary.

In view of the Hungarian Government's modification of its restrictions hitherto in force, the competent United States authorities have decided upon appropriate changes in the regulations which previously governed the travel of Hungarian Legation staff members in the United States. The Minister of the Hungarian People's Republic is accordingly informed that the restrictions notified to the Legation on January 29, 1951 are superseded by the following:

1. Members of the Hungarian diplomatic mission in the United States and their dependents may travel freely within 25 miles from the Zero Milestone located on the north side of the Potomac River in Washington, D. C.

2. Elsewhere throughout the United States, travel by the Hungarian Legation staff and their dependents will be permitted upon written notification 24 hours in advance of such travel. Required notification shall be made to the Chief of Protocol of the Department of State.

of State requests the Minister of the Hungarian People's Republic to inform his Government in this regard and expresses the hope that the Hungarian Government, upon further consideration of the question of travel restrictions, will find it desirable at an early date to enlarge the areas in Hungary where travel may be freely undertaken or to remove all travel restrictions.

41. LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT TO THE EXECUTIVE CHAIRMAN OF THE UNITED CATHOLIC ORGANIZATIONS FOR THE FREEING OF CARDINAL MINDSZENTY FEBRUARY 1, 1954²

DEAR MR. VORBECK: I have your telegram of January twenty-third on behalf of the United Catholic Organizations for the Freeing of Cardinal Mindszenty. We in the free world have not forgotten that this is the fifth anniversary of Cardinal Mindszenty's trial and imprisonment by the Communist authorities in Hungary.

The unjust nature of the proceedings against Cardinal Mindszenty, of course, well known to the American people. They regarded the attack upon him as a blow against religious freedom in Hungary and an unprincipled attempt to destroy spiritual and moral influences in that country.

The Communist assault upon religious liberty and leadership in Hungary has failed, however, to turn the Hungarian people from their faith in God. The plight of Cardinal Mindszenty and of other churchmen who have suffered at the hands of the Communists has not been forgotten. Their situation continues deeply to concern the people of Hungary and to evoke the sympathy of the free world. Despite the constraints of person and silence imposed on Cardinal Mindszenty and other church leaders by their persecutors, the spirit of these men has defied confinement by the totalitarian State.

42. AIRPLANE INCIDENT OF NOVEMBER 19, 1951:
by the United States to the Registrar of the Interna of Justice, February 16, 1954¹

SIR:

1. This is a written application, in accordance with the Statutes and Rules of the Court, submitted by the Government of the United States of America instituting proceedings against the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on account of certain actions of the latter Government, in concert with the Government of the Hungarian People's Republic. A separate written application is being submitted by the Government of the United States of America simultaneously herewith instituting proceedings against the Government of the Hungarian People's Republic on account of certain actions of that Government in the same matter. The Government of the United States of America requests that so far as it may be convenient and proper to do so the two applications and the proceedings thereon be considered and decided together.

The subject of the dispute and a succinct statement of the facts and grounds on which the claim of the Government of the United States of America is based are set forth in two notes, one delivered to the Soviet Government on March 17, 1953 and one delivered to the Hungarian Government on the same day;³ the note to the Soviet Government was incorporated by reference in the note to the Hungarian Government, the note to the Soviet Government was incorporated by reference in the note to the Hungarian Government, and the two Governments received from the United States Government a copy of the note addressed by the United States Government to the other Government. Copies of both notes are attached to this application as an annex.⁴

2. The United States Government notes that the present dispute concerns matters of the character specified in Article 36 of the Statute of the Court, including subdivisions (a) through (d). As will be seen from the annex, the legal dispute of the United States Government with the Soviet Government involves the interpretation of the Treaty of Peace, signed at Paris February 10, 1947,⁵ the

¹ Department of State Bulletin, Mar. 22, 1954, pp. 450-451. ...arian Government are parties; the Treaty of Friendship, Commerce and Consular Rights, signed at Washington June 24, 1925,¹ which was in effect during the period relevant to this dispute and to which the United States Government and the Hungarian Government are parties; numerous questions of international law, as set forth in Part I of each of the annexed notes; numerous issues of fact which established would constitute breaches of international obligations by the Hungarian Government; and questions of the nature and extent of reparation to be made to the United States Government by the Hungarian Government for these breaches.

The United States Government, in filing this application with the Court, submits to the Court's jurisdiction for the purposes of this case. The Hungarian Government appears not to have filed any declaration with the Court thus far, and although it was invited to do so by the United States Government in the Note annexed hereto it has not made any responsive reply to the invitation. The Hungarian Government, however, is qualified to submit to the jurisdiction of the Court in this matter and may upon notification of this application by the Registrar, in accordance with the Rules of the Court, take the necessary steps to enable the Court's jurisdiction over both parties to the dispute to be confirmed.

Thus the United States Government founds the jurisdiction of the Court on the foregoing considerations and on Article 36 (1) of the Statute.

3. The claim of the Government of the United States of America is briefly that the Government of the Hungarian People's Republic in concert with and aided and abetted by the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on November 19, 1951, wilfully and unlawfully caused to be seized a United States Air Force C-47 type aircraft together with its crew of four American nationals and its contents, driven over Hungary by winds unknown to the crew, and that thereafter both Governments engaged in unlawful actions against the crew and against the United States with respect to the incident constituting both serious violations of existing treaties as well as manifest denials of justice and other international wrongs. For these breaches of international obligation the United States has demanded and demands monetary and other reparation from the Hungarian Government. The Soviet Government has sought to justify some of its conduct by Article 22 of the Treaty of Peace to which reference has been made, a contention which the United States Government denies.

As the United States Government, in further pleadings herein will more fully set forth, the United States Government proposes that the issues of law and fact in this dispute be heard and decided by the Court in accordance with its Statute and Rules; that the Court decide that the accused Governments are jointly and severally liable to the United States for the damage caused; that the Court award damages in favor of the United States Government against the Government in the sum of $637,894.11, with interest, as provided in the annexed notes; that the Court determine the nature and extent of other reparation and redress, which the Court may deem proper; and that the Court make the necessary orders including an award of costs, to effectuate its determination.

43. HUNGARIAN PROTEST REGARDING ARRIVAL OF BALLOONS: Note From the American Legation at Budapest to the Hungarian Foreign Ministry, December 17, 1954¹

The Legation of the United States of America presents its compliments to the Ministry for Foreign Affairs of the Hungarian Republic and has the honor to refer to the Ministry's note of December 15, 1954,² concerning leaflets carried by balloons into Hungary.

The Legation is instructed by the United States Government to state that the activity in question was undertaken by the American Committee for Freedom and Radio Free Europe on their own initiative and responsibility. These are private organizations established and supported by private American citizens. It is only natural that the United States should take an interest in the welfare of the Hungarian people and seek some means of communication with them. If unauthorized broadcasts have been adopted, this is due solely to the actions of the Hungarian Government and to those in and outside of Hungary who are responsible for the policy of erecting barriers against free communication among peoples. This policy has been pursued to the extent that even the airwaves in Hungary are artificially jammed, so far as possible communication by radio.

Since this matter was called to its attention, the Government of the United States has obtained copies of the balloon leaflets and has examined their content. These leaflets suggest only that the Government of Hungary employ legal means to achieve realization of its constitutionally assured them by their Constitution and, in many that the Hungarian Government could improve the condition of the Hungarian people by:

- a. In practice, vesting real authority in popularly chosen Local Councils, constitutionally responsible and accountable to the local population;
- b. Enforcing in practice the constitutional guarantees of free speech and assembly;
- c. Assuring in practice the constitutional guarantee of equality before the law;
- d. Guaranteeing in practice the right of the working peasant to a just share of the fruits of his labor;
- e. Respecting in practice responsibility of the working people freely to organize for the protection of their interests against exploitation;
- f. Observance in practice of the constitutional right of the worker to proper rest and recreation, as well as other benefits necessary for decent livelihood;
- g. Affirmation in practice that, to protect the wealth of the Hungarian community, the economic welfare of the Hungarian people must transcend the demands resulting from foreign economic levies;
- h. Recognition in practice that the forced nationalization of consumer goods outlets and services has deprived the Hungarian people not only of an important element of their guaranteed personal liberty, but also of their legitimate material needs;
- i. Realizing in practice the requirement for adequate housing to assist in protecting the institutions of marriage and family;
- j. Establishing in practice the principle of free education and scholarly inquiry, and the constitutional right of freedom of worship and conscience.

The United States Government does not believe that any of the above suggestions can be considered either "inciting," "slandering," or "seditious." Certain of the highest officials of the Hungarian Government apparently share this belief as in recent months they have publicly criticized present conditions in Hungary including reference to flagrant abuses of police power and judicial processes as well as deep-seated economic ills and political tensions. The leaflets in question merely make suggestions concerning practical means whereby some admitted shortcomings may be corrected.

The United States Government desires to take this occasion to reiterate its belief in international freedom of communication and to express its conviction that steps in achieving peaceful relations Peoples of the World.”¹ This resolution among other things urged all members of UNESCO to take the necessary measures to ensure freedom of expression and to remove barriers to the free flow of distorted information between member states.

The United States Government hopes that the day will come when balloons will no longer be necessary as a means by which one country may freely communicate with peoples in another. Presumably it is within the power of the Hungarian Government to take the necessary remedial action. Should the Hungarian Government, in conformity with the obligations it assumed under the United States and other signatories of Article Two of the Charter of Peace, establish freedom of discussion, opinion, and assembly in the country and, in accordance with the spirit of that article and the above-cited UNESCO resolution, remove existing barriers to interchange with the outside world, the need for balloons and for Hungarian people to resort to unconventional means of communication will no longer exist.

44. MESSAGE FROM THE ACTING SECRETARY OF STATE TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE HUNGARIAN COUNCIL,³ FEBRUARY 23, 1955⁴

The efforts and sacrifices made by the people of Hungary in the War of Independence of 1848-49 were viewed, as you know, with great sympathy by the American people. This was a period in our history when we were coming of age as a nation and, in the process, the principles underlying the founding of our Government were being established. The American people felt a deep interest in all peoples who sought freedom and independence. In the years that followed, the sympathy between the two peoples was further strengthened by the arrival of thousands of Hungarian immigrants who, seeking new opportunities in this land of freedom, came to the United States and contributed importantly to our national growth and development and enrichment of our culture.

Now, more than a century after the stirring events of 1848-49, I believe we may regard the Hungarian Revolution of 1956 as inspiring and reassuring. Despite all vicissitudes, the people of Hungary and the people of the United States remain staunch friends and continue to find in their common devotion to those high ideals the basis of mutual respect and understanding. From these lasting foundations, difficult days which lie ahead, the goals of liberty and justice in the struggle against tyranny come within clear prospect, and we can view the future with quiet resolution and confidence.

5. HARASSMENT OF LOCAL EMPLOYEES OF THE AMERICAN LEGATION AT BUDAPEST: Note and Memorandum From the American Legation to the Hungarian Foreign Ministry, July 1, 1955 ¹

The Legation of the United States of America presents its compliments to the Ministry for Foreign Affairs of the Hungarian People's Republic and has the honor to refer to the arrest of Mr. Cornelius Balas, a Hungarian employee of the Legation, by Hungarian police authorities on June 23, 1955. The Legation has not been adequately informed of the reasons for this action, which is the latest in a long series of such harassments directed against its local employees. The Hungarian Government has persistently failed to respond satisfactorily to repeated inquiries by the Legation in each of these cases. The Legation is instructed to inform the Ministry for Foreign Affairs that the United States Government protests most emphatically the arbitrary and secretive actions which the Hungarian Government has taken against not only Mr. Balas but also other local employees of the Legation. These steps by the Hungarian Government, accompanied as they have been by acts of intimidation and reprisal against visitors at the Legation, indicate clearly that the Hungarian Government has adopted once again the provocative policies in disregard of human rights that have previously brought discredit upon it.

The Government of the United States has also taken note in the connection of the MTI [Magyar Távíráti Iroda, Hungarian Telegraph Agency] release of June 25 concerning the detention of alleged American spies and saboteurs by State Defense organs of the Ministry of the Interior. It categorically rejects this announcement as slanderous and unfounded. These actions of the Hungarian Government, especially at the present juncture in international affairs, are wholly inconsistent with the professed desire of the Hungarian Government for normal relations.

In these circumstances the United States Government cannot but regard the arrest of Mr. Balas and the continued detention of other local employees of the American Legation as developments detrimental to United States-Hungarian relations. It is the earnest hope

The Government of the United States calls upon the Government to provide a satisfactory explanation of charges against the local employees of the American Legation who are under detention by Hungarian authorities or to permit them without delay to their employment with assurance to them that they will not be subjected to further molestation without cause. Failing a satisfactory response or remedial action by the Hungarian Government within a reasonable period of time, the United States Government will find it necessary to make further facts regarding the conduct of the Hungarian Government and related matters and to reconsider the situation under which the Hungarian Legation in Washington has been free to carry out information activities in the United States.

The Legation of the United States requests a prompt reply from the Ministry for Foreign Affairs.¹

MEMORANDUM OF HISTORY OF ARRESTS AND HARASSMENT OF AMERICAN LEGATION AT BUDAPEST²

Since 1951 twelve local employees of the American Legation in Budapest have been arrested or deported, or have disappeared without trace as a result of action instituted by authorities of the Hungarian Government. The history of these cases is as follows:

1. Stephen Szecsi—Arrested January 19, 1951. An Aide Memoire from the Hungarian Government to state the reason for the arrest, was received by the Legation on January 19, 1951. The Hungarian Government has to this date failed to furnish the Legation with a specification of the charges preferred against Szecsi with other particulars concerning the case. The Legation learned later that Mr. Szecsi died in prison on April 28, 1955.

2. Aloysius Pongracz—Arrested March 24, 1951. An Aide Memoire from the Hungarian Government to inform the Legation of the reasons for Pongracz' arrest was left at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs on March 24, 1951. No reply has to this date been received. Mr. Pongracz is presumed to be in prison.

3. Otto Fernbach—Arrested April 17, 1951, following a minor accident in which he was involved while acting as official Legation interpreter. The Legation subsequently learned that Mr. Fernbach had been held in fifteen days imprisonment. In its Aide Memoire dated April 17, 1951, the Legation requested information regarding the sentence reportedly imposed on Fernbach. No reply was ever received to this inquiry. Mr. Fernbach disappeared for a period of two years. He reappeared unexpectedly in 1953, stating only that he had been in prison. He has been re-employed by the Legation since the date of his release.

4. Frederick B. Karg—Deported from Budapest on twenty-four days' leave on July 3, 1951 to a small village in northern Hungary. The Legation addressed to the Minister for Foreign Affairs on June 23, 1952, repeating the Legation's request for information. In its reply, dated September 1, 1952, the Ministry stated that Mr. Batta had been taken into custody for anti-democratic activity. No specification of the charges or announcement of sentence has ever been communicated to the Legation. It is assumed that Mr. Batta is still in prison.

6. Hannah Vegh—Disappeared on July 10, 1952. In its Note No. 22 of September 9, 1952, the Legation requested the assistance of the Ministry in locating Miss Vegh. On September 25, the Ministry offered the explanation that Miss Vegh had attempted to leave Hungary illegally and that she had been arrested. Although no subsequent information regarding Miss Vegh has been communicated to the Legation, it is presumed that she is still under detention.

7. Aimee Karolyi—She was last seen on March 13, 1953. On March 20 the Legation sent Note No. 119, requesting the Ministry to determine the whereabouts of Mrs. Karolyi. A further inquiry was directed to the Ministry in the Legation's Note No. 151 of May 20, 1953. The Ministry replied on June 27 that Mrs. Karolyi had committed action in violation of Hungarian criminal law and had been ordered detained. No further information concerning this case has been forthcoming and Mrs. Karolyi is presumed still to be under detention.

8. Jenő Kvassay, who was employed as a personal chauffeur by the Assistant Military Attaché of the Legation, disappeared on April 17, 1953. On April 22 the Legation, in its Note No. 137, requested the Ministry to inform the Legation concerning the whereabouts of Mr. Kvassay. No reply has ever been received to this inquiry and Mr. Kvassay's whereabouts and fate continue to be unknown to the Legation.

9. László Gal—Disappeared on June 3, 1953. The Legation on June 8, 1953, sent Note No. 161 to the Ministry asking for information regarding the whereabouts of Dr. Gal. The Ministry's reply, dated June 27, stated only that Dr. Gal had committed "action in violation of Hungarian criminal law" and was being detained. The specific charges on which Dr. Gal was detained have never been made known, nor has the result of any proceedings against him ever been communicated to the Legation.

10. George Karman—Disappeared without explanation on September 24, 1953. On September 28 the Minister of the United States made an oral protest to Mr. Hajdu, Director of Political Section No. 2 of the Ministry, in connection with the unexplained disappearance of Mr. Karman. On October 4, the Minister addressed a personal letter to Mr. Hajdu requesting information as to whether the Ministry had any information as yet on Mr. Karman. Mr. Hajdu on October 12, addressed a note to the Minister stating that in view of Mr. Karman's Hungarian citizenship this case was not a proper subject for discussion between the Ministry for Foreign Affairs and the Legation. When in its Note No. 16 of October 25, the Legation took issue with this contention, the Ministry in its Note No. 001415/1 of November 7, closed the case by stating that it did not wish to react to the Legation's Note. No further information concerning the case of Mr. Karman has been communicated to the Legation since this date.

11. Béla Kapotsy—Arrested on February 24, 1955. In its Note No. 36 of March 7, the Legation requested the Ministry to clarify the reasons for the arrest. In a subsequent conversation, Mr. Hajdu, Director of Political Department No. 1 of the Ministry, advised a representative of the Legation that he understood the arrest was due to some "illegal activities" and that he would attempt to ascertain the facts and inform the Legation. No additional information regarding Mr. Kapotsy's case has to this date been forthcoming from the Ministry.

12. Cornelius Balas—Arrested on June 23, 1955. The Legation was informed

In addition to these arrests, a pattern of harassment of staff members has been increasingly evident, particularly in the past two months. American members of the staff of the Legation, including the American Minister, have from time to time been kept under close surveillance with their every move being carefully watched by as many as five of what have been clearly established to be Hungarian security organs have been observed loitering in the vicinity of the Chancery building at one time and on various other occasions over the past month. That these persons represent security organs of the Hungarian Government has been confirmed beyond doubt by American Legation staff members. The persons in question have been seen to follow individuals leaving the Legation, to detain them, and, in several instances, to conduct them to waiting trucks, and taxis, in which they were transported away.

This molestation of visitors calling at the Legation has become particularly severe since the middle of May. Again, observation by Legation staff members indicates that the persons who have been followed, detained, and/or carried off exceeds one hundred at the least, with good reason for believing that a very high percentage of all visitors to the Legation have been so treated during the past month.

46. HUNGARIAN INFORMATION ACTIVITIES IN THE UNITED STATES: Note From the Secretary of State to the Hungarian Minister at Washington,¹ September 1, 1955²

The Secretary of State presents his compliments to the Minister of the Hungarian People's Republic and has the honor to refer to the dissemination of the publication "New Hungarian Information Activities in the United States of America" and to other information activities in the United States of America by the Hungarian People's Republic.

The Minister is doubtless aware that the American Legation in Budapest has found it increasingly difficult to carry on its normal activities comparable to those carried on freely in the United States by the Legation of the Hungarian People's Republic. This difficulty has arisen because the Hungarian Government has adopted a restrictive attitude toward the American Legation's information activities in Hungary, already limited in scope, and has permitted the police authorities to arrest arbitrarily and otherwise to harass the employees of the American Legation and to molest American local visitors calling at the Legation.

carriers to cultural intercourse and the interchange of information and ideas between peoples for the establishment of a new and healthy atmosphere for the pursuit of peace. The Government of the United States has exercised the utmost patience in awaiting the Hungarian Government's response to its note of July 1¹ requesting a satisfactory explanation or remedial action with respect to the matters in question. The Hungarian Government has made no reply, however, nor has it taken any steps to correct the situation which was the subject of the Government's just complaint. In these circumstances, the Government of the United States has reluctantly concluded that it has no alternative other than to invoke appropriate countermeasures and maintain them in force until such time as the Hungarian Government may be disposed to reconsider its actions and reestablish conditions permitting normal information activities by the Legations of the two countries.

The Secretary of State accordingly informs the Minister that the Legation of the Hungarian People's Republic is required to cease all information activities in which it is directly or indirectly engaged, including the dissemination of "New Hungary" and other publications, film showings, and photographic exhibits, in so far as these activities are conducted wholly or in part outside of the Legation premises.

This requirement is effective immediately.

17. POLISH REPATRIATION ACTIVITIES IN GERMANY: Note From the American Embassy at Warsaw to the Polish Foreign Ministry, July 19, 1951²

The Embassy of the United States of America presents its compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and on instructions from the Government of the United States has the honor to reply as follows to the Ministry's note of June 13, 1951,³ concerning the termination of accreditation of the Polish repatriation mission in the United States zone of Germany.

As the Polish Government is aware, repatriation mission personnel are accredited to the United States High Commissioner for Germany who has the responsibility of determining the size of the mission on the Moreover, during the first 5 months of 1951 there were voluntary repatriations of Polish citizens from the United States zone.

There is no Polish displaced persons camp in the United States zone and only one International Refugee Organization repatriation center at Griesheim near Frankfurt. Thus, since the period of mass repatriation had clearly come to an end, the continued presence of a United States zone of eight Polish repatriation officials could be considered unnecessary.

A procedure exists, in the absence of a Polish repatriation center, for returning those few persons who might from time to time wish to return for repatriation to Poland. Arrangements in each case are made by the Polish Military Mission at Berlin with the United States High Commissioner's office. This was pointed out to the United States Polish Repatriation Mission in the United States zone on May 16, 1951, from the United States High Commissioner's office requesting the withdrawal of the mission.¹ The United States Ambassador at Warsaw also stressed in a conversation with the Polish General of the Foreign Office on June 12, 1951, that facilities for repatriation have not been terminated as arrangements for repatriation can readily be effected by the Polish Military Mission at Berlin in agreement with the office of the United States High Commissioner.

Under these circumstances the United States Government categorically rejects the charge made by the Polish Government on June 13, 1951, that American authorities in terminating the Polish mission in the United States zone are rendering impossible the repatriation of Polish displaced persons who wish to return to Poland.

Moreover, since the Polish Government continues to deny the possibility of making arrangements for voluntary repatriation, there has been no violation of Polish rights under the United Nations General Assembly resolutions of February 12, 1946,² and February 17, 1947,³ or under resolutions contained in the report of the Commission of the European Communities to the Council of Foreign Ministers in 1947,⁴ to the Council of Foreign Ministers.

The actual facts concerning the unwarranted charges against the United States Government that American officials have hindered the repatriation of Poles are as follows:

- 1) United States officials have provided extensive logistical assistance to the Polish Repatriation Mission, including authorizing train travel throughout the United States zone of Germany for vehicle registration and purchase of gasoline from Army supplies, United States post-exchange privileges, and messary privileges for the Chief of Mission.

- 2) No protest has ever been received from the Polish Government.

United States zone of Germany were obstructed by United States national authorities.

3) The record shows that Polish representatives were free to visit International Refugee Organization camps as frequently as they wished, and that these visits often averaged three a week.

4) The Polish Repatriation Mission did not publish a periodical in Germany, but rather imported quantities of magazines and newspapers from Poland. The question of paper allocation and licensing therefore did not arise.

The Polish Government has included in its note various misstatements concerning United States statutes governing military service. The reference to the "law approved on April 13, 1951," was apparently intended to relate to Public Law 51, enacted June 19, 1951.¹ Public Law 51 is essentially a continuation of the Selective Service Act of 1940² under which many thousands of legally admitted aliens fought for the freedom and survival of the allied nations, including Poland.

The Polish Government's statement concerning "displaced persons . . . as reserve manpower" is presumably directed at plans announced by the United States Secretary of the Army for the implementation of the Act of June 30, 1950,³ providing for voluntary enlistment of a limited number of aliens in the Regular Army of the United States. It would seem singularly inappropriate that exception to the law should be taken by the Government of Poland, many of whose present leaders have frequently and recently called attention to the brilliant feats of arms by Generals Kosciuszko,⁴ Pulawski,⁵ E. Bem and Walter,⁷ and whose own national anthem is still the song of Dabroski's⁸ soldiers in Italy.

8. POLISH AND UNITED STATES INFORMATION SERVICES

Statement by the Department of State, August 9, 1951⁹

The Polish Foreign Minister called in the American Ambassador Joseph Flack on August 8 and asked that the activities of the United States Information Service, including distribution of the English and Polish language wireless bulletins, film showings, and library functions, should be terminated as of that date. Since the Polish Government insisted that this was final there was no al to comply with this request.

The United States Government regards this action of Government as an entirely unwarranted interference with the exchange of information between nations, an exchange which the Government is always ready to foster on a fair and reciprocal basis. It is recalled, moreover, how much the Polish people have ever since the United States Information Service was established in Warsaw, the services it performed. There is every reason to believe that these activities in the interest of a better understanding of the peoples will be missed by the Polish nation.

The Polish Ambassador here has been summoned to inform that the Polish Research and Information Service must be closed within 24 hours.

49. POLISH AND UNITED STATES INFORMATION SERVICE

Note From the Secretary of State to the Polish Ambassador in Washington,¹ September 20, 1951²

The Secretary of State presents his compliments to His Excellency the Ambassador of Poland and has the honor to refer to the note which was delivered to the United States Embassy at Warsaw by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs on August 14, 1951.³ This note announced the closing of the Polish Research and Information Service in New York, and also made certain charges against the United States Information Service at Warsaw.

The Government of the United States finds it difficult to believe that the Polish Government can seriously contend that the action of the United States in requesting the closing of the Polish Research and Information Service was a baseless and illegal representation.

The Polish Government will recall that on August 8, 1951, the Polish Foreign Minister received the United States Ambassador in Warsaw and delivered a note⁴ protesting the proposal by the United States Government that the 1931 Treaty of Friendship, Commerce and Consular Rights⁵ be amended by the elimination of Article VI of that treaty. It was at the conclusion of this interview that the Polish Foreign Minister demanded the closing of the United States Information Service office at Warsaw.

It is of interest that the Polish Embassy at Washington, in a release issued on August 10, 1951, also clearly linked the proposal of the proposal to terminate Article VI of the 1931 Treaty of Friendship, Commerce and Consular Rights with the closing of the United States Information Service office at Warsaw.

ne minds and in the intentions of the responsible officers of the Government.

The United States Government is always prepared to encourage on a fair and reciprocal basis, the free exchange of information between nations. It can, however, only regard as hypocritical or naive the attitude of a Government which, having practiced reprisals in the name of legality, then proceeds to denounce as "reprisals" the practice, by another Government, of the principle of reciprocity.

The Polish Government also alleged in its note of August 14, 1951, which, it may be noted, was issued as a press release three days later by the Polish Embassy at Washington, that the closing of the Polish Research and Information Service proves that the United States Government wishes to separate the American people behind an Iron Curtain from all news of the peaceful attitude and activities of the Polish nation.

The facts which are relevant to this allegation must be known to the Polish Government. It is a matter of common knowledge where the Iron Curtain was created and where it is maintained by governments exercising a monopoly of police and political power and claiming to exercise a monopoly over all sources of public information. It is also a matter of common knowledge, reported almost daily in the press of the world, from which direction and from which countries men, women, and children escape, at desperate risk, to join the community of freedom in the Western World.

The extent to which the contents of this note are made known to the people of Poland by the Polish press and radio will provide significant commentary on the location of the Iron Curtain.

The Government of the United States rejects the contention of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs that the activities of the United States Information Service in Poland went beyond the accepted scope of normal activity of a diplomatic mission or were against the interests of peace.

The United States carries on these activities as part of its diplomatic functions in sixty-four nations, where, far from being subjected to police harassment and official impediments, the activities are welcomed by the governments concerned, which in many cases cooperate heartily with the United States Information Service in its work among their people. Only in Communist China, Hungary, Rumania, Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria, and now Poland has the United States Information Service been compelled by governmental action to suspend operations.

The many governments that welcome and cooperate with the United States Information Service are undoubtedly in constant inde-

Bulletin, undertook, among other things, to provide of Poland who desired to be informed, with accurate views expressed and the positions taken by the responsible officials of the United States, in the United States and elsewhere. Not less importantly, the Bulletin contains the views of the duly elected representatives of the United States, and of the responsible journals of fact in the United States.

To allege, as the Ministry of Foreign Affairs endeavors, that the publication of such material is to engage in war and to deny the validity of the open and democratic processes by which public opinion is formed. It is only in this way that the assemblies can function, that the executive authority of the Government can exercise leadership, and that sound and just judgments as expressed in the United Nations, of which Poland is a member, can be formulated.

The fact that these democratic processes involve the expression of views repugnant to those held by the present Government does not conjure them out of existence or render them invalid for war. On the contrary, these views are held by the people and individuals keenly desirous of maintaining international peace and concerned by developments threatening it, and determined to prevent the betrayal of peace by all possible means.

A government which undertakes to deny its people the right to information, the right freely to judge the validity of the views expressed, accordingly assumes the most serious responsibility: to attempt to keep people in ignorance of the facts of the world they live, of the forces at work in it, and the reactions these forces can create, is not to work for peace but for those mistakes and errors that in the past have often led to misunderstandings and wars. History abundantly proves that government which follows the policy of denying their peoples access to all the available information have done so at their own loss.

50. POLISH CHARGES REGARDING ALLEGED ACTIVITIES: Note From the American Embassy to the Polish Foreign Ministry, February 9, 1953¹

The Embassy of the United States of America presents its compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and on instructions from the United States Government has the honor to reject categorically the charges made by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Polish Government.

ment rejects the allegations of the Polish Government that an aircraft belonging to the Armed forces of the United States violated Polish territory on November 4, 1952, and that the United States has organized aggressive "intelligence and subversion" on Polish territory.

The charges are very clearly a part of a larger pattern of accusation made with increasing vehemence during the past few months by a number of governments dominated by a single totalitarian political party. As the Polish Government is well aware, these recent charges have been leveled against Christians and Jews, Communists and former Communists, workers, peasants and intellectuals, and even against many once prominent and trusted officials occupying positions of great power in the very governments which are now making the charges.

The free world, and no doubt many in that part of the world which is not free, has viewed these accusations with profound skepticism and deep disgust, seeing in them the characteristic excesses of men hysterically fearful that they will lose the absolute power which has corrupted them. To the extent, however, that this macabre process of almost daily accusation actually reflects a genuine struggle of men to be free and masters of their own thoughts and souls, the Government and people of the United States cannot be disinterested.

Sympathy and concern for the welfare and aspirations to freedom of peoples of other lands has been a continuing and important feature of American history from the beginning of the United States as an independent country. The names of Pulaski¹ and Kosciuszko,² Kossuth³ and Krzyzanowski,⁴ of Paderewski⁵ and the elder Masaryk, all of whom found haven and support in the United States during their struggles for the freedom of their homelands bear eloquent testimony to the continuing American interest in the liberty and independence of the countries of Central and Eastern Europe.

The Polish Government in its note of January 16 alleges that while the American nation desires peaceful relations with the Polish nation the policy of the Government of the United States is anti-Polish. The absurdity of this contention is apparent to anyone acquainted with the democratic and representative nature of the political institutions of the United States which ensure, contrary to the situation which prevails in totalitarian regimes, the faithful reflection of the popular will in the policies followed by the Government of the United

² Tadeusz Kosciuszko (1746-1817) served in the United States as an engineering officer (1776-1783) before returning to Poland and again resided in the United States. In any event, the question of whether the policy of the United States Government is anti-Polish is one which the United States is happy to leave to the judgment of history, confident that history clearly shows that from its earliest beginnings as an independent country, the United States has always been, and remains, a friend of Poland.

It is also impossible to understand the grounds on which the United States Government bases the fantastic allegation that the United States Government desires to transform Poland into a colony of the United States. It is understandable that under the conditions which prevail in Poland at the present time many citizens of Poland might entertain such fears regarding the possible reduction of Poland to the status of a colony, but it is certainly not on the Government of the United States that responsibility for these unfortunate conditions rests.

A very few years ago both Poland and the United States stood side by side in defense of their national existence against a common powerful enemy. For several years after that war, the United States, through official and unofficial channels, undertook a most varied program of economic assistance to the people of Poland. As part of that assistance, UNRRA,¹ which was financed largely by the United States, delivered to Poland food, clothing, medical supplies, and agricultural supplies in the amount of $477,927,000. This is more than was supplied to any other European country, and represents one-sixth of the total assistance granted to all war-devastated countries throughout the world.

Moreover, it was the Polish Government itself which announced in July 1947 a decision not to participate in the European Recovery Program which offered additional great possibilities for rebuilding war damage in Poland and for raising the standard of living of the hard-pressed Polish people.

In its note of January 16, 1953 the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the United States saw fit to return to the subject of Section 101 of the United States Mutual Security Act of 1951,² and to repeat the basic principle contained in its note[s] of December 19, 1951³ and January 16, 1953. As the Polish Government was informed more than a year ago, Section 101 of the Mutual Security Act is intended to provide assistance to victims of oppression, where such assistance has been determined to contribute to the defense of the North Atlantic area. This is a purely humanitarian program for extending care and aid, and for resettlement to refugees which is now being actively carried out. This legislation is completely consistent with the policy of the United Nations of rendering assistance to people who have been driven from their homelands.

and the murder of a Polish radio announcer, the Government of the United States states categorically that these allegations are groundless and that the Government of Poland must be aware of that fact.

Concerning the further allegation that United States Government information activities have sown hatred toward Poland, it is to be noted that the aim of these activities with respect to Poland is to provide accurate news and commentaries on important developments to the Polish people who, cut off from such information by their own authorities, are naturally eager to be informed by other means. As the Government of the United States observed to the Polish Embassy in Washington in a note of September 20, 1951,¹ history abundantly proves that governments which adopt the policy of denying the peoples access to all the avenues to truth have done so at their own loss.

During the past century and three quarters Poland has several times been partitioned by powerful neighboring states, and at times has been occupied by one of them. During these tragic years of Polish history, no people and no government has had a warmer admiration for the unquenchable Polish love of liberty than the people and Government of the United States, and none has had a firmer faith in the final outcome of the Polish struggle for liberty and national independence.

1. KATYN MASSACRE: Note From the United States Representative to the United Nations² to the Secretary-General,³ February 10, 1953⁴

EXCELLENCY: On September 18, 1951, the House of Representatives of the United States Congress provided for the establishment of a Committee to conduct an investigation and study the facts, evidence and circumstances of the Katyn massacre, committed against thousands of Polish Army officers and civilians during World War II.⁵

The Committee held hearings in the United States, United Kingdom, Germany, and Italy. In the course of its inquiry into the responsibility for the massacre the Committee heard testimony from 8 witnesses, studied 183 exhibits, and studied and received 100 depositions taken from witnesses who could not appear at the hearings. In addition, the Committee staff has questioned more than 200 other individuals who offered to appear as witnesses but whose information was mostly of a corroborative nature. The account of the Committee's inquiry is set forth in the seven volumes entitled "Hearings sets of which I have the honor to transmit with this communication. The findings and conclusions on this phase of the Commission's inquiry are contained in the Interim Report.

I am enclosing 70 copies of the Interim Report¹ with this communication that you transmit a copy of the Interim Report together with a copy of this communication to the Representative of each Member State of the United Nations as a matter pertaining to United Nations action in the field of Human Rights.

It will be noted that the Interim Report contains references to "Hearings" referred to above and enclosed herewith. I am enclosing you to make these volumes available to any Representative of the United States who wish to refer to them.

52. 162d ANNIVERSARY OF THE POLISH CONSTITUTION Statement by the Secretary of State, May 3, 1953

Today [May 3] is the 162d anniversary of the adoption of the Polish Third of May Constitution,³ a step of worldwide significance on the road toward modern, Western democracy. In the year of its independence the Polish Nation celebrated this anniversary with patriotic devotion as the national holiday. In the years of its unhappy bondage the Polish people commemorate the occasion with solemnity, although those in Poland, as we all know, do so only in their hearts and thoughts.

The Polish Nation is rightly proud of its splendid history. It illustrates, as does all history, that no tyranny can suppress the freedom of a nation which truly desires freedom—the freedom of nations as well as freedom of the individual at the heart of American policy. It is the same principle inscribed on their banners—"for our freedom and for the freedom of all Peoples."

On this occasion I send to the Polish people an expression of our warm, friendly sympathy of the American people and of the United States Government. We salute true Poles wherever they may be. We wish them in the hope and faith that the Polish desire for freedom and independence will find the fullest realization.

3. RELIGIOUS PERSECUTION IN POLAND: Statement by the Department of State, September 30, 1953 ¹

In denouncing the arrest and forced retirement of the Primate of Poland, Cardinal Wyszynski, the President expressed the condemnation by the American people of this new act of Communist terrorism against religion.

It is clear to everyone that the outright war on religion conducted by the Polish regime is also an attack on the national traditions of which religion has always been a vital part. The Polish Communists have committed a crime against a true leader of the Polish nation, and the memory of it will never be erased.

The American people are profoundly convinced that the religious persecution now being carried on in Poland will not achieve the purposes intended. We are confident that the religious spirit of man will not be subdued or extinguished and will remain a sustaining force in Poland during the present tragic suffering of the Polish nation.

4. CLOSING OF POLISH CONSULATES GENERAL IN THE UNITED STATES: Note From the Secretary of State to the Polish Ambassador at Washington, ² February 25, 1954 ³

The Secretary of State presents his compliments to His Excellency the Ambassador of the Polish People's Republic and has the honor to inform the Ambassador that the Department of State has reviewed the activities of the Polish Consulates General in the United States. After careful consideration the Department has reached the conclusion that these Consular establishments serve no useful purpose in the conduct of relations between the United States and Poland at the present time. The United States Government, consequently, requests that the Polish Government close its Consulates General at New York, Chicago and Detroit and withdraw the personnel of those offices within a reasonable period for liquidating their affairs.

55. ARREST OF POLISH UNDERGROUND LEADERS

Note From the American Embassy at Moscow to the Foreign Ministry, April 21, 1955¹

The Embassy refers to representations which were made to a United States official² with Premier Stalin at Moscow, then Secretary of State³ with Foreign Minister Molotov at the San Francisco Conference on the United Nations Charter with the arrest of 16 leaders of the Polish Underground by Soviet authorities on March 28, 1945.⁴

It is recalled that the Underground had waged a bitter struggle on the side of the Allies and in the defense of Poland against German aggression and occupation in the Second World War. These men, members of various Polish political parties, had long aroused great concern throughout the world. It may be recalled that the 16 Polish leaders were arrested at a time when the United States Allies were making an effort, in accordance with international discussions,⁵ to have a new Polish Government formed on a democratic basis by the inclusion of Polish leaders from abroad and from the Underground in Poland. In virtue of this interest the United States Government made its inquiries to the Soviet Government in 1945 with a view to obtaining information regarding the arrested men. The United States Government now wishes to raise this matter again.

Certain developments subsequent to this arrest are known to the United States Government. The men were transported from Poland to the Soviet Union and were tried by a Soviet court in June 1945. Most of them were sentenced to long terms in the Soviet Union. Some were re-arrested in Poland and sentenced to imprisonment in Polish jails. The longest Soviet sentence was of ten years, imposed on Major General Okulicki.

The United States Government notes that if General Okulicki's sentence began on the date of his arrest he has now completed his term of imprisonment. Since all of the other sentences were of lesser length it is assumed that none of the originally arrested are now held in Soviet jails.

The United States Government also wishes to point out its continued interest in the fate of these Polish leaders, notwithstanding the lack of information of the whereabouts of several of them and there is even uncertainty as to how many are still alive.

So far as the United States Government is aware the following are the members of the group, in addition to General Okulicki, who have returned to Poland: Jan Stanislaw Jankowski, Stanislaw

56. AMERICAN INFORMATION AND CULTURAL ACTIVITIES IN RUMANIA: Note From the American Legation at Bucharest to the Rumanian Foreign Ministry, April 26, 1950 ¹

The Legation of the United States of America presents its compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and, with reference to the Ministry's note of April 14 ² concerning the information and cultural activities of the American Legation at Bucharest, has the honor to communicate the views of the United States Government as follows.

The nature and tone of the Rumanian Government's response to the inquiries contained in the Legation's note of March 6 ³ are such that the United States Government considers it unnecessary to refer in detail the contentions of the Ministry's note under reference.

The accusations against the United States and its official representatives, by which the Rumanian Government seeks to justify its demand for the cessation of the activities of the United States Information Services in Rumania, would be ludicrous if they were not so serious in their implications for that understanding between peoples which is essential to peace.

Nevertheless, the United States Government takes occasion to state categorically that the Rumanian Government's charges of improper activities on the part of employees of the United States Information Services in alleged conspiracy against the Rumanian Government are completely baseless. Indeed, the United States Government wishes to remind the Rumanian Government that no credence can be placed in purported evidence which it adduces in support these charges as developed in "trials" which the Rumanian manipulated in such a way as to create a false impression of United States Information policies and of the legitimate activities of United States representatives.

The United States Government is confident that the Rumania, no less than the free peoples of the world, will regard the Rumanian Government's allegations as a reflection of its freedom of information. Such fear is reflected in the Rumanian Government's comprehensively restrictive measures which have the effect of cutting off the Rumanian people from contact with the United States and other democratic nations.

The sole aim and practice of the American Legation's Information Office, as with the United States Information Services elsewhere, has been to furnish a channel of information and cultural exchange between the peoples of Rumania and of the United States and to give all elements of the Rumanian population an opportunity for a balanced picture of America which are denied them by the government-controlled press and radio of Rumania and constantly presented to them by Rumanian Government spokesmen.

The United States Government reaffirms its view that information and cultural exchange constitutes a normal and proper function of diplomatic mission which is able to contribute to understanding between peoples. The United States Government, in its international relations as in domestic affairs, staunchly adheres to freedom of information. It believes in the inherent right of individuals and nations to a free flow of information which they may freely judge for themselves.

The Rumanian Government's persistently unfriendly attitude toward the United States and its lack of cooperation in international amity give a hollow tone to its voice in the "peace offensive". Issues of the American Legation's note to which the Ministry's note refers, contain expressions by the President and Secretary of State concerning United States efforts for peace and the constant United States willingness to share in the maintenance of peace. Any government genuinely disposed to foster peace and friendly intercourse among nations will find the United States ready to cooperate in furthering these ends.

American personnel in Rumania, has the honor to inform him as follows:

Effective immediately, members of the Rumanian diplomatic representation in the United States and the Rumanian employees of the Mission, as well as their dependents, may not travel outside of the designated area except by special permission. The limits of the area under reference are fixed at a distance of thirty-five miles from the boundaries of the District of Columbia.

Permission to go beyond the area so described shall be requested in advance of the Department of State according to a prescribed form of which a facsimile is enclosed herewith.¹ Copies of this form may be obtained from the Department upon request. Travel outside of the designated area should not be undertaken prior to receipt by the Legation of authorization from the Department of State.

18. REDUCTION OF UNITED STATES REPRESENTATION IN RUMANIA: Statement by the Acting Secretary of State,² May 2, 1950³

The United States Minister to Rumania, Rudolf E. Schoenfeld, delivered to the Rumanian Minister for Foreign Affairs, Mme. Ana Pauker, on May 22⁴ a note in reply to the Rumanian Government demand of May 13⁵ that the staff of our Legation at Bucharest be reduced to 10 persons.

The United States note refused to admit the propriety of a receiving state (like Rumania) attempting to determine arbitrarily and unilaterally the composition of the diplomatic mission of a state with which it maintains relations. Our reply flatly rejected the pretext on which the Rumanian Government based its demand. However, taking into account the Rumanian Government's evident lack of disposition to further the interests of the two countries in the maintenance of normal diplomatic relations, we indicated our intention to reduce the official personnel of our Legation to conform to the situation created by the arbitrary attitude of the Rumanian Government.

On the occasion of delivering our reply to the Rumanian demand for the reduction of our Legation staff at Bucharest, the United States Minister informed the Rumanian Minister for Foreign Affairs that in view of the severe travel restrictions imposed by the Rumanian authorities upon official American personnel in Rumania, the United States Government has decided to apply similar restrictions to official Rumanian personnel in the United States. The Rumanian Foreign

A note has been delivered to the Rumanian Minister in informing him of the limitations on travel in the United States by the personnel of the Rumanian Legation and of the procedure for obtaining authorization to travel.¹

59. RUMANIAN CHARGES REGARDING ALLEGED SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES: Note From the American Legation at Bucharest to the Rumanian Foreign Ministry, June 20, 1955

The Government of the United States has taken note of the charges in which the Rumanian Government has misrepresented the actions on the part of certain members of the American Legation in the disposal of some obsolete small arms ammunition.² The United States Government has also noted the Rumanian Government's demand in this connection for the recall of Captain Hutsinpillar, Assistant United States Army Attaché at Bucharest.

It is illustrative of the conduct of diplomatic relations between the Rumanian Government that, through its organs of press and propaganda, it should have launched a new virulent attack against the American Legation and the United States Government on the basis of a factually exaggerated and distorted incident, without so much as seeking an explanation through the American diplomatic channels or representatives in Rumania.

It is also characteristic that, after stating on June 9 that the Rumanian Government "would leave it up to the United States Government to decide what to do about Captain Hutsinpillar" and while awaiting the transmission of a reply from the Government of the United States, the Rumanian Ministry of Foreign Affairs should have peremptorily demanded the recall of Captain Hutsinpillar.

The quantity of the ammunition in question was not large and it was disposed of in an open manner which belies assertions that the action had a clandestine or secretive character. The fact that the action placed by the Rumanian Government-controlled press on the intentions of the United States Government and its relations with Rumania in connection with this insignificant incident is patent and obvious.

The United States Government is withdrawing Captain Hutsinpillar. At the same time, it repudiates the alleged justification for the Ministry's demand. The use which the Rumanian Government has made of this episode and the abuse, on this as on other occasions, of the right to declare a foreign official unacceptable, lead to the conclusion that the Rumanian Government not really based upon the incident or upon the conduct of Captain Hutsinpillier but is part of a deliberate and centrally directed policy being carried out throughout Eastern Europe, to interrupt the normal conduct of diplomatic relations between the United States and the states of that area.

10. RUMANIAN-AMERICAN RELATIONS: Statement by the Secretary of State, June 23, 1950 ¹

Over the past 3 years, the Rumanian Government has subjected our diplomatic representation at Bucharest to progressively severe restrictions, impediments, and discourtesies. These not only drastically curtail the performance by our mission of its normal diplomatic and consular functions, but they also violate the existing consular agreement with Rumania ² and effectively deprive our chief of mission of rights and privileges to which he is entitled by his special responsibilities under the Treaty of Peace with Rumania. ³

For a year now, there have been in effect in Rumania travel restrictions which, as administered by the Rumanian authorities virtually confine our representatives to Bucharest and its immediate environs. Theoretically, these restrictions are imposed on all diplomatic personnel. Theoretically also, our people may travel to a few designated places by special permission. This is of little value since the Rumanians as a rule delay unduly or fail to issue travel permits. At the time the travel restrictions were imposed, we were given informal assurance that we had only to ask and we would be permitted to travel to Constanza in connection with incoming shipmen or the Legation. This, like many other such assurances, has proved hollow.

The Rumanian Government has deprived our personnel of premises for which they had rental contracts at destinations where they might be permitted to go. When no other accommodations are available, it is of little use for them to travel there.

Altogether the restrictions and harassments to which our mission in Rumania has been subjected by the Rumanian Government are more comprehensively severe than those of any other country. We do not accept the thesis that we must conduct our relations toward one state and its representatives, regardless of its behavior toward us and our representatives, in the same way as we would toward other states.

The institution on May 25 of the travel-procedure applicable an extreme degree.¹ As the Rumanian Government views our administration of the travel procedure will be carried in view to the current treatment of our representatives in Bucharest.

It is interesting to note that the Rumanian protest regarding the imposition of travel restrictions by a receiving country on the official personnel of a sending country constitutes a limitation of the normal activity of a diplomatic mission. When the Rumanian Government is disposed to remove the restrictions which it has imposed on the travel of our representatives in Rumania, we will be disposed to remove appropriately the restrictions which are presently applied to the personnel of the Rumanian Legation here.

61. RUMANIAN PROTEST AGAINST TRAVEL RESTRICTIONS

Note From the Secretary of State to the Rumanian Government, Washington, ² July 3, 1950³

The Secretary of State presents his compliments to the Minister of Rumania and, with reference to his note of June 19, 1950,⁴ has the honor to respond to the Rumanian Government's protest against regulations which the United States Government has instituted in respect of travel by personnel of the Legation at Washington.

It is of interest to note the Rumanian Government's expression of regret that the imposition of travel restrictions by the United States Government upon the official personnel of a sending government constitutes a limitation of the normal activity of a diplomatic mission. With this view, the United States Government readily agrees.

Restrictions of movement, like restrictions upon the free flow of information and cultural exchange as imposed by the United States Government, are basically distasteful to the American people and the United States Government. Travel regulations applicable to personnel of the Rumanian Legation at Washington have been instituted in view of the reciprocal limitation of diplomatic privilege in view of the effect of travel restrictions as applied by Rumanian authorities to the members of the American Legation at Bucharest.

On the one hand, the Rumanian Government complains that the restrictions on the travel of its Legation personnel tend to limit the diplomatic Mission from carrying on its normal activities. On the other hand, the Government of Rumania alleges that the travel restrictions are applied without discrimination to all foreign diplomatic Missions in Rumania. The inescapable deduction from these facts is that the Rumanian Government is applying the same s applying measures which tend to prevent the performance of normal activities by all diplomatic Missions in Rumania.

Without debating the artificial contention of the Rumanian Government that its travel restrictions are nondiscriminatory, it may be said that the United States Government rejects the thesis that, no matter how obstructive and abnormal the behavior of a particular state toward American interests and official American representatives, the conduct of United States relations with that state must correspond uniformly with the conduct of United States relations with other states.

At such time as the Rumanian Government may be disposed to remove the restrictions which it has placed upon the travel within Rumania of American Legation personnel, especially in performance of the normal functions of a diplomatic Mission, the United States Government will be prepared to alter accordingly the restrictions which presently apply to travel by personnel of the Rumanian Legation within the United States. Meanwhile, as the Rumanian Government has been informed, the travel procedure will be administered with a view to the current treatment in this regard by Rumanian authorities of the United States representatives in Rumania.

2. PLOESTI TRIAL OF FORMER EMPLOYEES OF THE ROMANO-AMERICANA OIL COMPANY: Note From the American Legation at Bucharest to the Rumanian Foreign Ministry, February 20, 1953¹

The Legation of the United States of America presents its compliments to the Rumanian Ministry for Foreign Affairs and under instructions from its Government has the honor to call the Ministry's attention to the "trial" at Ploesti from February 9 to 12, 1953, of various Rumanian citizens, some of whom are former employees of the Romano-Americana Oil Company. Since, in the proceedings in the courtroom during the trial and in the commentaries published in the Rumanian press and broadcast over the official radio, various unfounded allegations and statements were made concerning the American oil companies and former American officials, the following facts are brought to the Rumanian Government's attention.

The Romano-Americana Oil Company was largely owned by citizens of the United States of America who had invested huge sums at great risk in the development of Rumanian petroleum resources. This was one of the important factors which enabled Rumania to obtain the substantial production of 8,600,000 metric tons of crude oil had concluded an armistice¹ with the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Great Britain and the United States of America, representatives of these powers who constituted the Allied Control Commission for Rumania should have been restored to control of property belonging to their citizens. This was a matter of concern both to the Government of the United States and to American citizens directly concerned with the ownership and management of the Romano Americana Oil Company.

The Rumanian Government can have no legitimate complaint regarding any steps taken by American officials and American officers of that company to keep informed about American property and about operation of that company in the years 1945, 1946, and 1947 years in which a state of war still existed between Rumania and the United States of America. American owners had every right to know of the state of production of their company, its activities, personnel, financial status, sales, etc. Moreover, there were at that time no such laws concerning "state secrets" as now exist in Rumania, as substantially all of the information about which such slanderous statements have been made in connection with the Ploesti trial, was openly published in the Monitorul Petrolului Roman. If the Rumanian Government is not already aware of the fact, the Government of the United States takes this opportunity to inform it that all of the so-called espionage information of the type involved in the Ploesti trial is insofar as the American petroleum industry is concerned, freely available in published form in the United States and can thus be openly obtained by the Rumanian Legation in Washington.

It is clear that no "sabotage" could or did take place under the auspices of the managerial staff of the oil companies. The operation of such companies in Rumania after the war were an open book in which all details were known to the three elements (Soviet, British and American) of the Allied Control Commission and to the Rumanian Government. It is true that crude oil production declined after the war and reached its lowest point in 1947. There are two reasons for this, however, neither of which has any connection with falsely alleged "sabotage" by the management of the oil companies.

The first and main reason is military. In November and December 1944 alone, Soviet occupation authorities seized about 48,000 metric tons of tubular goods such as casing, tubing, drill pipe and line pipe. This amount represented sixty (60) percent of the stocks on hand. Stocks left in the country amounted to less than that needed for one year's amount of normal drilling. Furthermore, destruction of railway and tank car equipment as well as other petroleum equipment during the fighting and bombing in 1944 sharply reduced possibilities sixty-eight (68) percent of the total petroleum output and seized exclusively for its own use the majority of available tank cars.

Faced with such a situation, the only way to rebuild the industry out of damages resulting from over-exploitation by the Germans during the war, from military operations, and from Soviet seizures, was investment of large amounts of new capital for repairing existing plant, for replacing lost equipment, and for exploring for new fields. This capital did not exist within Rumania in sufficient quantities, a fact which the present government admits when it claims that large quantities of equipment have been imported since 1948 from the Soviet Union at the price of giving that nation a major share in the ownership and management of the industry through so-called "Sovrom Petroleum" and "Sovrom Utilaj-Petrolifer" corporations. However, in 1945, 1946, and 1947, the only practicable sources of foreign capital were the United States and Great Britain who already had invested so much to give Rumania as large a petroleum industry as it then had.

Instead of encouraging American-owned companies to invest new funds in Rumania where risk was high, the Rumanian Government in connivance with the Soviet authorities in Rumania, after formation of Sovrom Petrol in May 1945, instituted a deliberate policy of harassing the operations of all privately owned enterprises. The Rumanian Government took no steps to assist such enterprises in the importation of desperately needed equipment, it failed to grant realistic prices, it barred, for purely political purposes, financial advances from the National Bank, it levied arbitrary taxes, forced qualified workers to resign, interfered needlessly in the day-to-day conduct of business, and allowed the General Confederation of Labor and the Communist Party to foment pointless strikes. In addition to such harmful practices it soon became painfully obvious that the ultimate intention of the Rumanian Government was to expropriate and nationalize all industrial enterprises except those that were Soviet-owned. When on June 11, 1948 the Rumanian Government did in fact pass legislation for the nationalization of industrial, banking, insurance, mining, transportation and other enterprises, with the exception of those having a Soviet interest, the United States Government pointed out that the legislation, being seriously discriminatory, was expressly prohibited by Article 31 (c) of the Treaty of Peace between Allied and Associated Powers and Rumania signed at Paris on February 10, 1947.¹ It was further pointed out that the nationalization legislation failed to provide for equitable valuation and prompt adequate and effective compensation. In view of the hostile attitude of the Rumanian Government after March 1945 and its obvious intention ment of the oil companies. In fact, as has been shown, were due to seizures of equipment and forced exports of oil to the Soviet Union. The government will have a more explaining why in 1953, when production, according to oil is at the highest level in history, gasoline, oil, and lighting fuels are still rationed in the country, farmers must of hours in line to purchase two liters of kerosene for light at an exorbitant price, and city residents receive only kerosene per month.

The Government of the United States can arrive at no conclusion except that the Government of the Rumanian public has deliberately attempted by the so-called Ploesti the propaganda connected with it to add to its general misrepresentations against the Government and people of States. The American people, including in their midst thousands of Rumanian descent, have always had and continue friendliest feelings for the people of Rumania and the debt to their welfare. They deeply regret that the Government of Rumania does not share that desire and persists in tampering and promoting calumnies and slanders which only aim at the historical friendship between the two peoples.

63. CESSATION OF DISTRIBUTION OF THE ROMANIAN NEWS AND NEWS FROM AMERICA: Note From the Secretary of State to the Rumanian Minister at Washington, December 31, 1953 ²

The Secretary of State presents his compliments to the Minister of Rumania and has the honor to refer to the distribution of publications within the United States at the invitation of the Rumanian Legation. Special reference is made to the bulletin entitled, The Romanian News.

As the Legation is doubtless aware, the Rumanian Government has requested the American Legation at Bucharest to discontinue distribution in Rumania of a periodical issued by the Legation entitled News From America.

Accordingly, the Department of State requests the Rumanian Legation to cease forthwith the publication and distribution in the United States of The Romanian News. The distribution of this publication in the United States by the Rumanian Legation of other similar publications published at the expense of the Rumanian Government should also be terminated.

4. ANTI-SEMITISM IN RUMANIA: Statement by the Deputy Under Secretary of State¹ to a Delegation From the American Jewish Committee, June 3, 1954²

In recent months the Rumanian Communist regime has brought to trial and sentenced to long prison terms scores of Rumanian Jews. Many of these recently sentenced have been held in prison without trial for several years, their only crime being that the regime considered them undesirable. The fate of the victims of this widespread persecution is cause for deep concern on the part of the Department of State as well as the American Jewish Committee.

The conduct of the Rumanian Government in this instance is but one more example of its callous disregard for human rights and fundamental freedoms. In order to instill fear in the hearts of the 50,000 Jews in Rumania that Government has found it necessary to sentence leaders of the Jewish community so that they might be held as hostages. Such conduct is not only in violation of the provisions of the Treaty of Peace with Rumania but also ignores the dictates of justice and humanity.

I am deeply moved by the tragic plight of these unfortunate Jewish leaders and sympathize with the feelings expressed by members of the delegation from the American Jewish Committee.

5. TENTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE COMMUNIST SEIZURE OF POWER: Statement by the Secretary of State, August 23, 1954³

Ten years ago today the Rumanian people, under the leadership of their King and of the heads of the country's democratic parties, freed themselves from Nazi domination and joined the Allies in the final decisive struggle for liberty. In the Royal Proclamation of August 3, 1944, King Mihai I stated that "the new government marks the beginning of an era in which the rights and liberties of all citizens will be respected."

These promising beginnings were halted on March 6, 1945, when the Soviet Government, in violation of its solemn undertaking, intervened in Rumanian affairs and installed the first of a series of puppet governments which have existed in that captive country until today.

The Communist rulers of Rumania have persistently sought to take over this national holiday and make it their own. The gri-political leaders who organized and carried out that and have systematically suppressed all human rights and freedoms.

The travesty which the Communist regime seeks to perpetrate cannot deceive the people of Rumania. Likewise, it shows to the free world to the true significance of this date, or rather, in paying tribute to the fortitude and deep love of liberty of the Rumanian people.

66. RESTRICTIONS ON PHOTOGRAPHY AND SKETCHING

Note From the Secretary of State to the Rumanian Ambassador in Washington, ¹ June 9, 1955 ²

The Secretary of State presents his compliments to the Minister of the Rumanian People's Republic and his staff and to state that the following regulations have been instituted which apply until further notice to photography, sketching, and the making of works of plastic art in the United States by Rumanian personnel and their dependents.

1. Rumanian official personnel and their dependents in the United States may execute works of plastic art, take photographs, make sketches of historical and architectural monuments; the interiors of cultural, educational, and medical institutions; theaters; city, state or national parks; stadiums; and urban and suburban areas in the background of which there are none of the objects listed in points 3a through 3g.

2. Within the premises of economic enterprises and organizations engaged in the manufacture of civilian goods, as well as in educational institutions, Rumanian official personnel and their dependents in the United States may, in individual cases, execute works of plastic art, make sketches, or take photographs provided that they have obtained the permission of the administration of these enterprises and organizations.

3. Rumanian official personnel and their dependents in the United States may not execute works of plastic art, make sketches, or take photographs of the objects listed below. This provision is not applicable in cases where the specified objects are under construction.

- a. Areas where Rumanian official personnel and their dependents do not have free access.

- b. Industrial enterprises of any kind.

- c. Fuel storage depots.

- d. Military objects, installations, technology and armaments.

4. Rumanian official personnel and their dependents may not execute works of plastic art, make sketches, or take photographs from airplanes on flights over territory of the United States.

5. Rumanian official personnel and their dependents in the United States may not purchase or otherwise procure the following items except where such items appear in or are appendices to newspapers, periodicals, technical journals, atlases and books commercially available to the general public:

- a. Aerial photographs, mosaics and photomaps.
- b. Maps and charts of scale of or larger than 1:250,000.
- c. Navigational and hydrographic maps and charts.
- d. Panoramic photographs or detailed development plans of industrial cities.

The foregoing regulations are comparable to present Rumanian regulations restricting the execution of plastic works of art, photography and filming, by United States citizens in Rumania which presumably have been instituted for reasons of security.¹ If the Government of the Rumanian People's Republic should hereafter conclude that the international situation were such that security requirements enabled it to reexamine its regulations restricting the execution of plastic works of art, photography and filming by United States citizens in Rumania and to make available to them materials of the type noted above, the Government of the United States would, in turn, be disposed to reconsider its own security requirements on the same basis.

7. DEATH OF JULIU MANIU: Statement by the Department of State, October 25, 1955²

The circumstances surrounding the press interview last week in which Gheorghe Tatarescu, a former Premier and postwar Foreign Minister of Rumania, told of [Juliu] Maniu's death in prison furnish strong evidence that Maniu's death, frequently reported throughout Europe, is a fact despite lack of official confirmation by the Rumanian Government.

You will recall that in November 1947 Maniu and several other members of the Rumanian National Peasant Party were placed on trial in Bucharest. As Secretary of State Marshall said at that time of this trial, like that of Nikola Petkov in Bulgaria a few months earlier, it was a travesty of justice of which the evident purpose was to eliminate whom he represented for many years, Juliu Maniu won the respect and admiration of his followers and admiration and respect everywhere.

His loss is felt not only by the peoples of Eastern Europe but by the friends of democracy throughout the world.

70. JOINT COMMUNIQUÉ REGARDING ECONOMIC RELATIONS, NOVEMBER 22, 1954¹

Mutually beneficial informal discussions on economic relations have been under way since November 12 between representatives of the Yugoslav and United States Governments, were conducted by

The Yugoslav delegation was under the leadership of Svetozar Vukmanović, Vice President of the Federal Executive Council of the Federal People's Republic of Yugoslavia; Mr. Stanislav Kopčok, Counsellor in the Yugoslav Staff for Foreign Affairs, and Mr. Kiro Gligorov, Deputy Director of the Yugoslav Federal Planning Institute. The Yugoslav Ambassador to the United States, Mr. Leo Mates, also was present.

For the American side, the talks were conducted by William Stassen, Director of the Foreign Operations Administration; Secretary of State Herbert Hoover, Jr.; Deputy Under Secretary of State Robert Murphy; Deputy Assistant Secretary of State Kaijander; and Dr. D. A. Fitzgerald, Foreign Operations Administration Deputy Director.

During the talks, a broad informal exchange of views took place on many aspects of Yugoslavia's economic situation. Particular attention was directed to Yugoslavia's balance of payments, its supply of wheat and raw materials, and its foreign trade. The talks have led to an increased understanding on the part of the representatives of the two countries of their mutual problems. It is anticipated that further consideration of these matters will be carried forward in Belgrade.

1. COMMUNIQUÉ BY THE AMBASSADORS OF THE UNITED STATES, THE UNITED KINGDOM, AND FRANCE AT BELGRADE AND THE YUGOSLAV UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS, JUNE 27, 1955¹

Talks were held in Belgrade from June 24 to 27 between the Yugoslav Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, M. Prica, the Ambassadors of the United States, the United Kingdom and France on the general international situation and questions of direct mutual concern.

These talks were a further step in a series of consultations, individual, or collective, between representatives of the three Western Governments and the Yugoslav Government.

This exchange of views, which took place in an atmosphere of cordiality and mutual confidence, confirmed the wide measure of agreement among the four Governments in their approach to the various international questions under review.

This meeting had special significance in view of the recent most favorable developments in the international situation. The four Governments were agreed that solutions to outstanding problems should be sought by peaceful means and by negotiations based upon full respect for and recognition of the right of all nations to independence, equality, self-defense and collective security in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations. They will continue to promote such solutions.

The four Governments express their firm conviction that the existence of a strong and independent Yugoslavia and continued cooperation between them under conditions of full equality are a contribution to peace and stability. They consider that the fruitful cooperation being developed in all fields in the Balkan alliance² is also an important contribution to peace and stability in this part of the world.

They believe that this method of exchange of views can help to promote an even closer understanding between themselves and can also contribute to a further improvement in the general international situation and to world peace. They are confident that the good relations developed between them in recent years in so many fields will be maintained and further expanded.

2. JOINT COMMUNIQUÉ REGARDING VISIT OF THE DEPUTY UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE TO BELGRADE, OCTOBER

range of problems of mutual interest to Yugoslavia and the United States. As a result, differences of opinion have been ironed out and a clearer understanding of objectives reached. This has been accomplished in a very cordial atmosphere and should establish a solid basis for further cooperation of the two countries. These meetings are evidence of the confidence and mutual respect which have been established between the two countries in recent years.

During his visit Mr. Murphy, accompanied by Ambassador W. J. Riddleberger, had luncheon and two conversations with President Tito and several meetings with Under Secretary of State Arthur W. Prica, Vice President Vukmanović-Tempo, and Minister Gosnjak. Mr. Murphy concluded his conversation with a luncheon on October 1 tendered at the American Embassy by Vice President Kardelj and other high-ranking Yugoslav and American officials.

73. STATEMENT REGARDING VISIT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO YUGOSLAVIA, NOVEMBER 7, 1955

On November 6, 1955, the United States Secretary of State, Foster Dulles, met with the President of the Federal People's Republic of Yugoslavia, Josip Broz-Tito, at Brioni. The President of the Republic entertained the Secretary of State and his party.

Participating in the subsequent talks, held in the spirit of mutual understanding, were the Ambassador to Yugoslavia, W. J. Riddleberger, and the Counselor of the State Department, James MacArthur II, on the American side, and the Vice President of the Federal Executive Council, Edward Kardelj, the State Minister for Foreign Affairs, Koča Popović, and the Secretary General of the President of the Republic, Joza Vilfan, on the Yugoslav side.

Views were exchanged on the international situation and on subjects of mutual interest. The subjects that had been discussed were outlined by the Secretary of State at his press conference.

Agreement was noted on a series of issues, particularly on the possibility and necessity of continued efforts to improve relations and with regard to the further broadening of cooperation between the two countries.

The meeting proved once again the usefulness of direct contacts for a better understanding of the mutual positions and the promoting of the cause of peace and international cooperation under the charter of the United Nations.

Part XIII

NEAR AND MIDDLE EAST, SOUTH ASIA, AND AFRICA

A. BASIC UNITED STATES POLICY

. INCREASING STABILITY AND SECURITY IN THE MIDDLE EAST: Message by the President to the Congress, May 24, 1950 (Excerpt)¹

The countries of the Middle East are, for the most part, less developed industrially than those of Europe. They are, nevertheless, of great importance to the security of the entire free world. The region is a vital link of land, sea, and air communications between Europe, Asia, and Africa. In the free nations of the Middle East lie half of the oil reserves of the world.

No part of the world is more directly exposed to Soviet pressure. The Kremlin has lost no opportunity to stir these troubled waters. The postwar record amply demonstrates. Civil war in Greece; pressure for Turkish concessions on the Dardanelles; sponsorship of the rebellious Tudeh party in Iran; furthering of factional strife in the Arab States and Israel—all reflect a concerted design for the extension of Soviet domination to this vital area.

There is no simple formula for increasing stability and security in the Middle East. With the help of American military and economic assistance, Soviet pressure has already been firmly resisted in Turkey and the Soviet-inspired guerrilla war has been decisively defeated in Greece. But the pressure against the Middle East is unremitting. It can be overcome only by a continued build-up of armed defenses and the fostering of economic development. Only through such measures can these peoples advance toward stability and improvement.

able for other Middle Eastern nations if necessary. I am recommending 125 million dollars in economic aid for Middle Eastern countries, exclusive of Greece and Turkey for whom economic aid is provided as part of the program for Europe. This program includes programs of technical assistance to Libya, Ethiopia, three independent states of Africa whose economic problems are similar to those of the Middle Eastern countries.

Continuing military aid for Greece and Turkey will contribute to the further strengthening of these countries' large and modern armed forces, which have already displayed their value in the fight for freedom in Korea. In Iran, continuing military aid is required to help build internal security and defense, and economic aid to help sustain the Iranian economy and to the much needed longer-term process of economic development to the benefit of the Iranian people.

In the Arab States and Israel, the fundamental regional approach to the basic problems of economic development is urgently needed to reduce existing tensions, especially the orderly settlement of homeless refugees. The program for the Arab States will expand needed food production through development of land and water resources. The program for Israel is that country to maintain her economy during an essential period of her national development. At the same time, the program of assistance to the Arab refugees from Palestine, which extends beyond the coming fiscal year, has the threefold purpose of assisting the settlement of refugees, of strengthening the economies wherein they settle, and assisting both Israel and the Arab States by removing this threat to the peace of the area.

The program I am now proposing is a balanced program for strengthening the security of the Middle East. It will make a contribution to our hopes for peace.

2. SIX MAJOR POLICY ISSUES: Address by the President of the United States Upon His Return From a Tour of the Region.

About 3 weeks ago, the Director for Mutual Security, Stassen, and I and our associates set out, at President Eisenhower's request, on a trip to 12 countries which lie in between Europe and China in Asia. I shall give you country impressions and then our general conclusions.

First, let me say that everywhere we were well received.

As we drove through the streets, the people usually greeted us with friendly smiles and applause. The political leaders talked intimately with us, and we gained new friendships and new understanding which will stand us in good stead for the future. Also in each capital we spoke to all of the United States Foreign Service personnel. They are a fine body of men and women of whom we can be proud.

It is high time that the United States Government paid more attention to the Near East and South Asia, which, until our trip, no United States Secretary of State has ever visited. Our postwar attention has been primarily given to Western Europe. That area is vast and is very important, but not all-important.

It came as a surprising shock when the 450 million Chinese people, whom we had counted as friends, fell under Communist domination. There could be equally dangerous developments in the Near East and South Asia. The situation calls for urgent concern.

The area we visited contains about one-fourth of the world's population. It represents about one-half of the people of the world who are still free of Communist domination.

The Near East possesses great strategic importance as the bridge between Europe, Asia, and Africa. The present masters of the Kremlin, following the lead of past military conquerors, covet this position. In 1940 Soviet leaders specified, in secret negotiations with the Nazis, that Soviet "territorial aspirations center . . . in the direction of the Indian Ocean and . . . the Persian Gulf."¹

This area contains important resources vital to our welfare—oil, manganese, chrome, mica, and other minerals. About 60 percent of the proven oil reserves of the world are in the Near East.

Most important of all, the Near East is the source of three great religions—the Jewish, the Christian, and the Moslem—which have for centuries exerted an immense influence throughout the world. Surely we cannot ignore the fate of the peoples who have first perceived and then passed on to us the great spiritual truths from which our own society derives its inner strength.

EGYPT AND THE SUEZ BASE

Our first stop was in Egypt. There we had 3 days in which to get acquainted with General Naguib, who heads the Government. He is a popular hero, and I could readily see why. He and his associates are determined to provide Egypt with a vigorous government which will truly serve the people. Also, they seek to end the stationing of British troops and exercise of British authority at the Suez base.

Before we arrived in Egypt, a very tense situation had developed between the British and the Egyptian Governments. Conversation

We discussed the situation with General Naguib. The trouble is not so much the presence of British troops. The sides agreed that they should be withdrawn, but the sovereignty over and management of this gigantic base, its depots and its depots of supplies. Experienced administrative and personnel is needed to keep the base in operating efficiency. The provision of this personnel causes difficulty. The matter is of importance which goes beyond Egypt, for the base serves Eastern and indeed Western security.

I am convinced that there is nothing irreconcilable between international concern and Egyptian sovereignty. We are making some success, that there be further time to find a peaceful solution. The United States is prepared to assist in any desired way.

Egypt stands at the threshold of what can be a great new era. If this Suez problem can be satisfactorily solved, I am confident Egypt can find the means to develop its land and lift up its people and add a new bright chapter to a glorious past.

ISRAEL, JERUSALEM, AND REFUGEES

Next we went to Israel. We were impressed by the vigor and porting energy with which the people are building their new nation. Inspired by a great faith, they are now doing an impressive creation. They face hard internal problems, which I believe they will solve. Furthermore, the Prime Minister, Ben Gurion, and Israeli officials asserted convincingly their desire to live at peace with their Arab neighbors.

Jerusalem is divided into armed camps split between Israel and Arab nation of Jordan. The atmosphere is heavy with history. As I gazed on the Mount of Olives, I felt anew that Jerusalem is, indeed, the holy place of the Christian, Moslem, and Jewish faith. This has been repeatedly emphasized by the United Nations.¹ It does not necessarily exclude some political status in Jerusalem for Israel and Jordan. But the world religious community has claims on Jerusalem which take precedence over the political claims of any nation.

Closely huddled around Israel are most of the over 800,000 refugees, who fled from Palestine as the Israelis took over. They mostly exist in makeshift camps, with few facilities either for work, or recreation. Within these camps the inmates suffer spiritually and physically. Even the Grim Reaper offers no respite for as the older die, infants are born to inherit their parents' plight.

Some of these refugees could be settled in the area presently controlled by Israel. Most, however, could more readily be settled and Mr. Stassen and I came back with the impression that they could well be spent in large part on a coordinated use of the rivers which run through the Arab countries and Israel.

JORDAN

Irrigation needs became most vivid as we motored from Jerusalem to Amman, the capital of Jordan. The road goes through the Dead Sea area, a scene of desolation with no sign of life other than the tents of thousands of refugees who survive precariously on the parched land and largely by aid of United Nations doles. Later on, as we flew north, we observed the waters of the Yarmak River, which could perhaps be diverted so as to return some of this vast desert valley into fertile land.

At Amman we dined with the charming and able new King Hus[s]ein and his Government. They are preoccupied with the problem of refugees and of relations with Israel. The inflow of refugees has almost doubled the population, and the long armistice line with Israel gives rise to frequent and dangerous shooting episodes.

SYRIA, LEBANON, IRAQ, AND SAUDI ARABIA

From Jordan we went to Syria. There we were impressed by General Shishakli. He is eager to develop the resources of his country which are substantial. Thus, the living standards of the Syrian people could be raised. This would, in turn, enable them to receive more refugees into a land which relatively is sparsely populated.

From Damascus, the capital of Syria, we motored to Beirut, the capital of Lebanon. The road took us over a mountain range, with refreshing snow in sharp contrast to the heat of the desert plains.

You will recall that Beirut is the home of the American University which has educated many of the Arab leaders of today. President Chamoun of Lebanon talked to us of his high hopes for his country and pointed to the role it might play, representing uniquely a meeting of East and West.

Leaving Lebanon for Iraq, we flew over the Tigris and Euphrate Valleys. This was the site of the Garden of Eden. Under its new ruler, King Faisal—who visited the United States last summer¹—the Government of Iraq is beginning to develop these valleys and restore their former productivity. The revenues from the oil production are being largely directed to this and other construction purposes. Iraq can be, and desires to be, the granary for much of this part of the world.

In Saudi Arabia we were received by King Ibn Saud, one of the

INDIA AND PAKISTAN

We left the Arab area to go first to India and then to Pakistan. These two nations, although independent for less than a decade, already play an influential part in world affairs.

In India I met again with Mr. Nehru, one of the great statesmen of our time. We had long conversations together in the intimate atmosphere of his home. His calm demeanor and lofty idealism impressed me. We reviewed together the international problems which concern both countries, including the problem of a Korean armistice and the situation in Southeast Asia. We did not always agree, but we did clear up misunderstandings and, I felt, gained respect for the interests and respective purposes. India is now supporting the armistice in Korea of the United Nations Command in Korea.

Mr. Stassen and I also obtained a clearer view of the content of India's 5-year program to improve the welfare of the Indian people.

India is the world's largest self-governing nation. It has a 2,000 miles of common boundary with Communist China. The competition occurring between these two countries as to which system of freedom or police-state methods can achieve better progress. This competition affects directly 800 million people in 2 countries. In the long run, the outcome will affect all of us, including ourselves. Our interest fully justifies continuing on a modest scale, some technical assistance and external relations to permit India to go on with its 5-year plan.

Pakistan is the largest of the Moslem nations and occupies a prominent position in the Moslem world. The strong spiritual faith and the spirit of the people make them a dependable bulwark against Communism.

The new Prime Minister, Mohammed Ali, whom we received as Ambassador to Washington,¹ energetically leads the new government. We met with a feeling of warm friendship on the part of the people of Pakistan toward the United States.

A grave and immediate problem is the shortage of wheat. Large imports, widespread famine conditions will ensue. We helped India in a similar emergency.² I believe that United States wheat assistance to Pakistan is essential.

It is not possible to think about United States aid without thinking that these countries cannot afford to waste their strength quarreling with each other and diverting their strength for use against each other.

That thought applies to the dispute between India and Pakistan about Kashmir. It is my impression from my conversations

RAN

It was not practical to include Iran in our schedule. However, we arranged that our Ambassador to Iran¹ should meet us in Pakistan. Iran is now preoccupied with its oil dispute with Great Britain. But still the people and the Government do not want this quarrel to expose them to Communist subversion. They have not forgotten the Soviet occupation of 1941-1946.

The United States will avoid any unwanted interference in the oil dispute. But we can usefully continue technical aid and assistance to this agricultural nation of Iran and in that way perhaps help prevent an economic collapse which would play into the hands of predatory forces.

TURKEY, GREECE, AND LIBYA

After Pakistan, we went to Turkey and Greece. These two countries have clearly demonstrated their intent to stand steadfast against Communist aggression and subversion. Despite their heavy commitments to NATO, both countries have contributed valiantly to the United Nations efforts in Korea.

We, in turn, plan to continue to help Greece and Turkey to grow stronger. They are valiant in spirit and hold a strategic position in Europe and Asia which enables them to help us. While in Greece I dined with the King and Queen and passed on to this charming couple President Eisenhower's invitation that they visit us this fall.

Our last stop before returning to the United States was Libya, the newest member of the family of nations. This country is located at a key spot on the North African coast on the Mediterranean. It has recently become an independent nation by action of the United Nations.³ Libya is cooperating with the United States and the United Kingdom in strengthening its own defenses and those of the Mediterranean area.

Let me turn now to conclusions.

1. Colonialism. Most of the peoples of the Near East and South Asia are deeply concerned about political independence for themselves and others. They are suspicious of the colonial powers. The United States too is suspect because, it is reasoned, our NATO alliance with France and Britain requires us to try to preserve or restore the old colonial interests of our allies.

I am convinced that United States policy has become unnecessarily ambiguous in this matter. The leaders of the countries I visited fully recognize that it would be a disaster if there were any break between the United States and Great Britain and France. They don't want

I emphasize, however, the word "orderly." Let none the Kremlin uses extreme nationalism to bait the trap seeks to capture the dependent peoples.

2. Living Standards. The peoples of the Near East demand better standards of living, and the day is past when tions can be ignored. The task is one primarily for the and the peoples themselves. In some cases they can use able resources, such as oil revenues, to better advantage. however, ways in which the United States can usefully h masses of money but by contributing advanced technics about transport, communication, fertilization, and use irrigation. Mr. Stassen and I feel that money wisely s area under the mutual security program will give th people a good return in terms of better understanding and

3. Arab Good Will. The United States should seek to a resentment against it that has resulted from the creation o the past we had good relations with the Arab peoples educational institutions had built up a feeling of good w American businessmen had won a good reputation in this a was mutual confidence to mutual advantage.

Today the Arab peoples are afraid that the United Sta the new State of Israel in aggressive expansion. They are of Zionism than of communism, and they fear lest the U become the backer of expansionist Zionism.

On the other hand, the Israelis fear that ultimately th try to push them into the sea.

In an effort to calm these contradictory fears the U joined with Britain and France in a Declaration of M which stated that "the three Governments, should they f of these states (of the Near East) was preparing to viol or armistice lines, would, consistently with their obligati bers of the United Nations, immediately take action, both outside the United Nations, to prevent such violat Declaration when made did not reassure the Arabs. It m clear that the present U.S. administration stands fully Declaration. We cannot afford to be distrusted by n could be sturdy friends of freedom. They must not furt ranks of Communist dictators.

The leaders in Israel themselves agreed with us that U policies should be impartial so as to win not only the regard of the Israeli but also of the Arab peoples. W such policies.

Israel should become part of the Near East community and cease to look upon itself, or be looked upon by others, as alien to the community. This is possible. To achieve it will require concessions on the part of both sides. But the gains to both will far outweigh the concessions required to win those gains.

The parties concerned have the primary responsibility of bringing peace to the area. But the United States will not hesitate by every appropriate means to use its influence to promote a step-by-step reduction of tension in the area and the conclusion of ultimate peace.

5. Middle East Defense Organization. A Middle East Defense Organization is a future rather than an immediate possibility. Many of the Arab League countries are so engrossed with their quarrels with Israel or with Great Britain or France that they pay little heed to the menace of Soviet communism. However, there is more concern when the Soviet Union is near. In general, the northern tier of nations shows awareness of the danger.

There is a vague desire to have a collective security system. But no such system can be imposed from without. It should be designed and grow from within out of a sense of common destiny and common danger.

While awaiting the formal creation of a security association, the United States can usefully help strengthen the interrelated defense of those countries which want strength, not as against each other or the West, but to resist the common threat to all free peoples.

6. Friendly Understanding. In conclusion, let me recall that the primary purpose of our trip was to show friendliness and to develop understanding. These peoples we visited are proud peoples who have a great tradition and, I believe, a great future. We in the United States are better off if we respect and honor them, and learn their thoughts and aspirations which move them. It profits nothing merely to be critical of others.

President Eisenhower's administration plans to make friendship—not faultfinding—the basis of its foreign policy. President Eisenhower brought with him from Europe an unprecedented measure of understanding and personal friendships. Before he was inaugurated, he went to Korea.¹ Twice since inauguration, Mr. Stassen and I have been to Europe.² Now we have been to the Near East and South Asia. Later this month, the President's brother, Dr. Milton Eisenhower, and Assistant Secretary of State Cabot will go to South America.³

Thus your Government is establishing the worldwide relationship and gathering the information which will enable us better to serve the American people.

3. PROGRESS IN RESOLVING MAJOR POLITICAL PROBLEMS Address by the Secretary of State, August 26,

One of the first things I did as Secretary of State was to visit the Middle East. I wanted to see for myself that area so rich in history and religious tradition, yet now so torn by strife and bloodshed. In the spring of 1953, I visited Egypt, Israel, Jordan, Syria, Iraq, and Saudi Arabia. Upon my return I spoke of the experiences I gathered on that trip and of the hopes which I held for the future. I held talks with leaders and people there.²

Some of those hopes have become realities. At that time the Suez Base was a center of controversy and of potential strife. The result of patient effort, in a spirit of conciliation, the problem of the Suez Base has been successfully resolved.³

Another problem which was then concerning many in the Middle East was that of the security of the area. That effective defense depended upon collective measures, such measures, to be dependable, needed to be a natural outgrowth of those who felt a sense of common destiny and of what could be a common danger. Here, too, there has been encouraging progress.

A third problem which called for attention was the problem of water to irrigate land. I mentioned in my report the possibility that the rivers flowing through the Jordan Valley might be used to turn the valley a source of livelihood rather than dispute. Since then, Ambassador Eric Johnston has held talks with the governments of the countries through which the River Jordan runs. There has been an encouraging willingness to accept the principle of equitable arrangements for the use of the waters. Plans for the development of the valley are well advanced.⁴ Ambassador Johnston's fourth visit to the countries concerned in an effort to settle the small margins of difference which still exist.

A beginning has been made, as you see, in doing away with the obstacles that stand in the way of the aspirations of the Eastern peoples. It is my hope—and that is the hope which I would now speak—that the time has come when it is possible to speak in terms of further steps toward stability, tranquillity, and progress in the Middle East.

THE ARAB-ISRAEL PROBLEM

What are the principal remaining problems? They are those which were unresolved by the armistice[s] of 1949 which ended the fighting between Israelis and Arabs.¹ Before taking up these problems specifically, I would first pay high tribute to what the United Nations has done to preserve tranquillity and to serve humanity in the area. Despite these indispensable efforts, three problems remain that conspicuously require to be solved.

The first is the tragic plight of the 900,000 refugees who formerly lived in the territory that is now occupied by Israel.

The second is the pall of fear that hangs over the Arab and Israel people alike. The Arab countries fear that Israel will seek by violent means to expand at their expense. The Israelis fear that the Arabs will gradually marshal superior forces to be used to drive them into the sea, and they suffer from the economic measures now taken against them.

The third is the lack of fixed permanent boundaries between Israel and its Arab neighbors.

There are other important problems. But if these three principal problems could be dealt with, then the way would be paved for the solution of others.

These three problems seem capable of solution, and surely there is need.

Border clashes take an almost weekly toll of human lives and inflame an already dangerous mood of hatred. The sufferings of the Arab refugees are drawn out almost beyond the point of endurance. The fears which are at work, on each side, lead to a heavy burden of armament, which constitutes a serious drag on economic and social progress. Responsible leaders are finding it hard to turn their full attention and energies to the positive task of creating conditions of healthy growth.

Serious as the present situation is, there is a danger that, unless it improves, it will get worse. One ill leads to another, and cause and effect are hard to sort out. The atmosphere, if it worsens, could becloud clear judgments, making appear attractive what would in fact be reckless.

Both sides suffer greatly from the present situation, and both are anxious for what they would regard as a just and equitable solution. But neither has been able to find that way.

This may be a situation where mutual friends could serve the common good. This is particularly true since the area may not itself possess all of the ingredients needed for the full and early building of a condition of security and well-being.

The United States, as a friend of both Israelis and Arabs, has given the situation deep and anxious thought and has come to conclusions, the expression of which may help men of good will in the area to fresh constructive efforts. I speak in this manner in the authority of President Eisenhower.

PROPOSED LOAN TO ISRAEL

To end the plight of the 900,000 refugees requiring uprooted people should, through resettlement and—to so far as may be feasible—repatriation, be enabled to restore their dignity and self-respect. To this end, there is need for arable land where refugees can find permanent homes and their own livelihood through their own work. Fortunately, there are technical projects for water development which can make this possible.

All this requires money.

Compensation is due from Israel to the refugees. It may be that Israel cannot, unaided, now make adequate compensation. If so, there might be an international loan to enable Israel to make compensation which is due and which would enable the refugees to find for themselves a better way of life.

President Eisenhower would recommend substantial assistance by the United States in such a loan for such a purpose. He would recommend that the United States contribute to the cost of water development and irrigation projects which would, directly or indirectly, facilitate the resettlement of the refugees.

These projects would, of course, do much more than facilitate the resettlement of refugees. They would enable the people of the area to enjoy a better life. Furthermore, a solution of the refugee problem would help in eliminating the problem of border incidents which have plagued and embittered the people on both sides of the borders.

COLLECTIVE SECURITY MEASURES

The second principal problem which I mentioned is the fear of insecurity. The nature of this fear is such that it is hardly within the power of the countries of the area, acting alone, to replace the feeling of security. There, as in many other areas, security can be achieved only by collective measures which commit decisive action to the deterring of aggression.

President Eisenhower has authorized me to say that, given the nature of the other related problems, he would recommend that the United States join in formal treaty engagements to prevent or deter any effort by either side to alter by force the boundaries of the area.

the burden of what threatens to become an armaments race if indeed it does not become a war; the political leadership of the area could devote itself to constructive tasks.

PROBLEM OF BOUNDARIES

If there is to be a guaranty of borders, it would be normal that there should be prior agreement upon what the borders are. That is the third major problem. The existing lines separating Israel and the Arab States were fixed by the armistice agreements of 1949. They were not designed to be permanent frontiers in every respect; in particular, at least, they reflected the status of the fighting at the moment.

The task of drawing permanent boundaries is admittedly one of difficulty. There is no single and sure guide, for each of two conflicting claims may seem to have merit. The difficulty is increased by the fact that even territory which is barren has acquired a sentimental significance. Surely the overall advantages of the measures here outlined would outweigh vastly any net disadvantages of the adjustments needed to convert armistice lines of danger into boundaries of safety. In spite of conflicting claims and sentiments, I believe it is possible to find a way of reconciling the vital interests of all the parties. The United States would be willing to help in the search for a solution if the parties to the dispute should desire.

If agreement can be reached on these basic problems of refugees, war, and boundaries, it should prove possible to find solutions for other questions, largely economic, which presently fan the flames of hostility and resentment.

It should also be possible to reach agreement on the status of Jerusalem. The United States would give its support to a United Nations review of this problem.

I have not attempted to enumerate all the issues on which it would be desirable to have a settlement; nor have I tried to outline in detail the form which a settlement of any of the elements might take. I have tried to show that possibilities exist for an immeasurable improvement and that the possibilities do not require any national making action which would be against its interests, whether those interests be measured in terms of material strength or in terms of national prestige and honor. I have also, I trust, made clear that the Government of the United States is disposed to enlarge those possibilities by contributions of its own, if this be desired by those concerned.

Both sides in this strife have a noble past, a heritage of rich contributions to civilization: both have fostered progress in science and neighbor brings rich rewards to the people and to the world. In doing that involves some burdens, they are burdens which all States would share, just as we would share the satisfaction which would result to all peoples if happiness, contentment, and peace could drive hatred and misery away from peoples whom we hold in high respect and honor.

B. DEFENSE ARRANGEMENTS AND FACILITIES

Middle East Command Negotiations

4. PROPOSALS PRESENTED TO THE GOVERNMENT OF EGYPT BY THE GOVERNMENTS OF THE UNITED STATES, THE UNITED KINGDOM, FRANCE, AND TURKEY, 13, 1951¹

DOCUMENT A

POINT I

Egypt belongs to the free world and in consequence her defense that of the Middle East in general is equally vital to other nations.

POINT II

The defense of Egypt and of other countries in the Middle East against aggression from without can only be secured by the participation of all interested powers.

POINT III

The defense of Egypt can only be assured through the defense of the Middle East area and the coordination of its defense with that of adjacent areas.

POINT IV

It therefore seems desirable to establish an Allied Middle East Command in which the countries able and willing to contribute to the defense of the area should participate. France, the United Kingdom, the United States, and Turkey are the only countries which are able and willing to contribute to the defense of the area.

POINT V

Egypt is invited to participate as a founder member of the Middle East Command on a basis of equality and partnership with other founder members.

POINT VI

If Egypt is prepared to cooperate fully in the Allied Command Organization in accordance with the provisions of the attached annex, His Majesty's Government for their part would be willing to agree to supersession of the 1936 Treaty¹ and would also be willing to agree to withdraw from Egypt such British forces as are not allocated to the Allied Middle East Command by agreement between the Egyptian Government and the Governments of other countries also participating as founder members.

POINT VII

As regards armed forces to be placed at the disposal of the Allied Middle East Command and the provision to that Command of the necessary strategic defense facilities, such as military and air base communications, ports, etc., Egypt will be expected to make her contribution on the same footing as other participating powers.

POINT VIII

In keeping with the spirit of these arrangements Egypt would be invited to accept a position of high authority and responsibility within the Allied Middle East Command and to designate Egyptian officers for integration in the Allied Middle East Command Headquarters staff.

POINT IX

Facilities to train and equip her forces will be given to Egypt by those participating members of the Allied Command in a position to do so.

POINT X

The detailed organization of the Allied Middle East Defense Organization and its exact relationship with the N.A.T.O. have yet to be worked out in consultation between all the powers concerned. For this purpose it is proposed that all founding members of the Allied Middle East Command should send military representatives to a meeting to be held in the near future with the object of preparing detailed proposals for submission to the governments concerned.

defense of the Middle East

(b) that she will undertake to grant forces of the East Command all necessary facilities and assistance in war, imminent menace of war, or apprehended emergency including the use of Egyptian ports, airfields and communication.

[2]

We should also hope that Egypt would agree to the A Commander's Headquarters being located in her territory.

[3]

In keeping with the spirit of these arrangements, it was understood

(a) that the present British base in Egypt would be handed over to the Egyptians on the understanding that it would simultaneously become an Allied base within the Allied Command with full Egyptian participation in the running of the base in peace and war

(b) that the strength of the Allied force of participation to be stationed in Egypt in peacetime would be determined by the participating nations including Egypt from time to time as it is made in building up the force of the Allied Middle East Command.

It also would be understood that an air defense organization including both the Egyptian and Allied forces would be set up under the command of an officer with joint responsibility to the Egyptian Government and to the Allied Middle East Command for the defense of Egypt and Allied bases.

5. REJECTION BY EGYPT OF THE JOINT PROPOSALS presented by the Secretary of State, October 17, 1951

It is with genuine regret that the U. S. Government records the rejection on October 15² of the rejection by the Egyptian Government of the proposals presented to it on October 13 by the United States, France, Turkey, and the United Kingdom.³ This Government noted with surprise that the Egyptian Government rejected proposals of such importance without having given them the careful consideration and deliberation which they merited. These proposals were formulated by the nations interested in the welfare and stability of the Middle East after the most intensive and thorough consultation.

the special problems of the area. The invitation to join with the other sovereign nations of the free world in a joint and cooperative effort to make the world safe from aggression was wholly consistent with the independence and sovereignty of Egypt.

Vigilance in protecting the liberties we enjoy is the responsibility of every nation of the free world. The spirit of responsibility to others requires that no nation carelessly precipitate events which can have no constructive end but which by their nature create those elements of confusion and weakness which tempt aggression. It is the hope of the U. S. Government that Egypt will carefully reconsider the course of action on which it has embarked and will recognize that its own interest will be served by joining the other nations of the free world in assuring the defense of the Middle East against the common danger.

The U. S. Government must reaffirm its belief that the action of the Egyptian Government with respect to the Anglo-Egyptian Treaty of 1936¹ and the agreements of 1899² regarding the Sudan is not in accord with proper respect for international obligations. For its part the U. S. Government considers the action of the Egyptian Government to be without validity.

It is the sincere hope of the United States that great restraint will be shown in the present situation and that the obligation of all nations towards the preservation of world law and order will be respected.

. GUIDING PRINCIPLES OF THE PROPOSED MIDDLE EAST COMMAND: Statement by the Governments of the United States, the United Kingdom, France, and Turkey, November 10, 1951³

In proceeding with their announced intention to establish the Middle East Command, the Governments of the United States, United Kingdom, France, and Turkey state that they are guided by the following principles:

1. The United Nations is a world response to the principle that peace is indivisible and that the security of all states is jeopardized by breaches of the peace anywhere; at the same time it is incumbent upon the states of any area to be willing and able to undertake their initial defense of their area.

2. The defense of the Middle East is vital to the free world and its defense against outside aggression can be secured only by the cooperation of all interested states.

4. A function of the Middle East Command will be to support the states willing to join in the defense of the Middle East and to develop the capacity of each to play its proper part in the defense of the area as a whole against outside aggression. The Command will not interfere in problems and disputes arising within the area. The establishment of the Middle East Command in no way affects the arrangements relating to such matters, notably the armistices¹ and the United States-United Kingdom-French Declaration of May 1950.²

5. The task of the Middle East Command at the outset will be primarily one of planning and providing the Middle East states with their request with assistance in the form of advice and information. Requests for arms and equipment made by states in the area to join in its defense to sponsoring states in a position to supply them in connection will be filled by them to the extent possible for the sake of coordination of such requests through the Middle East Command.

6. The Supreme Allied Commander Middle East will have command of the forces placed at his disposal and will develop plans for the use of all forces within the area (or to be introduced into the area) in time of war or international emergency. However, the command of forces under the command of the Supreme Allied Commander Middle East in peacetime is not a prerequisite for joining in the defense of the Middle East. Movement of forces placed under the command of the Supreme Allied Commander Middle East to or within the territories of states joining in the defense of the Middle East will be made only with the agreement of the states concerned and in full accord with their national interests and sovereignty.

7. While details have yet to be formulated, the sponsors intend that the Middle East Command should be an international command, not a national command. The responsibility for the defense of the Middle East will be to insure the success of the corporate defense enterprise represented by the Middle East Command. All states joining in this enterprise will be individually responsible to the command on the basis of equality through a Middle East Defense Liaison Organization which will be located at the Middle East Command Headquarters and will be the link between the command and the countries ready to join in the defense of this area.

8. Any facilities granted to the Middle East Command by states joining in the defense of the Middle East will be the subject of separate agreements.

9. The broad mission of the Middle East Command will be of a co-operative character make it necessary that all States, with the exception of the Soviet Union, should be invited to join in the defense of the Middle East.

capacity for defense in a vitally important area so that the peacetime role of the states of the area in Middle East defense will progressively increase, thus permitting the peacetime role of states not territorially part of the Middle East to be decreased proportionately.

11. The sponsoring states of the Middle East Command do not regard the initial form in which the Middle East Command will be organized as unchangeable; they believe that the Middle East Command through mutual understanding should evolve in the manner which will enable it most effectively to provide for the defense of the Middle East area as a whole.

V. REPLY TO SOVIET OBJECTIONS TO THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A MIDDLE EAST COMMAND: Note From the American Embassy at Moscow to the Soviet Ministry of Foreign Affairs, December 18, 1951¹

The Government of the United States has given careful consideration to the note of the Government of the U.S.S.R. of November 24² concerning the proposed establishment of the Middle East Command.

It is apparent that the Soviet Union has placed a completely erroneous interpretation upon the Middle East Command and has chosen to ignore the clearly-stated purposes and principles upon which the Middle East Command will be founded.

The allegation of the Soviet Union that the Middle East Command is aggressive in intent is utterly without foundation. On the contrary, the statement of principles published by the United Kingdom, France, Turkey, and the United States on November 10³ make abundantly clear that the Middle East Command is designed (1) to create a voluntary cooperative defense organization to provide for the security of the Middle East area as a whole in the event that the area should become a target of outside aggression, and (2) to assist the states in the area to preserve and strengthen their independence and freedom so that their economic well-being and social institutions can develop in an atmosphere unclouded by fear for their security.

The Middle East Command proposals and principles are based upon the inherent right of self-defense set forth in article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations. Such self-defense is facilitated by cooperative measures like the Middle East Command. The need for these cooperative measures arises from the concern over present that the idea that any threat exists to the Middle East is "absolutely groundless." The United States Government and the Soviet Government that on November 25, 1940, a U. S. S. R. People's Commissar for Foreign Affairs and German Ambassador Schulenburg to reach agreement with the Government of Germany on the delimitation of the spheres of influence between the Axis Powers and the U. S. S. R. provided, among other things, that the U. S. S. R. be enabled to establish "a base for air and naval forces" within range of the Turkish Straits and the area south of Batum and of Baku in the general direction of the Persian Gulf is recognized as the center of the aspirations of the Soviet Union."¹ In light of the Soviet attitude toward the Middle East area since the end of World War II, the United States Government can only assume that the aims set forth by Mr. Schulenburg in 1940 remain the policy of the Soviet Government.

With respect to the Soviet allegation that the sponsors of the Middle East Command intend to convert the Middle East into a sphere of influence with a view to occupying the states in the area and interfering in their internal affairs, the principles submitted to the United Nations on November 10 make it clear that (a) the Middle East Command will not interfere in matters arising within the area, (b) the movement of Middle East Command forces to or within the area, and (c) of the Middle East states will be made only with the consent of the state or states concerned in full accord with their national independence and sovereignty; and (c) that facilities granted to the Middle East Command will likewise be the subject of special agreements.

The United States and other members of the NATO have repeatedly been exposed to the purely propagandistic charge from the Soviet Union that the NATO is aggressive. That this charge is a complete distortion of the facts is made clear by the terms of the Treaty,² which was taken under it, and by the foreign policies of the member states. Devoted to the cause of peace, the members believe that the best way to serve this cause by their just determination to defend themselves against aggression. The United States wishes to make it clear to the Soviet Union that neither the NATO nor the Middle East Command is aggressive in intent. As is well known to the United States and to the Governments satellite to it, there has been no aggression whatsoever originating from the countries who are members of these organizations. Furthermore, there will not be any aggression in the future, for, the Soviet reference to "the aggressive Atlantic Blockade" is again rejected as being without any foundation whatsoever.

governments of the sovereign and independent Middle East states for their study and evaluation in the light of their own national interests. The decision as to whether they will elect to participate in the Command and freely accept the benefits and responsibilities of such participation belongs to these states alone and not to the Soviet Government. The recent Soviet threats to these states warning against their participation in the Middle East Command constitute interference in the affairs of these countries. The United States Government believes, as the Soviet Government professes to do, that the peoples of the Middle East have the right to conduct their national policies "free from any kind of external pressure." The Government of the U.S.S.R. bears the responsibility for the present situation, not those states which, either individually or collectively under the Charter of the United Nations, take legitimate measures of self-defense in the interest of their own security and of international peace.

8. PRELIMINARY ASSOCIATION WITH NATO: Note Verbal From the Secretary of State to the Turkish Ambassador at Washington, September 19, 1950 ¹

In connection with the examination of security problems confronting the Fifth Session of the North Atlantic Council,² it was recognized that, in the case of the Mediterranean area, it would be desirable, if the Turkish Government so wished, to make arrangements which would permit Turkey to be associated with such appropriate phases of the military planning work of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization as are concerned with the defense of the Mediterranean.

The Council is keenly aware of the active support which Turkey, as a member of the United Nations, has accorded the principles of the United Nations and of the important role which Turkey is playing in the maintenance of the stability of the eastern Mediterranean area.

It is the view of the Council that association of the Turkish Government with the appropriate phase of the planning work of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization with regard to the defense of the

Article IV

The present Agreement will come into force from the date on which it is signed and will remain in effect during the period of the validity

The Governments of the United States and Turkey with their mutual satisfaction as a result of the visit of Prime Minister Adnan Menderes to Washington. It has provided a valuable opportunity for the Turkish Prime Minister to discuss those matters of common interest to the two countries with President Eisenhower, Secretary of State Dulles, Secretary of Defense Wilson, FOA Director Stassen, and other high ranking United States officials.

During his visit the Prime Minister also met with members of Congress who are active in committees concerned with foreign affairs. In such meetings Mr. Menderes engaged in a frank exchange of views and opinions relative to the common goals and interests of the two countries.

Further, the visit afforded an occasion for the Prime Minister to place before the United States Government a clear and firm statement of Turkish policy to act as a convinced and determined member of NATO, to develop closer political and military ties with friendly nations in the free world, in and out of NATO, and to support the mutual efforts of the United States and other free nations to organize for world security.

The official visit has also provided another opportunity for the United States Government to reaffirm its recognition of Turkey's position. Turkey has assumed a defense posture which includes a large armed force and which places a heavy strain upon the resources of the country and people and that substantial assistance from the United States and from other free nations who are in a position to provide such assistance is necessary in order to permit the attainment of common objectives for a collective defense. In this direction the United States Government intends to continue to base its program of military assistance to the Republic of Turkey toward meeting the requirements of the NATO-approved Turkish force goals. In order to enable Turkey to meet the requirements of her armed forces under the above program during the coming year, the United States Government has taken the action of Congress and a review of commitments and is disposed to increase its presently approved military assistance program. The United States Government is further accelerating deliveries of items in the present pipeline of roughly $1 billion dollars of military equipment presently approved and programmed for Turkey.

In recognition of the fact that the support and maintenance of a large defense force will place a strain upon the Turkish economy which it cannot presently bear without external assistance, the United States further recognizes the fact that it is in our common interest that Turkey be placed in a position where it can support the maintenance of its military establishment and its economy through its own the shortest possible time, the United States Executive Branch has requested the Congress for funds which would permit the furnishing of economic assistance to Turkey during the coming fiscal year.¹ Although it is impossible for the United States Government to make any commitments as to its intentions with respect to the furnishing of military or economic support assistance beyond Fiscal Year 1955, it has been agreed with the Republic of Turkey to continue the appraisal of Turkey's possible future needs and of the measures which may have to be taken by the Government of Turkey and the Government of the United States in the attainment of their common objective.

Mutual Defense Assistance Arrangements With Pakistan

1. COLLECTIVE SECURITY IN THE MIDDLE EAST: Statement by the Department of State, February 19, 1954²

The U. S. Government warmly welcomes the announced intention of the Governments of Turkey and Pakistan "to study methods of achieving closer friendly collaboration in the political, economic, and cultural spheres as well as of strengthening peace and security in the area in their own interest as also in that of all peace-loving nations."³ This forward-looking step should provide increased assurances that these and other countries in the area will be able to maintain the independence and sovereignty they so highly prize. No nation standing alone can obtain adequate security at bearable cost. This principle has already been accepted and applied throughout most of the free nations of Europe, North and South America, and the Western Pacific.

The Secretary of State reported last spring on his return from a trip through the Near East and South Asia that he found certain countries of the area concerned at the dangers which threatened them and others in the free world.⁴ He also reported that he found some desire for a collective security system in the area, but emphasized that such a system should be designed and grow from within out of a sense of common destiny and common danger. It is evident that the proposal of these two Governments is of this character and constitutes a constructive step toward broadening the base of the collective strength of the free world.

12. DEFENSIVE PURPOSE OF UNITED STATES MILITARY AID:

Message From the President of the United States to the Prime Minister of India, February 24, 1954¹

DEAR MR. PRIME MINISTER: I send you this personal message because I want you to know about my decision to extend military aid to Pakistan before it is public knowledge and also because I want you to know directly from me that this step does not in any way affect the friendship we feel for India. Quite the contrary. We will continually strive to strengthen the warm and enduring friendship between our two countries.

Our two Governments have agreed that our desires for peace are in accord. It has also been understood that if our interpretation of existing circumstances and our belief in how to achieve our goals differ, it is the right and duty of sovereign nations to make their own decisions. Having studied long and carefully the problem of opposing possible aggression in the Middle East, I believe that consultation between Pakistan and Turkey about security problems will serve the interests not only of Pakistan and Turkey but also of the whole free world.² Improvement in Pakistan's defensive capability will also serve these interests and it is for this reason that our aid will be given. This Government's views on this subject are elaborated in a public statement I will release, a copy of which Ambassador Allen will give you.³

What we are proposing to do, and what Pakistan is agreeing to, is not directed in any way against India. And I am confirming publicly that if our aid to any country, including Pakistan, is misused and directed against another in aggression I will undertake immediately in accordance with my constitutional authority, appropriate action both within and without the UN to thwart such aggression. I believe that the Pakistan-Turkey collaboration agreement⁴ which is being discussed is sound evidence of the defensive purposes which both countries have in mind.

I know that you and your Government are keenly aware of the need for economic progress as a prime requisite for stability and strength. This Government has extended assistance to India in recognition of this fact, and I am recommending to Congress a continuation of economic and technical aid for this reason. We also believe it in the interest of the free world that India have a strong military defense capability and have admired the effective way your Government has administered your military establishment. If your Government should conclude that circumstances require military aid of a type contemplated by our mutual security legislation, please

I regret that there has been such widespread and unfounded speculation on this subject. Now that the facts are known, I hope that the real import of our decision will be understood.

3. INCREASING THE DEFENSE POTENTIAL OF PAKISTAN

Statement by the President, February 25, 1954¹

On February 19th, Turkey and Pakistan announced their intention to study methods of achieving closer collaboration on various matters including means designed towards strengthening peace and security. This Government welcomed this move and called it a constructive step towards better ensuring the security of the whole area of the Middle East. The Government of Pakistan has now asked the United States to grant military assistance.

I have said repeatedly that regional groupings to ensure security against aggression constitute the most effective means to assure survival and progress. No nation can stand alone today. My report to the Congress on June 30, 1953 stated that we should strengthen efforts towards regional political, military and economic integration, therefore, under the authority granted by the Congress, am glad to comply with Pakistan's request, subject to the negotiation of the required MDAP agreement.

This Government has been gravely concerned over the weakness of defensive capabilities in the Middle East. It was for the purpose of helping to increase the defense potential in this area that Congress in its last session appropriated funds to be used to assist those nations in the area which desired such assistance, which would pledge the willingness to promote international peace and security within the framework of the United Nations, and which would take effective collective measures to prevent and remove threats to peace.³

Let me make it clear that we shall be guided by the stated purposes and requirements of the mutual security legislation. Those include specifically the provision that equipment, materials or services provided will be used solely to maintain the recipient country's internal security and for its legitimate self defense, or to permit it to participate in the defense of the area of which it is a part. Any recipient country also must undertake that it will not engage in any act of aggression against any other nation.⁴ These undertakings afford adequate assurance to all nations, regardless of their political orientation and whatever their international policies may be that the arms th tional authority, appropriate action both within and without to thwart such aggression. I would also consult with the on further steps.

The United States earnestly desires that there be increase and strength in the Middle East, as it has desired this for other parts of the free world. It believes that the aspirations of the peoples in this area for maintaining and developing their freedom and for realizing the social advances close to their hearts are best served by strength to deter aggression and to reduce aggression. The United States is prepared to help in this if its help is wanted.

14. MUTUAL DEFENSE ASSISTANCE AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND PAKISTAN, MAY 1951

The Government of the United States of America and the Government of Pakistan, Desiring to foster international peace and security within the framework of the work of the Charter of the United Nations through measures which will further the ability of nations dedicated to the purposes and principles of the Charter to participate effectively in arrangements for individual and collective self-defence in support of those purposes and principles;

Reaffirming their determination to give their full co-operation in the efforts to provide the United Nations with armed forces authorized and contemplated by the Charter and to participate in United Nations collective defence arrangements and measures, and to obtain agreement to a universal regulation and reduction of armaments under the auspices of a guarantee against violation or evasion;

Taking into consideration the support which the Government of the United States has brought to these principles by enacting the Mutual Defence Assistance Act of 1949, as amended,² and the Mutual Security Act of 1951, as amended;³

Desiring to set forth the conditions which will govern the terms of such assistance;

Have agreed:

Tax relief will be accorded to all expenditures incurred by or on behalf of, the Government of the United States for its defence effort, including expenditures for any foreign aid program of the United States. 15. DEFENSE SUPPORT AID TO PAKISTAN: Communiqué of the Governments of the United States and Pakistan, October 1954¹

As the visit to Washington of Prime Minister Mohammed Ali Jinnah of Pakistan draws to a close, the Government of the United States and the Government of Pakistan consider it fitting to reaffirm their common purpose in striving to assure peace and economic security for their peoples. They are convinced that those objectives can be attained through measures of collective security, self-help, and economic cooperation. At the same time, they share a common conviction that their goals can be attained only where fundamental human values are permitted to flourish.

The Prime Minister and cabinet members accompanying him had discussions of problems of mutual interest with a number of high-ranking officials of the United States, including President Eisenhower, Secretary of State Dulles, Secretary of Defense McNamara, and Foreign Operations Administration Director Stassen.

The discussions were preceded and have been accompanied by the earnest efforts within the United States Government to take such measures which the United States might take to strengthen its friendship, bearing in mind Pakistan's special position in the Middle East and South Asia, its unreserved friendship and cooperation with the United States in its efforts for the security of the free world, and its economic problems with which Pakistan is at present faced.

With the report of the special FOA mission sent to Pakistan last summer under the leadership of Mr. H. J. Heinz II, it became clear that, despite its own tremendous efforts, Pakistan was in urgent need of increased economic assistance to ameliorate shortages of food, goods and industrial raw materials, and that economic development programs must be increased if economic stability were to be attained. Accordingly, it has been agreed that the United States Government to the disaster of last August in East Pakistan, and funds for developmental purposes. To meet Pakistan's urgent needs for consumer goods and industrial raw materials, the total figure also includes a substantial amount in the form of agricultural commodities.

Recognizing Pakistan's position in the common defense effort and following the military assistance agreement signed with the United States this spring,¹ the United States will endeavor to accelerate the substantial military aid programs for Pakistan, which are beginning this year. In this connection, the United States cannot make commitments beyond the limits of existing and current appropriation. However, the Government of the United States and the Government of Pakistan intend to continue to study together in this and future years the best means of achieving their mutual objective: the strengthening of the economy and the defense capabilities of Pakistan.

19. CONCLUSION OF THE ANGLO-EGYPTIAN SUEZ CANAL BASE AGREEMENT: Statement by the Secretary of State, 1954¹

The signing of the final agreement between Egypt and the United Kingdom on the Suez Base is an event of far-reaching importance. It is an occasion for renewed congratulations to both countries.

This action, following the initialing of the agreement last July,² marks the successful resolution of a problem which has existed in some form for many years. Its solution has been brought about by the development of a spirit of mutual confidence between the two countries which augurs well for their future relations.

I believe that the removal of this deterrent to closer cooperation will open a new approach to peaceful relations between the Middle Eastern states and other nations of the free world. It is my hope that this cooperation may now develop fully to the mutual benefit of all concerned and will strengthen the stability and security of the area.

Egypt now assumes new and fuller responsibilities as the base in the Suez Canal Zone passes from British to Egyptian control. I am pleased to note that in accepting these responsibilities, the Egyptian Government has reiterated in the agreement its adherence to the principle of the freedom of transit through the Canal in conformity with the 1954 convention.³

22. HIGH ASWAN DAM PROJECT: Statement by the Secretary of State, December 17, 1955 ²

Mr. Abdel Moneim El Kaissouni, Egyptian Minister of Economic Affairs, met yesterday with Acting Secretary of State Herbert Brownell, British Ambassador Sir Roger Makins and World Bank President Eugene Black for final talks before his departure for Cairo.

During their stay in Washington, Mr. Kaissouni and his staff have been carrying on discussions with the management of the World Bank and representatives of the United States and United Kingdom Governments concerning possible assistance in the execution of the High Aswan Dam project.

The United States and British Governments assured the Egyptian Government through Mr. Kaissouni of their support in the project, which would be of inestimable importance in the development of the Egyptian economy and in the improvement of the welfare of the Egyptian people. Such assistance would take the form of a loan from the United States and the United Kingdom toward the payment of foreign exchange costs of the first stages of the work. These stages, involving the Cofferdam, foundations for the main dam, and the approach work will take from four to five years. Further, assurance was given to Mr. Kaissouni that the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom would, subject to legislative action, be prepared to consider sympathetically in the light of then existing circumstances further support toward financing the later stages to supplement World Bank financing.

Mr. Kaissouni plans to leave Washington for Egypt today. It is understood that he will report to his Government on his discussions. Final understandings with the British and American Governments and the World Bank will await Mr. Kaissouni's consultation with the Egyptian Government.

3. JORDAN RIVER DEVELOPMENT: Address by the Person Representative of the President (Eric Johnston), December 1953 ¹

From time immemorial, the Biblical waters of the Jordan have tumbled down the towering slopes of Mount Hermon in the Lebanon, poured in the Sea of Galilee, and rolled swiftly south to waste themselves in the salt depths of the Dead Sea.

The Jordan is a short silt-laden stream, plunging for most of its 200 miles through earth's deepest valley, a thousand feet below the level of the sea.

It is one of mankind's most beloved streams. It flows through the very heartlands of three great religions as consistently as it moves across the barren geography that confines its downward course.

From the banks of the Jordan, the ancient Israelites, wearied by years of wandering in the desert, first glimpsed the Promised Land. In its turbid waters, Jesus Christ was baptized by John. Along its winding course, the Prophet Mohammed preached the word of Allah.

Yes, the River Jordan has enriched history and song but, unhappily, not the arid lands through which it flows. These noble waters have held spiritual significance for man down through the ages, but they have given him relatively little material benefit.

And because the life-giving blessings of these waters are so sorely needed by the suffering peoples who today inhabit this hallowed and historic region, the President of the United States, only this October, commissioned me to go there bearing a proposal—a proposal intended ultimately to make the valley of the Jordan blossom and bloom as it never has before.

When the President first asked me to undertake this mission, I suggested in my stead other Americans who, I felt, were better acquainted with the area and the situation there. But finally, with many misgivings, I followed the wishes of the President and set out for Syria, Jordan, Lebanon, and Israel.

I got no farther than Paris when word was received of new incidents and charges which inflamed the tensions between Arabs and Israelis and soon became the subject of United Nations Security Council discussions.

My first reaction—and I must say I did not have a second one until I had spoken with some of the leaders in the Near East—was that whatever little chance the mission had of succeeding in the first place was now almost gone.

It was not long, however, before I realized that though such incidents increased the difficulties of the assignment they also made it more

I am happy to say that, in my capacity as personal representative of the President of the United States, I was received with the hospitality traditional to the region, and I was granted a prompt and attentive hearing wherever I went.

I would like to correct a general impression that developed from the very outset. I did not go to the Near East with a plan. The plan in my brief case was a proposal.

This proposal was to urge the careful consideration of a new concept which envisioned the coordinated development of the Jordan River watershed. I am pleased to report that, with the cooperation of the statesmen of the affected countries are now studying the proposal.

Now it is true that I took with me charts and tables based on studies made by a distinguished American engineering firm working under the direction of the Tennessee Valley Authority at the behest of the United Nations, which have since been issued in the form of a report by a United Nations agency responsible for the Arab refugee problem.¹

The report also contained suggestions for the construction of dams and power stations without regard to national frontiers or political boundaries.

But I did not ask or expect a "yes" or "no" answer. I was only in connection with these suggestions. On the contrary, I feel that any definite reply made before careful consideration had been given to the proposal would be in order.

These studies, which themselves drew on previous studies, illustrate what can be done and how many material benefits can be showered on war victim and pioneer alike through the coordinated utilization of the water resources of the Jordan basin.

Thanks to 20th century engineering practices and the cooperation and coordination, it is estimated that nearly 240,000 acres of land, idle and unproductive can be put into the richest kind of use. Most of this land, of little use or value to anyone now, can produce three crops a year, so that by American standards we are in effect the equivalent of some 720,000 acres would be brought into work giving sustenance to hungry people, work to the unemployed, wealth and revenue to the nations involved.

What is more, in the course of parallel development, 65,000 additional kilowatts of power would be made available to the wheels of societies already on the move.

The proposal holds out real promise to all parties concerned. To the Arab leaders of the area, it offers a way to meet their growing demands for progress and a better life.

Mass lethargy in the Arab world is fast disappearing.

nt. It knows that social revolution has begun and that it ad that revolution or be swallowed up by it.

Israel, on the other hand, the Jordan Valley development

o wrest every possible benefit from the meager resources on Israel must depend.

oth the Arabs and Israelis it suggests a practical way of easing osive issue largely responsible for so much of the tension be-them, the alleviation of the plight of the Arab refugees who ir homes in Palestine.

y believe that the United Nations report will contribute to the ing of all the peoples in the Near East. I hope the develop-will take the form this report recommends, or something like in my conversations with the leaders of the Arab states and made it clear that modifications would be welcomed.

main thing right now, however, is general support of the princi-development of the Jordan watershed in which each of the l states would acknowledge a responsibility as well as advance

The precise nature of the plan finally adopted is a secondary one might ask, is it realistic to hope that nations still in a f war could be expected to participate in any coordinated

4. PRINCIPLES OF THE JORDAN RIVER DEVELOPMENT PLAN: Statement by the Personal Representative of the President July 6, 1954¹

Ambassador Eric Johnston has informed the President and the Secretary of State that Syria, Lebanon, Jordan, and Israel have accepted the principle of international sharing of the contested waters of the Jordan River and are prepared to cooperate with the U.S. Government in working out details of a mutually acceptable program for developing the irrigation and power potentials of the river system. On his return from a 4-week visit to the area for discussion with Arab and Israeli representatives, Mr. Johnston said that the attitude of the interested states clearly indicated a desire to evolve a workable plan for economic development of the Jordan Valley despite the difficult political issues outstanding between Israel and the Arab countries. Progress made during the negotiations just concluded has encouraged him to believe that an early understanding on all aspects of such a plan is now a possibility. Mr. Johnston stated that the plan involves acceptance by the Arab countries and Israel of the following principles:

1. The limited waters of the Jordan River system should be shared equitably by the four states in which they rise and flow. This principle was implicit in the valley plans put forward respectively by the Arab states and Israel, both of which clearly recognized the right of the other states to a share of the available waters. It was affirmed by both sides during the recent conversations with Mr. Johnston.

2. A neutral impartial authority should be created to supervise withdrawals of water from the river system in accordance with the division ultimately accepted by all parties. The precise nature of such an authority remains to be determined.

3. Amelioration of the condition of the Arab refugees from Palestine should be a principal objective of the irrigation program for the Jordan Valley.

4. Broad lines of understanding as to the total program should be reached at the earliest possible time, not only in the interest of the refugees but in the interests of economic progress and stability in the

Mr. Johnston made it clear that while the foregoing provides a solid basis for further negotiations, there remain specific points on which differences must be reconciled before the project can be realized. All of the states concerned hope that the Government of the United States continue to use its good offices in reconciling these outstanding differences.

Ambassador Johnston's mission in the Near East began in October when the President asked him to lay before the Governments of Syria, Jordan, Lebanon, and Israel a report on unified development of the Jordan Valley prepared by an American engineer at the request of the U.N. Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees. On his first visit to the area, the states concerned agreed to consider the suggestions contained in the UNRWA report. Arab countries later submitted a plan for the valley's development and Israel also put forward a plan to Mr. Johnston. These plans formed the basis of the recent discussions.

6. OPERATION OF THE ARAB-ISRAELI ARMISTICE REGIME

Tripartite Declaration Regarding the Armistice Border

6. STATEMENT BY THE GOVERNMENTS OF THE UNITED STATES, THE UNITED KINGDOM, AND FRANCE, MAY 23, 1950¹

The Governments of the United Kingdom, France, and the United States, having had occasion during the recent Foreign Ministers' meeting in London² to review certain questions affecting the peace and stability of the Arab states and of Israel, and particularly that of the supply of arms and war material to these states, have resolved to make the following statements:

1. The three Governments recognize that the Arab states and Israel all need to maintain a certain level of armed forces for the purposes of assuring their internal security and their legitimate self-defense and to permit them to play their part in the defense of the area as a whole. All applications for arms or war material for these countries will be considered in the light of these principles. In this connection the three Governments wish to recall and reaffirm the terms of the statements made by their representatives on the Security Council on August 4, 1949,³ in which they declared their opposition to the development of an arms race between the Arab states and Israel.
2. The three Governments declare that assurances have been received from all the states in question, to which they permit arms to be supplied from their countries, that the purchasing state does not intend to undertake any act of aggression against any other state. Similar assurances will be requested from any other state in the area to which they permit arms to be supplied in the future.

3. The three Governments take this opportunity of declaring their deep interest in and their desire to promote the establishment and maintenance of peace and stability in the area and their unalterable opposition to the use of force or threat of force between any of the states in that area. The three Governments, should they find that any of these states was preparing to violate frontiers or armistice lines, would, consistently with their obligations as members of the United Nations, take such steps as they might deem appropriate.

27. REAFFIRMATION OF THE TRIPARTITE DECISION

Statement by the President, November 9, 1955

All Americans have been following with deep concern the recent developments in the Near East. The recent outbreak of hostilities has led to a sharp increase in tensions. These events only further retard our search for world peace. Insecurity in one region tends to affect the world as a whole.

While we continue willing to consider requests for armaments for legitimate self-defense, we do not intend to contribute to arms competition in the Near East because we do not think that such competition would be in the true interest of any of the participants. The policy which we believed would best promote the interests and welfare of the peoples of the area was expressed in the Tripartite Declaration of May 25, 1950.² This still remains our policy.

I stated last year that our goal in the Near East as well as elsewhere is just peace.³ Nothing has taken place since which would require a change in our fundamental policies, policies based on friendship for all nations in the area of the area.

We believe that true security must be based upon a just and reasonable settlement. The Secretary of State outlined our position on the 26th⁴ the economic and security contributions which the United States was prepared to make toward such a solution. On that occasion I authorized Mr. Dulles to state that, given a solution to the Arab-Israel related problems, I would recommend that the United States abstain from formal treaty engagements to prevent or thwart any effort by either side to alter by force the boundaries between Israel and its neighbors.

Recent developments have made it all the more important that a just settlement be found. The United States will continue to play a full part and will support firmly the United Nations efforts which already contributed so markedly to minimize violence in the area. I hope that other nations of the world will cooperate in this effort thereby contributing significantly to world peace.

Arms Supply Policy

8. PREVENTION OF LOCAL ARMS IMBALANCE: Address by the President, October 20, 1954 (Excerpt) ¹

In the Near East, we are all regretfully aware that the major differences between Israel and the Arab States remain unresolved. Our goal there, as elsewhere, is a just peace. By friendship toward both we shall continue to contribute to peaceful relations among these peoples. And in helping to strengthen the security of the entire Near East, we shall make sure that any arms we provide are devoted to that purpose, not to creating local imbalances which could be used for intimidation of or aggression against any neighboring nation. In every such arrangement we make with any nation, there is ample assurance that this distortion of purpose cannot occur.

9. AVOIDANCE OF AN ARMS RACE: Statement by the Secretary of State and the British Foreign Secretary, September 27, 1955 ²

The United States Secretary of State and British Foreign Secretary discussed together reports relating to their arms supply policies in the Middle East.

They wish to state that the United States and British Governments have for some time been in close consultation with each other as well as with other governments in relation to this matter and that there has been, and continues to be, complete harmony of views between their two governments.

Both governments base their policies on the desire, on the one hand, to enable the various countries to provide for internal security and for their defense, and on the other, to avoid an arms race which would inevitably increase the tensions in the area. They will continue, and hope other governments will continue, to be guided by these principles.

30. SHIPMENT OF SOVIET ARMS TO ARAB

Remarks by the Secretary of State at News Conference, 4, 1955 (Excerpts) ¹

Q. Mr. Secretary, can you give us any information about Mr. Allen's ² progress in talks with Nasser ³ in Cairo?

A. He has had a very good talk, indeed two rather full ones, which I think he has gained an insight as to the Egyptian attitude on this matter, and I think that Colonel Nasser has gained an insight to our attitude toward the matter. There is better understanding than there was before. I think in substance that is the result of the trip and that was the purpose of his trip.

Q. Mr. Secretary, further in that connection, could you tell us our attitude toward the proposed contract arrangement for the sale of arms since Mr. Allen completed his talks with Colonel Nasser?

A. I had prepared a little statement which perhaps I will read to you, because I anticipated questions on this topic.

At my press conference the last of August (August 26), I was asked about possible Soviet-bloc shipments of arms to Arab countries. I made two observations. The first was that the Arab countries are independent governments and free to do whatever they wish on this matter. My second observation was that, from the point of view of U.S. relations with the Soviet Union, such delivery of arms would not contribute to relaxing tensions.

Those two observations stand today. I might add that I am sure.

It is difficult to be critical of countries which, feeling their security endangered, seek the arms which they sincerely believe necessary for their defense. On the other hand, I doubt very much that, under the conditions which prevail in the area, it is possible for any country to achieve security through an arms race. Also it is not easy to speculate on the probable motives of the Soviet-bloc leaders.

In my talk about this matter of August 26,⁵ I spoke of the Soviet-bloc which dominated the area and said that I felt that it could be dissipated only by collective measures designed to deter aggression by anyone. I proposed a security guaranty sponsored by the United Nations. That, I said, would relieve the acute fears which these countries now profess.

It is still my hope that such a solution may be found.

Q. Mr. Secretary, if I may ask one other question, does it mean that the United States might provide arms to Arab countries?

any arms shipments from the Soviet bloc to Egypt. Can you tell whether this is a likely prospect or not?

A. No, I could not say whether it would be a likely prospect or not. As I say, in the first place we do not know what amount or character of arms may be involved in the Egyptian-Soviet bloc deal and to what extent, if any, it may seriously upset the balance of power in the area. It has in the main been the policy of the United States as was set out in the joint statement which the British Foreign Secretary and I issued in New York last week,¹ to avoid participation in what might become an arms race, and we still hope it will be possible to avoid getting into that situation.

Supervision Organization for Palestine, and statements Council by the Chief of Staff of the United Nations Truce Organization for Palestine,

Noting that the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision in a memorandum of 7 March 1951, and the Chairman of the Syrian-Israel Mixed Armistice Commission on a number of occasions have requested the Israel delegation to the Mixed Armistice Commission to ensure that the Palestine Land Development Corporation Limited, is instructed to cease all operations in the demilitarized zone until such time as an agreement is arranged through the Chairman of the Mixed Armistice Commission for continuing this project;

Noting further that article V of the General Armistice Agreement between Israel and Syria¹ gives to the Chairman the responsibility for the general supervision of the demilitarized zone,

Endorses the requests of the Chief of Staff and the Chairman of the Mixed Armistice Commission on this matter and calls upon the Government of Israel to comply with them;

Declares that in order to promote the return of permanent peace to Palestine, it is essential that the Governments of Israel and Syria observe faithfully the General Armistice Agreement of 20 March 1949;

Notes that under article VII, paragraph 8, of the Armistice Agreement, where interpretation of the meaning of a particular provision of the agreement, other than the preamble and articles I and II, is in issue, the Mixed Armistice Commission's interpretation shall be final;

Calls upon the Governments of Israel and Syria to bring all disputes before the Mixed Armistice Commission or its Chairman, whichever is competent to exercise this responsibility under the Armistice Agreement, and to abide by the decisions resulting therefrom;

Considers that it is inconsistent with the objectives of the Armistice Agreement to refuse to participate in meetings of the Mixed Armistice Commission or to fail to respect requests of the Chairman of the Mixed Armistice Commission as they may be required to do under obligations under article V and calls upon the parties to be present at all meetings called by the Chairman of the Commission and to respect such requests;

Calls upon the parties to give effect to the following recommendations made by the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization in his 542nd meeting of the Security Council on 25 April 1951, as recorded in the summary record of the Syria-Israel Armistice Conference of 1949, which was agreed to by the parties as an authoritative interpretation of article V of the General Armistice Agreement between Israel and Syria:

"The question of civil administration in villages and

"Where Israel civilians return to or remain in an Israel village or settlement, the civil administration and policing of the village or settlement will be by Israelis. Similarly, where Arab civilians return to or remain in an Arab village, a local Arab administrative and police unit will be authorized.

"As civilian life is gradually restored, administration will take shape on a local basis under the general supervision of the Chairman of the Mixed Armistice Commission.

"The Chairman of the Mixed Armistice Commission, in consultation and co-operation with the local communities will be in a position to authorize all necessary arrangements for the restoration and protection of civilian life. He will not assume responsibility for direct administration of the zone."

Recalls to the Governments of Syria and Israel their obligations under Article 2, paragraph 4 of the Charter of the United Nations and their commitments under the Armistice Agreement not to resort to military force and finds that:

- (a) Aerial action taken by the forces of the Government of Israel on 5 April 1951 and
- (b) Any aggressive military action by either of the parties in or around the demilitarized zone, which further investigation by the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization into the reports and complaints recently submitted to the Council may establish constitutes a violation of the cease-fire provision provided in the Security Council resolution of 15 July 1948 and are inconsistent with the terms of the Armistice Agreement and the obligations assumed under the Charter;

Noting the complaint with regard to the evacuation of Arab residents from the demilitarized zone;

- (a) Decides that Arab civilians who have been removed from the demilitarized zone by the Government of Israel should be permitted to return forthwith to their homes and that the Mixed Armistice Commission should supervise their return and rehabilitation in a manner to be determined by the Commission; and
- (b) Holds that no action involving the transfer of persons across international frontiers, armistice lines or within the demilitarized zone should be undertaken without prior decision of the Chairman of the Mixed Armistice Commission.

Noting with concern the refusal on a number of occasions to permit members and officials of the Truce Supervision Organization to enter

United Nations to settle their international disputes by means in such manner that international peace and security be endangered, and expresses its concern at the failure of the Governments of Israel and Syria to achieve progress pursuant to the terms of the Armistice Agreement to promote the return to normal peace in Palestine;

Directs the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization to take the necessary steps to give effect to this resolution for the purpose of restoring peace in the area, and authorizes him to take such steps as may be necessary to restore peace in the area and to make such representations to the Governments of Israel and Syria as he may deem necessary;

Calls upon the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization to report to the Security Council on compliance given to this resolution;

Requests the Secretary-General to furnish such additional information and assistance as the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization may request in carrying out the present resolution and the Council's resolutions of 8 May 1951 and 17 November 1950.

32. RESPECT FOR THE MANDATE OF THE UNITED NATIONS CONCILIATION COMMISSION FOR PALESTINE: UNITED NATIONS General Assembly Resolution 512 (VI), January 20, 1953

The General Assembly,

Recalling all the resolutions adopted at previous sessions of the General Assembly on the Palestine problem,

Having examined the progress report of the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine,²

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Conciliation Commission for Palestine for its efforts to assist the parties to reach agreement on their outstanding differences;

2. Notes with regret that, as stated in paragraph 87 of the report, the Commission has been unable to fulfil its mandate under the terms of the General Assembly;

3. Considers that the governments concerned have the primary responsibility for reaching a settlement of their outstanding differences in conformity with the resolutions of the General Assembly on Palestine;

4. Urges the governments concerned to seek agreement with a view to an early settlement of their outstanding differences in conformity with the resolutions of the General Assembly on Palestine; and to the parties to assist them in reaching agreement on outstanding questions;

6. Requests the Conciliation Commission for Palestine to render progress reports periodically to the Secretary-General for transmission to the Members of the United Nations;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary staff and facilities for carrying out the terms of the present resolution.

3. ISRAELI-SYRIAN WATER DIVERSION DISPUTE: United Nations Security Council Resolution, October 27, 1953¹

The Security Council,

Having taken note of the report of the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization dated 23 October 1953 (S/3122),²

Desirous of facilitating the consideration of the question, without however prejudicing the rights, claims or position of the parties concerned,

Deems it desirable to that end that the works started in the Demilitarized Zone on 2 September 1953 should be suspended during the urgent examination of the question by the Security Council,

Notes with satisfaction the statement made by the Israel representative at the 631st meeting regarding the undertaking given by his Government to suspend the works in question during that examination,³

Requests the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization to inform it regarding the fulfilment of that undertaking.⁴

² The report stated, among other things, that the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization had informed Israel on Sept. 23, that the work in the demilitarized zone should cease "so long as an agreement is not arranged."

³ U.N. Security Council, Official Records, 631st Meeting, Oct. 27, 1953, p. 5.

34. THE QIBYA (ISRAEL-JORDAN) INCIDENT: UN Security Council Resolution, November 24, 1953

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the Palestine question, particularly those of 15 July 1948,² 11 August 1949,³ and 18 November 1948 concerning methods for maintaining the armistice and settling disputes through the Mixed Armistice Commissions,

Noting the reports of 27 October 1953 and 9 November 1953 to the Security Council by the Chief of Staff of the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization and the statements to the Security Council by the representatives of Jordan and Israel,

A

Finds that the retaliatory action at Qibya taken by armed forces of Israel on 14-15 October 1953 and all such actions constitute a breach of the ceasefire provisions of the Security Council resolutions of 1948 and are inconsistent with the parties' obligations under the General Armistice Agreement⁵ and the Charter;

Expresses the strongest censure of that action, which is prejudicial to the chances of that peaceful settlement which, in accordance with the Charter, are bound to seek, and calls upon Israel to take effective measures to prevent all such actions in the future;

B

Takes note of the fact that there is substantial evidence of the demarcation line by unauthorized persons, often resulting in acts of violence, and requests the Government of Jordan to take and strengthen the measures which it is already taking to prevent such crossings;

Recalls to the Governments of Israel and Jordan their obligations under Security Council resolutions and the General Armistice Agreement to prevent all acts of violence on either side of the demarcation line;

Calls upon the Governments of Israel and Jordan to take effective co-operation of local security forces;

C

Reaffirms that it is essential, in order to achieve progress towards a lasting settlement of the issues between them, that the parties abide by their obligations phasizes the obligation of the Governments of Israel and Jordan to cooperate fully with the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization;

requests the Secretary-General to consider, with the Chief of Staff, the best ways of strengthening the Truce Supervision Organization to furnish such additional personnel and assistance as the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization may require for the performance of his duties;

requests the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization to report within three months to the Security Council with such recommendations as he may consider appropriate on compliance with enforcement of the General Armistice Agreements, with particular reference to the provisions of this resolution and taking into account the agreement reached in pursuance of the request by the Government of Israel for the convocation of a conference under article XII of the General Armistice Agreement between Israel and Jordan.¹

ISRAELI ATTACKS IN THE GAZA STRIP: United Nations Security Council Resolution, March 29, 1955²

Security Council, recalling its resolutions of 15 July 1948,³ 11 August 1949,⁴ 17 November 1950,⁵ 18 May 1951⁶ and 25 [24] November 1953;⁷ having heard the report of the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization and statements by the Representatives of Egypt and Israel;

finding that the Egyptian-Israeli Mixed Armistice Commission on 6 March 1955 determined that a "prearranged and planned attack carried out by Israeli authorities" was "committed by Israeli regular forces against the Egyptian regular army force" in the Gaza Strip on February 28th, 1955;

The Department of State issued a statement on Oct. 18, 1953, expressing its "deepest sympathy for the families of those who lost their lives" in the Qibya massacre as well as the conviction that those responsible "should be brought to justice and that effective measures should be taken to prevent such incidents in the future" (Department of State Bulletin, Oct. 26, 1953, p. 552). See also the State Department communiqué of Oct. 18, 1953; supra, pp. 1467-1468. For background information see Report of the Security Council to the General Assembly Covering the period from 16 July 1953 to 15 July 1954 (A/2712), pp. 6-15, and United States Participation in the United Nations: Report by the President to the Congress for the year 1953 (Department of State publication 5459: 1954) pp. 75-77.

Condemns this attack as a violation of the cease-fire provisions of the Security Council resolution of 15 July 1948 and as inconsistent with the obligations of the parties under the General Armistice Agreement between Egypt and Israel¹ and under the Charter;

Calls again upon Israel to take all necessary measures to prevent such actions;

Expresses its conviction that the maintenance of the General Armistice Agreement is threatened by any deliberate violation of the Agreement by one of the parties to it, and that no progress toward the return of permanent peace in Palestine can be made unless the parties comply strictly with their obligations under the General Armistice Agreement and the cease-fire provisions of its resolution of 15 July 1948.

36. ISRAELI-EGYPTIAN OBLIGATIONS TO COOPERATE WITH THE UNITED NATIONS TRUCE SUPERVISION COMMISSION: United Nations Security Council Resolution, 1955²

The Security Council,

Taking note of those sections of the report by the Chief of Staff of the TSO³ which deal with the general conditions on the Demarcation Line between Egypt and Israel, and the current present tension;

Anxious that all possible steps shall be taken to preserve the peace in this area, within the framework of the General Armistice Agreement between Egypt and Israel;⁴

Requests the Chief of Staff to continue his consultations with the Governments of Egypt and Israel with a view to the introduction of practical measures to that end;

Notes that the Chief of Staff has already made certain proposals to this effect;

Calls upon the Governments of Egypt and Israel to cooperate with the Chief of Staff with regard to his proposals, bearing in mind that, in the opinion of the Chief of Staff, infiltration can be reduced to an occasional nuisance if an agreement were effected between the parties on the lines he has proposed;

Requests the Chief of Staff to keep the Council informed of the progress of his discussions.

7. CALL FOR THE IMPLEMENTATION OF THE SECURITY COUNCIL RESOLUTION OF MARCH 30, 1955: Letter From the President of the Security Council to Each Member, June 7, 1955¹

EXCELLENCY: As President of the Security Council this month it is incumbent upon me to bring to the attention of the members of the Council my concern over the situation created by the continued incidents along the Gaza Demarcation Line and the difficulties which are being encountered by the Chief of Staff of the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization [Maj. Gen. E. L. M. Burns] in carrying out the Council's unanimous resolution of March 30, 1955.² You will recall that this resolution called upon the Governments of Egypt and Israel to cooperate with the Chief of Staff with regard to his proposals directed toward preservation of security in that area.

It is to be hoped that the Security Council resolution will be implemented promptly with the full cooperation of the Governments of Egypt and Israel. If this hope is not realized, however, and General Burns does not receive the full cooperation of the parties concerned, it may be necessary to call a meeting of the Council for the specific purpose of considering the status of the implementation of the resolution of March 30 and such further assistance and support to the Chief of Staff as may be necessary.

This letter is being addressed to each member of the Security Council. Copies are being sent to the representatives of Egypt and Israel and the Secretary-General.

Accept, Excellency, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

Noting with grave concern the discontinuance of the talks initiated by the Chief of Staff in accordance with the above-mentioned resolution,

Deploing the recent outbreak of violence in the area along the Armistice Demarcation Line established between Egypt and Israel on 24 February 1949,¹

1. Notes with approval the acceptance by both parties of the appeal of the Chief of Staff for an unconditional cease-fire;

2. Calls upon both parties forthwith to take all steps necessary to bring about order and tranquility in the area, and in particular to desist from further acts of violence and to continue the cease-fire in full force and effect;

3. Endorses the view of the Chief of Staff that the armed forces of both parties should be clearly and effectively separated by measures such as those which he has proposed;

4. Declares that freedom of movement must be afforded to United Nations Observers in the area to enable them to fulfill their functions;

5. Calls upon both parties to appoint representatives to meet with the Chief of Staff and to co-operate fully with him to these ends; and

6. Requests the Chief of Staff to report to the Security Council on the action taken to carry out this Resolution.

39. UNITED STATES SUPPORT OF UNITED NATIONS EFFORTS TO ACHIEVE PEACEFUL SETTLEMENT: Statement by the Department of State, November 5, 1955 ²

During recent weeks, especially during the last few days, the United States has noted, with deep concern, the increasing tempo of hostilities between Israel and Egypt. According to our information there have been violations of the General Armistice Agreement by both Israel and Egypt which have led to bloodshed and loss of life. The United States deplores resort to force for the settlement of disputes. The Secretary-General of the United Nations and General [E. L. M. Burns have put forward proposals to Israel and Egypt which are designed to ease the present situation along their common border. The United States strongly supports the United Nations efforts to achieve settlement by peaceful means, especially the current proposals of General Burns, who is the Chief of Staff of the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization.

Recent reports have also been received that United Nations observers who are under General Burns' direction have been pro-continues to believe that these United Nations observers should all liberty to perform their peaceful functions.

stant Secretary Allen informed the Ambassadors of Israel and of the attitude of the United States and asked for information respect to their Governments' intentions regarding these matters.

Shipping Restrictions in the Suez Canal

EGYPTIAN RESTRICTIONS ON ISRAELI SHIPPING IN THE SUEZ CANAL: United Nations Security Council Resolution, November 1, 1951¹

Security Council

Recalling that in its resolution of 11 August 1949 (S/1376), leading to the conclusion of Armistice Agreements between Israel and the neighbouring Arab States² it drew attention to the pledges in these Agreements "against any further acts of hostility between the parties",

Recalling further that in its resolution of 17 November 1950 (S/1517 and Corr. 1), it reminded the States concerned that the Armistice Agreements to which they are parties contemplate "the return to permanent peace in Palestine", and therefore urged them and the States in the area to take all such steps as will lead to the settlement of the issues between them,

Noting the report of the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Commission to the Security Council of 12 June 1951 (S/2194),

Further noting that the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Commission recalled the statement of the senior Egyptian delegate to the Commission on 13 January 1949, to the effect that his delegation was imbued with every spirit of co-operation, conciliation and a sincere desire to restore peace in Palestine", and that the Egyptian Government has not complied with the earnest plea of the Chief of Staff made to the Egyptian delegate on 12 June 1951, that it desist from the current practice of interfering with the passage through the Suez Canal of goods destined for Israel,

Considering that since the armistice regime, which has been in force for nearly two and a half years, is of a permanent character, ment between the parties and the establishment of a permanent peace in Palestine set forth in the Armistice Agreement,

7. Finds further that such practice is an abuse of the right of visit, search and seizure,

8. Further finds that that practice cannot in the present circumstances be justified on the ground that it is necessary for

9. And further noting that the restrictions on the passage through the Suez Canal to Israel ports are denying to the time connected with the conflict in Palestine valuable supplies for their economic reconstruction, and that these restrictions with sanctions applied by Egypt to certain ships which call at Israel ports represent unjustified interference with the right to navigate the seas and to trade freely with one another, the Arab States and Israel,

10. Calls upon Egypt to terminate the restrictions on the free passage of international commercial shipping and goods through the Canal wherever bound and to cease all interference with shipping beyond that essential to the safety of shipping in the Canal, and to the observance of the international conventions in force

41. OBLIGATION OF EGYPT TO COMPLY WITH THE SECURITY COUNCIL'S RESOLUTION OF 1951: the United States Representative at the United Nations Security Council, March 25, 1954²

The issue before us is the compliance of a valued member of the United Nations with a decision taken 2½ years ago by the main body of this organization charged with the maintenance of international peace and security. After examining the facts as presented by both sides, this Council adopted a resolution on September 1, 1951,³ which continues to apply to the facts as they are, and to them relating to the complaint now under consideration. The resolution of 1951 was adopted after the parties themselves entered into a general armistice agreement⁴ which had as one of its purposes the promotion of permanent peace in Palestine. The resolution stems from that agreement. The basic issues are as those considered then, and in our opinion, nothing has changed since 1949, when the Armistice Agreement was signed, or when the resolution was adopted, to alter their validity or their relevance to the peace of the area.

Throughout the history of the Palestine Question the United Nations has sought a peaceful, just, and equitable settlement of the many complicated problems arising out of the Palestine conflict. The decisions of the various organs of the United Nations have not always satisfied our own views 100 percent. But we have consistently sought to respect and give effect to the combined judgment which those decisions represent. We, for our part, feel that the parties directly concerned in these questions have an equal duty to respect and make every reasonable effort to give effect to the combined judgment of the United Nations, whether expressed in the Security Council or in the General Assembly, or other competent organs. We must say frankly that the desire of the interested parties to do so has not always been apparent. If, disregarding the collective efforts of the United Nations, the parties bring the house down upon themselves, it is they who will suffer most. This may seem like a strong statement, but candor compels it.

When the United Nations was established, such situations as these were the reason why we combined together to pool some of our resources and to subject some of our interests to the judgment of the majority. It seems to us that the parties to the Palestine Question are losing sight of the immense value to themselves that this process represents. None of us can stand alone; disregard of the Council's view in one instance encourages recalcitrance in another. The whole fabric of international cooperation inevitably suffers. Thus, to repeat, the question before us is one of compliance with a decision of the United Nations. That decision was based on several important considerations, one of which was that, and I quote, "neither party can reasonably assert that it is actively a belligerent or requires to exercise the right of visit, search and seizure for any legitimate purpose of self-defense."

In our opinion, this principle is equally applicable to the Suez Canal and to any waters outside the Canal. This principle and the decision of the Council in its resolution of 1951 should be applied by the parties themselves through the Mixed Armistice Commission which they themselves set up. Differences arising between the parties under the Armistice Agreement should always, in our opinion, be handled as fully as possible in the first instance by the Mixed Armistice machinery. An exception to this rule could weaken the effectiveness of that machinery. We believe that the Mixed Armistice Commission, in considering the specific complaint with respect to actions in the Gulf of Aqaba, must be bound not only by the provisions of the General Armistice Agreement, but should act also in the light of paragraph 5 of the resolution of September 1, 1951.

has referred to the "complete good will of Egypt" and "prepare the ground for a reasonable solution." He also earlier, called for similar efforts by the Government of Egypt. We could not fail to endorse such sentiments. We are confident that they can be given effect by acceptance and reaffirmation of the Council's decision of September 1, 1951. We hold similar views with respect to the various other decisions of the United Nations on the question of Palestine. We hope that these views will be the views of all responsible members, whether or not they have the peculiar responsibility of membership in this Council. In this spirit we will vote for the draft resolution on the delegation of New Zealand.²

The Status of Jerusalem

[INTERNATIONAL REGIME FOR THE JERUSALEM AND PROTECTION OF THE HOLY PLACES: GENERAL ASSEMBLY RESOLUTION 303 (IV), DECEMBER 1948]

42. REMOVAL OF THE ISRAELI FOREIGN OFFICE FROM TEL AVIV TO JERUSALEM: Statement by the Secretary-General, July 28, 1953⁴

The United States regrets that the Israeli Government has decided to move its Foreign Office from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem.

We have made known our feelings on that subject on two prior occasions. It was done in January 1952 and again in March 1953, when our Ambassador, hearing that this was in contemplation, called upon the Israeli Government and requested them not to transfer their Foreign Ministry

² The Soviet Union vetoed the draft resolution on Mar. 2, 1954. The Security Council took up again the question of Egyptian interference in the Suez Canal in October 1954 following a complaint by Israel that it had seized on Sept. 28, 1954, the Bat Galim, a ship flying the Israeli flag. It was attempting to transit the Suez Canal. For a statement by the United States in the Security Council on Jan. 4, 1955, see Department of State Bulletin, Jan. 10, 1955, p. 1.

We feel that way because we believe that it would embarrass the United Nations, which has a primary responsibility for determining the future status of Jerusalem. You may recall that the present standing U.N. resolution about Jerusalem¹ contemplates that it should be to a large extent at least an international city rather than a purely national city. Also, we feel that this particular action by the Government of Israel at this particular time is inopportune in relation to the tensions which exist in the Near East, tensions which are rather extreme, and that this will add to rather than relax any of these tensions.

The views that I express here are, we know, shared by a considerable number of other governments who have concern with the development of an atmosphere of peace and good will in that part of the world.

We have notified the Government of Israel that we do not intend to move our own Embassy to Jerusalem.²

3. RETENTION OF THE AMERICAN EMBASSY AT TEL AVIV Statement by the Department of State, November 3, 1954³

The ranking diplomatic representatives of Jordan, Lebanon, Iraq, Yemen, Saudi Arabia, Libya, Syria, and Egypt called on the Secretary of State on November 3 to make known the views of their Governments with respect to the plans for presentation of credentials in Jerusalem by the appointed American Ambassador to Israel, Edward B. Lawson.

In the course of the conversation the Secretary recalled the policy of the U.S. Government to look to the United Nations as primarily responsible for determining the future status of Jerusalem. Following normal practice, the presentation of credentials would be effected by Ambassador Lawson at the place where the Chief of State actually resides. The fact that this means that the presentation will take place in Jerusalem implies no change in our attitude regarding Jerusalem nor does it imply any change in the location of the American Embassy in Israel, which is at Tel Aviv.

THE IRANIAN OIL CONTROVERSY

UNITED STATES POSITION IN TALKS WITH IRAN AND THE UNITED KINGDOM: Statement by the Department of State, May 18, 1951¹

The United States is deeply concerned by the dispute between the United States and British Governments over Iranian oil. We are firm friends of Iran and Great Britain and are sincerely interested in the welfare of each country. The United States wants an amicable settlement of the dispute, which is serious not only to the parties directly concerned but also to the whole free world. We have followed the matter closely and have told both countries where we stand. The views which we have expressed have related to the broad aspects of the problem, and it has not been appropriate for us to advise with respect to specific arrangements which might be worked out.

Since the United States attitude has been the subject of some discussion, it is deemed advisable to describe the position which we have taken in our talks with representatives of Iran and Great Britain. We have stressed to the Governments of both countries the need to settle the dispute in a friendly way through negotiation and have urged them to avoid intimidation and threats of unilateral action.

In our talks with the British Government, we have expressed the view that arrangements should be worked out with the Iranians which give recognition to Iran's expressed desire for greater control over and benefits from the development of its petroleum. While the United States has not approved or disapproved of any particular British proposal, it is pleased to note a similar move on the part of the British to negotiate with the Iranians on the outstanding issues.

We fully recognize the sovereign rights of Iran and support them with Iran's desire that increased benefits accrue to it from the development of its petroleum. In talks with the Iranian Government, we have pointed out the serious effects of any cancellation of clear contractual relationships which the United States strongly opposes. We have stressed the importance of the Iranians achieving their legitimate objectives through friendly relations with the other party, consistent with their international responsibilities. This would have the advantage of maintaining confidence in future commercial investments in Iran and, indeed, in the contractual arrangements all over the world.

Iran has been urged, before it takes final action, to analyze the practical aspects of this problem. In this connection, we have raised the question of whether or not the elimination of the British oil company from Iran would in fact secure for Iran the maximum possible benefits. We have pointed out that the efficient production and refining of Iranian oil requires not only technical knowledge and capital but transport and marketing facilities such as those provided by the company. We have also pointed out that any uncertainty about the future availability of Iranian supplies would cause concern on the part of customers which might lead to shifts in their sources of supply with a consequent decreased revenue to Iran.

Those United States oil companies which would be best qualified to conduct operations such as the large-scale and complex ones in Iran have indicated to this Government that they would be reluctant to face unilateral action by Iran against the British company and are unwilling to undertake operations in that country. Moreover, the petroleum technicians of the number and competence required in Iran are those presently in Iran are not, due to extreme shortages of personnel in this specialized field, available in this country or in other countries.

The United States believes that Iran and Great Britain have a strong mutuality of interests that they must and will find it in their interest through friendly negotiation, of reestablishing a relationship which will permit each party to play its full role in the achievement of their common objectives. Through such negotiation it is felt that their basic desires and interests can best be realized, the legitimate interests preserved, and the essential flow of Iranian oil into the markets of the free world maintained.

The United States has repeatedly expressed its great interest in the continued independence and territorial integrity of Iran and will continue to give concrete evidence of this interest.

8. UNITED STATES NONINTERVENTION IN IRANIAN DOMESTIC AFFAIRS: Aide-Mémoire From the American Ambassador at Tehran to the Iranian Minister for Foreign Affairs, May 2, 1951¹

The aide-mémoire of His Excellency, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Iran, which was handed to the American Ambassador in Tehran on May 21,² has been carefully considered by the Government of the United States.

It is unfortunate that the public statement made by this Government on May 18³ has been misconstrued by the Iranian Government as intervention in the internal affairs of Iran. The United States wishes to make it clear that it did not then intend, nor does it now intend, to interfere in the internal affairs of Iran, nor to oppose Iranian sovereign rights or the expressed desires of the Iranian Government in regard to control of Iranian resources.

There is, however, a legitimate basis for deep and proper interest on the part of this Government in a solution of the oil problem in Iran. A serious controversy exists between Iran and Great Britain, a controversy which could undermine the unity of the free world and seriously weaken it. The United States is bound to both countries by strong ties of friendship and has attested its sincere concern for the well-being of both. It has, therefore, in view of the importance of the matter, discussed the issues with both parties and has stated publicly the principles it considers important in reaching a solution of this controversy.

The United States continues in its firm belief that an issue of this kind can be settled satisfactorily only by negotiation by the parties concerned. While the United States has urged upon both parties the need for moderation, it has taken no position on details of an arrangement which might be worked out. It has, however, reaffirmed its stand against unilateral cancellation of contractual relationships and actions of a confiscatory nature. The United States is convinced that through negotiation a settlement can be found which will satisfy the desires of the Iranian people to control their own resources, which will protect legitimate British interests and which will assure uninterrupted flow of Iranian oil to its world markets. Such a settlement is in the opinion of this Government, of the utmost importance not only to the welfare of the two powers concerned but to that of the entire free world. The United States wishes to state again its deep interest in the welfare of the Iranian people and in the maintenance of the independence and territorial integrity of Iran, which is a cardinal principle of United States policy.

49. OFFER TO SEND A PRESIDENTIAL REPRESENTATIVE TO TEHRAN: Message From the President of the United States to the Prime Minister of Iran, July 8, 1951

I am most grateful to Your Excellency for giving me in your letter a full and frank account of the developments in the oil dispute which has arisen between your Government and the oil interests in Iran.² This matter is so full of dangers to the oil of your own country, of Great Britain, and of all the free world that I have been giving the most earnest thought to the problem. I had hoped that the common interests of the two countries would be involved and the common ground which has been developed in our discussions would open the way to a solution of the most complicated problems which have arisen. You know of the strategic interest in this country in Iran's desire to control her own resources. From this point of view we were happy to learn that the British Government has on its part accepted the principle of nationalization.

Since British skill and operating knowledge can contribute so much to the Iranian oil industry I had hoped—and still hope—that a way could be found to recognize the principle of nationalization without sacrificing British interests to the benefit of both. For these reasons we have watched with concern the breakdown of your discussions with the British toward a collapse of oil operations with all the attendant dangers to Iran and the world. Surely this is a disaster which statesmen must find a way to avoid.

Recently I have come to believe that the complexity of the problem involved in a broad settlement and the shortness of the time available before the refinery must shut down—if the present situation continues—require a simple and practicable modus vivendi under which oil operations can continue and under which the interests of all concerned will be prejudiced. Various suggestions to this end have been made, but the time available is running out.

In this situation a new and important development has arisen. The International Court of Justice, which your Government, the British Government, and our own, all joined with others to establish as the guardian of impartial justice and equity, has made a suggestion for a modus vivendi.³

Technical considerations aside, I lay great stress on the

urt. I know how sincerely your Government and the British Government believe in the positions which you both have taken in discussions. However, I am sure you believe even more profoundly in the idea of a world controlled by law and justice which is the hope of the world since the San Francisco conference. From questions of jurisdiction, no one will doubt the impartiality of the World Court, its eminence, and the respect due to it by all who signed the United Nations treaty.

Therefore, I earnestly commend to you a most careful consideration of my suggestion. I suggest that its utterance be thought of not as a demand which is or is not binding depending on technical legal conditions, but as a suggestion of an impartial body, dedicated to law and equity and to a peaceful world based upon these great principles. A study of its suggestion by your Government and by the British Government will, I am sure, develop methods of implementing it which will carry out its wise and impartial purpose—regulating the operation of the oil industry and preserving the position of both Governments. Surely no government loses any element of its sovereignty or the support of its people by treating with all due consideration and respect the utterance of this great Court. My own Government and people believe this profoundly. Should I take such a position I am sure that the stature of Iran would be enhanced in the eyes of the world.

I have a very sincere desire, Mr. Prime Minister, to be as helpful as possible in this circumstance. I have discussed this matter at length with W. Averell Harriman who, as you know, is one of my personal advisers and one of our most eminent citizens. Should you wish to receive him, I should be happy to have him go to Tehran with a personal representative to talk over with you this immediate pressing situation.

I take this opportunity to assure Your Excellency of my highest regard and to convey to you my confidence in the future well-being and prosperity of Iran.¹

OBSERVATIONS ON IRANIAN PROPOSALS FOR SETTLEMENT OF THE CONTROVERSY: Note From the President's Special Representative (W. Averell Harriman) to the Prime Minister of Iran, September 15, 1951²

Your Excellency's message of September 12³ has been communicated to me by the Iranian Ambassador. I share your regret that the under Lord Privy Seal Stokes did not culminate in upon a settlement of the oil controversy.¹ I know that interruption to the production and shipment of Iranian oil is a very considerable hardship upon the economy of Iran and upon the economy of Great Britain. The United States and the entire free world looked anxiously upon these discussions and hoped that some solution could be found which would satisfy the interests of both parties.

I assure Your Excellency that I continue to stand ready in any way that I can in finding a just solution. Insofar as far I have endeavored to be frank and objective in the discussions I have given to the Iranian Government, as well as to the British Government. It is in this objective and friendly spirit that I am now making an effort to be helpful to you in arriving at a settlement, and I do not like to comment upon the substance of your communications.

With reference to the proposals in general, I should say that they appear to be the same as proposals made by the British Government during the course of the negotiations in which the British Mission did not accept since they did not meet the practical and commercial aspects of the international situation. In some respects the proposals in fact represent a retreat from the positions taken during the discussions.

Your Excellency has suggested that the various departments of the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company be retained, insofar as they do not conflict with the terms of the Nationalization Law, and that the managers and other responsible personnel of the technical departments employed in the National Oil Company of Iran with the same status which they enjoyed previously. You have also stated that the Iranian Government is prepared to create a mixed enterprise composed of Iranian and neutral foreign technicians who will jointly manage the administrative and technical affairs of the National Oil Company of Iran.

In discussing this possibility during the negotiations, I have endeavored to point out to the Iranian representatives the impossibility of attempting to operate a large and complex industrial enterprise on the basis of a number of section heads reporting to a board of directors with no single individual being given executive authority. I have stated that no organization can operate effectively in this manner. I have understood Mr. Stokes' position in Tehran to be that the British Government would not consider it workable. Moreover, I have pointed out that effective operations, particularly of a refinery of the complexity of that in Abadan, require the employment of a centralized organization rather than the employment of indi-capable management and operated in a manner which would assure safety and efficiency.

Your Excellency has expressed concern that the arrangements for the operation of the oil industry must take into account the requirements of the Nationalization Law. I am convinced that arrangements are possible which would meet this objective and at the same time would assure that the oil industry is conducted on an efficient basis. During our visit in Tehran Mr. Levy and I discussed with Iranian officials arrangements under which a competent organization could be employed to operate under the control of the National Oil Company of Iran. Such arrangements are a common business practice throughout the world.

Your Excellency has reiterated that the Iranian Government has not intended and does not intend to confiscate the property of the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company and has suggested methods for the determination of the amount of compensation.

While I have no comments upon your suggestions for determining the value of the assets, it is obvious that payment of compensation must depend upon and will be affected by arrangements for the efficient operation of the oil industry to assure that the products continue to be made available for sale to world markets. As I have pointed out to Your Excellency, in the view of the United States Government the seizure by any government of foreign-owned assets without either prompt, adequate and effective compensation or alternative arrangements satisfactory to the former owners is, regardless of the intent, confiscation rather than nationalization. There must be more than a willingness to pay; there must be the ability to do so in an effective form. I believe, however, that if arrangements for the sale of oil are made with the British interests the compensation problem could be worked out satisfactorily and that the net oil income accruing to Iran could be as large as that of any other oil-producing country under comparable circumstances.

Your Excellency has stated that the Iranian Government is prepared to sell to the British ten million tons of oil per year, this quantity representing an estimate of Iranian oil previously used in Great Britain. It is specified that sales would be at prevailing international prices on the basis of the f.o.b. value at Iranian ports. It is also stated that this oil would be delivered to any company or transport agency designated by the British.

As I pointed out to Your Excellency in Tehran, in order to be assured of continuous sales of substantial quantities of its oil in world markets Iran must make arrangements with customers that can make available the transportation and distribution facilities

The production of Iranian oil before the present controversy amounted to some 30 million tons per year. The major portion of this production was handled by British concerns and affiliates. They have developed markets for it throughout the world. They have the great transportation facilities needed to carry the oil from Iran to its markets, where only they have the necessary distribution facilities for it. Arrangements, including financial terms, for the sale of only that portion of the oil which previously went to Great Britain would leave the problem of shipping to and distribution in other parts of the world unsolved, and would force the British interests to turn to other sources of supply.

During the negotiations in Tehran the Iranian Government indicated its willingness to consider a long-term contract for the export of Iranian oil to an organization acting on behalf of former purchasers of the products. Under this suggestion, that portion of the oil output which was not covered by this contract could be sold directly by the National Oil Company of Iran to its own customers. Your Excellency's present suggestion would indicate that there has been a change in this position.

Your Excellency, in pointing out that the suspension of negotiations with the British and the shutdown of the Iranian oil industry has created a serious situation in Iran, has stated that if a satisfactory conclusion is not achieved within 15 days from the date on which a proposal is submitted to the British Government the Iranian Government intends to cancel the residence permits held by the British and experts now residing in the southern oilfields.

As I have pointed out to Your Excellency, the proposals which I have set forth in your communication do not represent a departure from the positions taken in the discussions in Tehran and the interests which appear to be the opposite. I believe that the problem which Iran and Great Britain are confronted can be settled through negotiations based upon recognition of the practical business and technical aspects of the oil industry and based upon mutual respect between the parties. Such a settlement, which would attain the aspirations for control of the oil industry within Iran, is, I am convinced, possible and feasible in accordance with the discussions which I had in Tehran and the comments I have made. However, I am concerned that my passing your communication to the British Government would militate against a settlement, particularly in view of the position taken regarding the expulsion of the British employees in Iran, a position which I believe will only further aggravate a very serious situation.

As a sincere friend of Iran, I earnestly hope that Your Excellency

Adjournment of discussion on pending draft resolutions until the International Court of Justice shall have ruled upon its own competence in the matter.

2. PROPOSALS FOR SETTLEMENT OF THE CONTROVERSY

Joint Message and Proposals From the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom to the Prime Minister of Iran, August 30, 1952²

To His Excellency
Dr. Mohammad Mossadegh,
Prime Minister of Iran

We have reviewed the messages from our two Embassies in Iran regarding recent talks with you, as well as your communication of August 7, 1952, to the British Government.³ It seems clear to us that to bring about a satisfactory solution to the oil problem will require prompt action by all three of our Governments. We are attaching proposals for action which our two Governments are prepared to take and which we sincerely hope will meet with your approval and result in a satisfactory solution. We are motivated by sincere and traditional feelings of friendship for the Iranian nation

¹ U.N. doc. S/INF/6, Mar. 4, 1952, p. 3. The decision was taken on a verbal proposal by the representative of France.

Upon the breakdown of the negotiations between the United Kingdom and Iran in September 1951, and the failure of Mr. Harriman's efforts at mediation, the United Kingdom requested the Security Council on Sept. 28, 1951, to take up its complaint that Iran had failed to comply with the "provisional measures" indicated by the International Court of Justice in its order of July 5, 1951. The Security Council decided on Oct. 1 to admit the item to its agenda, and considered the question between Oct. 15 and 19, 1951. The U.S. representative supported on Oct. 17 (Department of State Bulletin, Nov. 5, 1951, pp. 746-749) a draft resolution (S/2358/Rev. 2, Oct. 17, 1951) calling for the resumption of negotiations to resolve the differences in accordance with the principles of the U.N. Charter, and for the avoidance of any action which would have the effect of further aggravating the situation. When it became clear, on Oct. 19, that the seven votes necessary to pass the resolution would not be secured, the Council adopted the French proposal above. In its judgment of July 22, 1952, the Court decided that it did not have jurisdiction in the case, and stated that the "provisional measures" contained in its order of July 5, 1951, had lapsed with the issuance of the judgment. and people and it is our earnest desire to make possible an equitable solution of the present dispute.

HARRY S.

Proposals

1. There shall be submitted to the International Court the question of compensation to be paid in respect of the nationalization of the enterprise of the AIOC¹ in Iran, having regard to the position of the parties existing immediately prior to nationalization and to all claims and counterclaims of both parties.

2. Suitable representatives shall be appointed to represent the Iranian Government and the AIOC in negotiations for making arrangements for the flow of oil from Iran to world markets.

3. If the Iranian Government agrees to the proposals in the following two paragraphs, it is understood that (a) representatives of the AIOC will seek arrangements for the movement of oil abroad from Iran, and as agreements are reached upon price, and conditions of loading permit, appropriate payments will be made for such quantities of oil as can be moved; (b) Her Majesty's Government will relax restrictions on exports to Iran and on Iran's use of oil and (c) the United States Government will make an immediate grant of $10 million to the Iranian Government to assist in their oil problem.²

² On Sept. 3, 1952, the Secretary of State pointed out at a press conference that "the purpose of this grant would be to provide Iran with funds to term to assist that nation financially until flow of Iranian oil to world markets could be resumed" (Department of State Bulletin Sept. 15, 1952, p. 624). On Sept. 24, 1952, Prime Minister Mossadegh rejected the proposals of Anglo-Iranian Oil Company and made counter-proposals (ibid., Oct. 6, 1952, pp. 532-535). On Oct. 13, 1952, the American Ambassador at Tehran delivered to Prime Minister Mossadegh a message from the Secretary of State pointing out that the rejection of the proposals had been based on certain misunderstandings of the Anglo-American oil industry and correcting the misunderstandings concerning the management of the oil industry and the purchase of the oil produced (ibid., Oct. 13, 1952, pp. 532-535). On Oct. 7, 1952, Prime Minister Mossadegh replied saying that he had examined the explanations which were furnished with a view to removing the ambiguity of the joint message of Aug. 30, 1952, and that he had now authorized the British Foreign Secretary that plenipotentiary representatives of the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company be sent to Tehran to discuss the terms of the proposals of Sept. 24, 1952, if the British Government would pay for the departure of the plenipotentiary representatives a sum of 20 million pounds (ibid., Oct. 20, 1952, p. 624). There was no reply to this suggestion (ibid., Oct. 20, 1952, p. 624). The Department of State observed on Dec. 6, 1952, that a purchase of oil from Iran by American nationals or American firms was in the position of the U.S. Government that the decision on this point must be made by such individuals or firms as might be considering purchases. The matters involved were matters to be resolved by them (ibid., Dec. 15, 1952, p. 624).

3. IMPOSSIBILITY OF INCREASING ECONOMIC AID TO IRAN PENDING SETTLEMENT OF THE CONTROVERSY: Message
From the President of the United States to the Prime Minister of Iran, June 29, 1953¹

DEAR MR. PRIME MINISTER:

I have received your letter of May 28² in which you described the present difficult situation in Iran and expressed the hope that the United States might be able to assist Iran in overcoming some of its difficulties. In writing my reply which has been delayed until I could have an opportunity to consult with Mr. Dulles and Ambassador [Roy] Henderson, I am motivated by the same spirit of friendly frankness as that which I find reflected in your letter.

The Government and people of the United States historically have cherished and still have deep feelings of friendliness for Iran and the Iranian people. They sincerely hope that Iran will be able to maintain its independence and that the Iranian people will be successful in realizing their national aspirations and in developing a contented and free nation which will contribute to world prosperity and peace.

It was primarily because of that hope that the United States Government during the last two years has made earnest efforts to assist in eliminating certain differences between Iran and the United Kingdom which have arisen as a result of the nationalization of the Iranian oil industry. It has been the belief of the United States that the reaching of an agreement in the matter of compensation would strengthen confidence throughout the world in the determination of Iran fully to adhere to the principles which render possible a harmonious community of free nations; that it would contribute to the strengthening of the international credit standing of Iran; and that it would lead to the solution of some of the financial and economic problems at present facing Iran.

The failure of Iran and of the United Kingdom to reach an agreement with regard to compensation has handicapped the Government of the United States in its efforts to help Iran. There is a strong feeling in the United States, even among American citizens most sympathetic to Iran and friendly to the Iranian people, that it would not be fair to the American taxpayers for the United States Government to extend any considerable amount of economic aid to Iran so long as Iran could have access to funds derived from the sale of its oil and oil products if a reasonable agreement were reached with regard to compensation whereby the large-scale marketing of Iranian oil would opposed to the purchase by the United States Government of oil in the absence of an oil settlement.

There is also considerable sentiment in the United States to the effect that a settlement based on the payment of compensation for losses of the physical assets of a firm which has been nationalized would not be what might be called a reasonable settlement. An agreement to such a settlement might tend to weaken the trust between free nations engaged in friendly economic relations. Furthermore, many of my countrymen who have kept themselves informed regarding developments in this unfortunate dispute think that, in view of the emotions which have been aroused in Iran and the United Kingdom, efforts to determine by direct negotiation the amount of compensation due are more likely to increase misunderstanding than to promote understanding. They continue to hold the opinion that the most practicable and the fairest means of settling the question of compensation would be for that question to be referred to some neutral international body which could consider the merits of merit all claims and counter-claims.

I fully understand that the Government of Iran must take into account itself which foreign and domestic policies are likely to be the result. It is outrageous to Iran and to the Iranian people. In what I have said I am not trying to advise the Iranian Government on its policy. I am merely trying to explain why, in the circumstances, the Government of the United States is not presently in a position to agree to aid to Iran or to purchase Iranian oil.

In case Iran should so desire, the United States Government would like to be able to continue to extend technical assistance and economic aid on a basis comparable to that given during the past year.

I note the concern reflected in your letter at the present situation in Iran and sincerely hope that before it is too late the Government of Iran will take such steps as are in its power to prevent a further deterioration of that situation.

Please accept, Mr. Prime Minister, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

¹ A similar attitude was expressed in a statement by the Department of State on Mar. 20, 1952 (Department of State Bulletin, Mar. 31, 1952). The Secretary of State stated on July 28, 1953, that the growing activities of the Communist Party in Iran (the Tudeh Party) and the toleration of them by the Iranian Government were causing much concern to the United States and that these developments made it more difficult for the U.S. to continue its assistance (ibid., Aug. 10, 1953, p. 178). With the change of government in August 1953, and a more hopeful approach to a settlement, the U.S. responding to an appeal of Aug. 26, 1953, by the Prime Minister, G. M. Zahedi, announced on Sept. 5, 1953, that he was making available immediate assistance to Iran on an emergency basis. The Foreign Administration offered the Iranian Government, on Sept. 1, 1953, $400,000 for technical and economic aid during the 1954 fiscal year. This was accepted (ibid., Sept. 14, 1953, pp. 349-350).

4. SETTLEMENT OF THE CONTROVERSY: Joint Statement by the Government of Iran and the Oil Consortium, August 5, 1954¹

The Iranian Government, the National Iranian Oil Company and the negotiators representing a consortium of 8 oil companies have reached accord on necessary points of an agreement which will restore the flow of Iranian oil to world markets in substantial quantities. An essential part of the consortium agreement was settlement of the question of compensation to [the] Anglo-Iranian Oil Company. A separate announcement has been made in this respect.²

The agreement must now be put into proper legal form, approved by the Boards of Directors of the participating companies, and signed by the parties concerned. It will then be submitted for enactment as part of the law of Iran and for formal approval of the Shah. It is estimated that these requirements can be concluded in about two months, after which large volumes of Iranian oil will once again be loaded at Iran's great oil ports at Abadan and Bandar Mashur bound for the consuming and refining centers of the world. In the interim period, preparations for resumption of activities will commence.

Two operating companies will be formed to operate the oil fields and refinery. These companies will receive the necessary rights and powers from the government and the National Iranian Oil Company and exercise them on their behalf to the extent specified in the agreement. The consortium companies will pay the National Iranian Oil Company for all the oil required for export and sell the crude and products exported. Provision is made for the National Iranian Oil Company to take crude oil in kind, in lieu of payments, up to 12 percent of total exports. Products for consumption within Iran will be available to the National Iranian Oil Company at substantially their cost. The agreement covers a period of 25 years, with provisions for three 5-year extensions.

¹ Department of State Bulletin, Aug. 16, 1954, pp. 232-233. The statement was issued by Dr. Ali Amini, representing Iran, and Howard Page, chairman of the international consortium. For a separate statement by Mr. Page, see ibid., p. 233. The agreement became effective on Oct. 29, 1954. For a summary of the agreements among the companies forming the consortium, see ibid., Dec. 27, 1954, pp. 985-986.

Following the change of government in Iran (August 1953), the Secretary of State, in October 1953, sent Herbert Hoover, Jr., his adviser on problems dealing with worldwide petroleum affairs, to explore the Iranian oil situation (ibid., Oct. 26, 1953, p. 553). The Secretary of State remarked on Apr. 10, 1954, that the U.S. Government was taking satisfaction in the fact that negotiations would soon plication of Iranian tax laws it has been estimated that total direct income to Iran from increased scale of operations for the first 3 full years, following a starting up period of 3 months, will be 150 million pounds on the basis of present prices and costs. The estimated figure begin at 31 million pounds for the first full year of operation, increasing to 67 million pounds for the third.

The National Iranian Oil Company will continue to operate the Naft-I-Shah oil field and Kermanshah refinery to produce a part of Iran's own oil needs, and will continue to handle the distribution of oil products in Iran.

The National Iranian Oil Company will also be responsible for all facilities and services not directly a part of producing, refining and transportation operations of the operating companies. These will include such functions as industrial training, public transport, road maintenance and facilities such as housing, medical care and social welfare. The National Iranian Oil Company will be reimbursed for a major part of the cost of such facilities and services by the operating companies, with whom close cooperation will be maintained.

Production of crude oil from Iran, following a starting up period of three months, will be increased progressively, bringing total exports of crude and products to a minimum of eighty million cubic meters (70 million tons; 500 million barrels) for the first three year period. In addition some five million cubic meters will be produced for internal consumption. Following the third year it would be the policy of the consortium companies to continue taking quantities of crude oil which would reasonably reflect the supply and demand trend for Middle East crude oil, assuming favorable operating and economic conditions in Iran.

Large scale operations at the Abadan refinery will be resumed as quickly as possible. It is expected that, again following the initial period of three months a total of nearly 35 million cubic meters (30 million tons; 220 million barrels) of crude will be processed for export during the first three years of operation. Of this, some 15 million cubic meters (13 million tons; 94 million barrels) will be processed during the last three years, a rate which will once again establish Abadan's output as the largest in the Eastern Hemisphere, despite sharp increases in refinery capacity in that area during the last three years.

The two operating companies will be organized by the consortium and will carry on operations in Iran within a specified area. One of the companies will deal primarily with exploration and production the other with refining. The companies will be registered in Iran and have their management and operating headquarters there. They will be incorporated under the laws of the Netherlands. There will be seven directors of each company, two of whom will be named by Iran and five by the consortium. Operating data and records of the companies will be available to Iran and the National Iranian Oil Company.

The consortium is expected to consist of the Gulf Oil Corporation, Esso Vacuum Oil Company Incorporated, Standard Oil (New Jersey), Standard Oil Company California, the Texas Company, the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company, Compagnie Française de Petroles and Royal Dutch/Shell.

5. UNITED STATES GRATIFICATION OVER THE SETTLEMENT: Message From the President of the United States to the Shah of Iran, August 5, 1954¹

YOUR IMPERIAL MAJESTY: The important news that your Government, in negotiation with the British, French, Dutch and United States oil companies, has reached, in principle, a fair and equitable settlement to the difficult oil problem is indeed gratifying.

Your Majesty must take great satisfaction at the success of this significant phase in the negotiations to which you personally have made a valuable contribution. I am confident that implementation of this agreement, under Your Majesty's leadership, will mark the beginning of a new era of economic progress and stability for your country.

Like myself, all Americans have a deep concern for the well-being of Iran. With them I have watched closely your courageous efforts, your steadfastness over the past difficult years, and with them I too have hoped that you might achieve the goals you so earnestly desire. The attainment of an oil settlement along the lines which have been announced should be a significant step in the direction of the realization of your aspirations for your people.

There is concrete evidence of the friendship that exists between our two countries and of our desire that Iran prosper independently in the family of free nations. We have endeavored to be helpful in the form of economic and technical assistance and we are happy to have helped in finding a solution to the oil problem.

I can assure Your Majesty of the continued friendly interest of the United States in the welfare and progress of Iran, and of the admiration of the American people for your enlightened leadership.

With sincere best wishes for the health and happiness of Your Majesty and the people of Iran.

Cyprus

56. UNITED STATES HOPES FOR SETTLEMENT CYPRUS ISSUE AS BETWEEN GREECE AND TURKEY

From the Secretary of State to the Prime Minister Released September 18, 1955 ¹

I have followed with concern the dangerous deterioration of Turkish relations caused by the Cyprus question. Regardless of the causes of this disagreement, which are complex and numerous, the unity of the North Atlantic community, which is essential to our common security, must be restored without delay.

Since the time, almost a decade ago, when Communism first posed a serious threat to the free world, the close cooperation of Greece and Turkey has proved a powerful barrier to Communist ambitions in the eastern Mediterranean. Greek and Turkish troops fought valiantly, side by side, against Communist aggressors.

I cannot believe that in the face of this record of common effort, any problem will long disrupt the course of Greek-Turkish friendship. Nor can I believe that the unhappy events of the last two weeks will reverse policies of cooperation which we have followed for twenty-five years ago under the far-sighted leadership of King George II, Venizelos and Kemal Ataturk.

Since 1947 the United States has made very considerable efforts to assist Greece and Turkey to maintain their freedom and to achieve greater social and economic progress. We have extended our aid—and extend it now—because we believe that the friendship of Greece and Turkey constitutes a strong bulwark of the free world in a critical area.

If that bulwark should be materially weakened, the consequences could be grave indeed. I urge you therefore to make every effort to assure that the effectiveness of your partnership is not impaired by present disagreements.

I am confident that the spirit of close cooperation that has characterized the relations of Greece and Turkey have so often demonstrated in the past as fellow members of the United Nations, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, and the Balkan Alliance ² will enable you to transcend immediate differences in the interests of free world unity.

Kashmir

58. SUMMARY OF DEVELOPMENTS IN THE KASHMIR DISPUTE, 1947-1952 (Excerpt)³

When India and Pakistan attained independence and dominion status on August 15, 1947, the princely state of Jammu and Kashmir was one of about 560 such states whose status was left undetermined. Under the Indian Independence Act, these states could decide whether to join India or Pakistan. For most of these states, geographic proximity to one of the dominions, as well as preponderance of either Hindu or Moslem population, made the decision relatively easy.

¹ U.N. General Assembly, Official Records, Ninth Session, Supplement No. 2 (A/2890), p. 5. In support of the draft resolution in Committee I on Dec. 1 Ambassador Lodge stated that "prolonged consideration" of the Cyprus question in the United Nations "would only increase tensions and embitter national feeling at a time when the larger interests of all concerned are best served by strengthening existing solidarity among freedom-loving nations" (Department of State Bulletin, Jan. 3, 1955, pp. 31-32). For background discussion of this issue, see United States Participation in the United Nations: Report by the President to the Congress for the Year 1954 (Department of State publication 5769; 1955), pp. 58-62.

² The United States opposed the inscription of the Cyprus matter (item 58) on the agenda of the General Assembly in September 1955, both in the General Committee and in the Assembly. Ambassador Lodge stated in the General Committee on Sept. 21, among other things, that "the primary purpose of the United Nations is to encourage in every possible way the peaceful settlement of international disputes. We do not believe that the inscription of the Cyprus item . . . at this time will contribute toward that end" (Department of State Bulletin, Oct. 3, 1955, pp. 545-546). The General Committee decided at its 102d meeting, on Sept. 21, not to recommend the inclusion of item 58 in the agenda, and the General Assembly upheld the recommendation at its 521st plenary meeting on Sept. 23, 1955.

³ Article by Frank D. Collins, Department of State Bulletin, Oct. 27, 1952, pp. 663-667.

Since Kashmir lies between India and Pakistan and has a large population, it became the scene of armed conflict soon after independence.

In January 1948 the dispute was brought before the Security Council and in this month the Council established the United Nations Commission for India and Pakistan (UNCIP).¹ A year later it succeeded in obtaining the agreement of both India and Pakistan to a cease-fire and to the general principles under which a plebiscite plan for the withdrawal of the armed forces from the area and a plebiscite under U.N. auspices might be carried out. This plan was formalized in the "UNCIP resolution" of January 5, 1949. On March 21, 1949, the U.N. Secretary-General named Lord B. P. C. Acheson as administrator of the projected plebiscite. Chester W. Nimitz as administrator of the projected plebiscite was held under the terms of the January 5 resolution.

During 1949 and 1950 UNCIP,² Gen. Andrew G. L. Macdonald of Canada, acting under special temporary authority from the Security Council, and Sir Owen Dixon³ of Australia, UNCIP's successor to UNCIP, tried unsuccessfully to bring about a settlement. In January 1951 efforts of the London Conference of the Prime Ministers failed to break the impasse on the Kashmir issue. When the Security Council met on February 21, 1951, the United States joined the United Kingdom in submitting a joint resolution. The resolution provided for the appointment of a representative to succeed Sir Owen Dixon and instruct him to make appropriate modifications, and to present to India and Pakistan detailed plans for carrying out a plebiscite. The representative was directed to report to the Security Council 3 months after the end of negotiations with the governments on the subcontinent.

To accomplish this task the draft resolution authorized the representative to take into account such possibilities as: (1) the vision of U.N. Forces to facilitate demilitarization and the holding of a plebiscite; (2) the assignment to the loser in the plebiscite of the areas, contiguous to its frontier, in which the vote was overwhelmingly in the loser's favor; (3) different degrees of autonomy might be appropriate in different areas. Finally, the resolution urged upon both India and Pakistan to accept arbitration on the points which remained after their discussions with the representative and which the latter designated as points of dispute.

Both parties objected to certain parts of the resolution. India objected to the clause concerning boundary adjustments, which could mean a partial partition and was, in Pakistan's view, a travention of the January 5, 1949, agreement. India to a number of aspects of the resolution, particularly the provision for arbitration and for the possible entry of U.N. troops. As a result of the objections by both sides, the United States and the United Kingdom presented on March 21 a revised resolution which directed the U.N. representative to effect demilitarization on the basis of the January 5, 1949 resolution to which both parties had agreed. The new draft, however, retained in its preamble the original reference to the Kashmir Constituent Assembly and also included the arbitration provision. Pakistan accepted the resolution, but India rejected it. The Security Council approved the resolution (S/2017/Rev. 1) on March 30, 1951,¹ by a vote of 8 to 0 with three abstentions (India, Soviet Union, Yugoslavia).

On April 30 the Council appointed Dr. [Frank P.] Graham, former U.S. Senator from North Carolina, as U.N. representative for India and Pakistan. Thus began the most recent phase of the Kashmir negotiations. These negotiations fall into four periods, at the end of each of which Dr. Graham reported to the Security Council.

FIRST REPORT, JULY-OCTOBER 1951

On October 15 Dr. Graham submitted his first report to the Security Council.² When he arrived on the subcontinent in July he reported, he found an atmosphere of hostility. The press in both India and Pakistan had begun a barrage of charges and countercharges which had given rise to considerable tension. Dr. Graham decided to adopt the procedure of separate, informal conversations with officials of the two governments. On September 7 he submitted a 12-point draft proposal on demilitarization to the governments and requested their comments.³ He was able to obtain the agreement of the parties to four of the 12 points. (It should be mentioned that both parties had previously committed themselves to these four points under the January 5, 1949 agreement.) In addition to reaffirming their determination not to resort to force, to avoid warlike statements, and to observe the cease-fire the parties reaffirmed the acceptance of the principle that the question of the accession of the state of Jammu and Kashmir to India or Pakistan will be decided through the democratic method of a free and impartial plebiscite under U.N. auspices. The points of difference under the remaining eight proposals, according to Dr. Graham, centered around the period of demilitarization, the withdrawal of troops, the size of the forces to remain on each side of the cease-fire line, and the question of whether a date should be set for the formal induction of the Plebiscite Administrator. Dr. Graham reported that because of the situation pre-carried out at the seat of the Council. Dr. Graham said he be instructed to report to the Security Council a few weeks from the time negotiations were resumed.

On October 18 Dr. Graham made a statement to the Security Council¹ explaining his report and paying high tribute to Pakistan Prime Minister Liaquat Ali Khan, who had been in Pakistan 2 days earlier at Rawalpindi, Pakistan. Later in the month the Security Council moved to Paris, where discussions were resumed on November 10. At this meeting the United States joined the United Kingdom in sponsoring a resolution which noted with approval the basis for a program of demilitarization put forward by Pakistan and instructed him to continue his efforts to obtain an agreed demilitarization plan. In addition, the resolution instructed Dr. Graham to report to the Security Council within 6 weeks on his views on the problems confided to him. The resolution was adopted by a vote of 9 to 0 with two abstentions (India and U.S.S.R.).

SECOND REPORT, NOVEMBER-DECEMBER 1951

On December 18 Dr. Graham reported the results of his negotiations at Paris.³ He stated that his procedure had been to try to reach an agreement between the parties on the basis of proposals of September 7, 1951. Failing this, he had outlined each party's plans for demilitarization under the UNCIP plan of August 13, 1948,⁴ and January 5, 1949, in order to establish a basis of difference in interpretation and execution of those plans. These must be resolved before such demilitarization could be carried out.

Under the first point of that procedure Dr. Graham had indicated that to narrow the differences to two fundamental issues:

- (1) the minimum number of forces to be left on each side of the cease-fire line at the end of the demilitarization period;
- (2) the date on which the Government of India would be authorized to induct the Plebiscite Administrator to be inducted into office.

On December 7 Dr. Graham presented to the parties a list of questions and questionnaires relating to these issues. Informal discussions were held separately with the two delegations by Gen. Sir John Wood, U.N. military adviser to Dr. Graham. Dr. Graham reported that the disparity between the number and character of the forces proposed by each party proposed should be left at the end of the demilitarization period had been so wide that agreement on the whole plan had not been reached at that stage. In addition, agreement on the question concerning the date of induction of the Plebiscite Administrator had not been reached.

that the Plebiscite Administrator should be appointed as soon as conditions in the state permitted of a start being made with the arrangements for carrying out a plebiscite. The Pakistan Government had attached much importance to the appointment of the Plebiscite Administrator to office "as much in advance of the final date of demilitarization as possible."

Dr. Graham pointed out that agreement had been obtained on more of his 12 demilitarization proposals of September 7, 1951, and suggested some revisions of the 4 remaining points, i. e., proposals 5, 6, 7, and 10. Of these the most significant was his revision of proposal 7 on troop numbers; he suggested that ". . . there will remain on each side of the cease-fire line the lowest possible number of armed forces based in proportion on the number of armed forces existing on each side of the cease-fire line on January 1, 1949."

The Security Council resumed its hearings on January 17, 1953. On that date Dr. Graham formally submitted his report and after discussing his negotiations made a strong plea to India and Pakistan to arrive at a settlement of this long standing dispute. He stated his view that agreement on proposals 7 and 10 (troop numbers and date of appointment of the Plebiscite Administrator) would be the linchpin binding all 12 proposals together in an effectively integrated program and would prepare the way for the plebiscite. "The plebiscite," Dr. Graham stated, "would keep the promise made to the people of Jammu and Kashmir, who are worthy of the right of their own self-determination through a free, secure, and impartial plebiscite." (U.N. Doc. S/PV 570.) He remarked further:

The people of Jammu and Kashmir through a free and impartial plebiscite would signal through the darkness of these times a ray of hope that not by bullets but by ballots, not through the conflict of armies but through cooperation of peoples, the enduring way for people to determine their own destiny and way of life . . . On the subcontinent of India and Pakistan today, the place, the time, the opportunity and the leadership have met in one of the great junctures of human history for the possible weal or woe of the peoples of the world.

Immediately following the introductory statement by Dr. Graham Jacob Malik, the U.S.S.R. representative, indicated he would like to speak briefly. His statement came after the Soviet Union had maintained a virtual silence for 4 years in the Security Council on the Kashmir question. After noting that the United States and the United Kingdom had been particularly active in the Council's consideration of the Kashmir issue, Mr. Malik stated:

What is the reason why the Kashmir question is still unsettled and why the plans put forward by the United States of America and the United Kingdom in connection with Kashmir have proved fruitless from the point of view of a settle-with Kashmir is to secure the introduction of Anglo-American troops into the territory of Kashmir and convert Kashmir into an Anglo-American military and strategic base. . . .

The United States of America and the United Kingdom are taking to exclude a settlement of the question of the status of Kashmir by referendum and unconstrained declaration by the people of Kashmir themselves. On October 1950 it became known that the General Council of the "All India Kashmir National Conference" had adopted a resolution recommending the convening of a Constituent Assembly for the purpose of determining the boundaries and affiliations of the State of Jammu and Kashmir, the United States of America and the United Kingdom immediately interfered in the matter so that the people of Kashmir to decide their own future and determine the future of their country independently. They hastened to foist upon the Security Council a resolution in which it was stated that the convening of a Constituent Assembly for Kashmir and any action that Assembly might attempt to take to determine the future shape and affiliation of Kashmir or any part thereof would be a violation of the disposition of Kashmir. . . .

The U.S.S.R. representative concluded by proposing the following solution:

The U.S.S.R. Government considers that the Kashmir question can be solved successfully only by giving the people of Kashmir an opportunity to decide the question of Kashmir's constitutional status by themselves, without outside interference. This can be achieved if that status is determined by a Constituent Assembly democratically elected by the Kashmir people. . . .

Both the U.S. and U.K. representatives challenged the Soviet charges. Sir Gladwyn Jebb, the U.K. representative, stated:

I should merely like to say that the really extraordinary fantasies which are entertained by our Soviet friend and colleague in regard to the Kashmir question are typical, as I think, of the whole Soviet approach to international relations. Whatever the dispute before us, the first thing to do is, it seems to me, to ask how and why it is part of an anti-Soviet plot designed merely to advance the interests of the ruling circles of the United States and of the United Kingdom. The object of clamping down an Anglo-American domination or dictatorship on the suffering world. Any attempt by the Security Council to deal with the Kashmir question by applying principles of reason must, unless, of course, it is conceived in the light of the Soviet Government, be viewed in the light of those general principles. The Soviet Government, by such a process of reasoning, if it can indeed be so termed, the Soviet Government comes to the conclusion that, for instance, the Kashmir question has been invented and subsequently carefully fostered by the United States and the Americans for the one end of turning Kashmir into an Anglo-American camp full of imperialistic troops destined for an eventual invasion of the Soviet Union.

No doubt there are people who can be persuaded to believe these things. There are people who could believe that, for instance, a United Nations Commission to study the habit of penguins could only be an indication of the totalitarism or on a Marxist society. It is possible to believe these things. Indeed, can always be found who will believe anything. But when we accuse our friend, Mr. Graham, of being the secret agent of the Soviet Union, well, that should, I think, cause even the most ingenuous to sit back and

The U.S. representative, Ambassador Ernest A. Gross, associated himself with the remarks of the U.K. representative and further observed:

The attacks on Mr. Graham do not merit a reply and do not require a denial. The dispute between India and Pakistan regarding Kashmir is one which my Government earnestly hopes to see settled in accordance with United Nations principles and in accordance with agreements already reached between the parties. I think it would serve no useful purpose to continue the debate at this time. The business before the Security Council, as the representative of the United Kingdom has already said, is to give the most careful and respectful consideration to the report which has just been given to us by the representative of the Council. My Government will give it the attention which it deserves.

At the meeting of the Security Council on January 30 Sir Zafrullah Khan, Pakistan's Foreign Minister, spoke in part as follows:

At the meeting of the Security Council held on January 17, 1952, a representative of the U.S.S.R. referred to certain press reports relating to the granting of military bases in Kashmir to the United States. I wish to state clearly and with authority that these reports relied upon by him for his statement are utterly false and without any foundation whatsoever. We have neither been asked for nor have we offered, any military or other bases to the U.S. or any other power. . . .

Throughout this controversy, India, Pakistan, and the Security Council have been agreed that the question of the accession of Jammu and Kashmir to Pakistan or India should be decided through the democratic method of a free and impartial plebiscite. This fundamental principle is embodied in the preamble to the Security Council Resolution of April 21, 1948,¹ and in clause I of the Commission's Resolution of January 5, 1949. (U.N. doc. S/PV 571.)

Sir Gladwyn then stated his Government's view that Dr. Graham should pay a further visit to the subcontinent to attempt to bring about a solution of the two outstanding points of difference. Ambassador Gross supported this suggestion, as did the majority of the Security Council members.

The following day, the Indian representative, Mr. Motilal Setalvad, expressed India's willingness to continue the discussions under Dr. Graham's direction and stated:

I have already declared that India is anxious to settle the Kashmir dispute quickly and peacefully. This is so not only because India is anxious that the people of Jammu and Kashmir should have an opportunity, without further delay, to determine freely their own future, but also because we most earnestly desire to prepare the way for firm and lasting friendship with our neighbor Pakistan. It is no less to our interest than to the interest of Pakistan, and to the interest of the world, that these two countries which have so much in common should live side by side in complete amity, each fully sovereign but both fully and wholeheartedly in cooperation in the pursuit of the common task of peace and progress. This is no language of convention but the free expression of a deep and sincere sentiment. It seems to be the sense of the Council that the negotiations should be continued under the auspices of the U.N. representative

Security Council that the U.N. representative, acting under the resolutions of March 30, 1951,¹ and November 10, 1951,² was authorized without any new decision by the Council to continue his efforts to fulfill his mission and submit his report, which the Council hoped would be final within 2 months. The Soviet representative objected to this decision and indicated that "if such a proposal or conclusion is submitted to a vote the delegation of the Soviet Union will abstain."

THIRD REPORT, DECEMBER 1951-APRIL 1952

Following this Security Council debate and some discussions in Paris with the parties, Dr. Graham departed for New Delhi, where he arrived on February 29 and remained until March 25. His third report was submitted to the Security Council on April 22, 1952.³

At New Delhi Dr. Graham continued his previous procedure of separate negotiations with the parties, having concluded that a meeting with representatives of the two Governments was inadvisable before sufficient preliminary agreement had been reached to insure positive results from a joint conference. This round of negotiations had two purposes: To assist the parties in removing the obstacles still blocking agreement on the proposals submitted to them and to obtain, if possible, further withdrawals of troops from the state of Jammu and Kashmir on both sides of the cease-fire line.

He reported that the Government of India maintained its position concerning the minimum number of forces to be left on each side of the cease-fire line at the end of the period of demilitarization, i. e., 21,000 regular Indian army forces plus 6,000 state militia, on the Indian side and, on the Pakistan side, a force of 4,000 men normally resident in Azad Kashmir territory, half of whom should be followers of Azad Kashmir. The Indian Government, Dr. Graham stated, considered that the questions of a definite period for demilitarization and of a date for the induction into office of the Plebiscite Administrator could be settled without difficulty, provided agreement was reached on the scope of demilitarization and the number of forces to remain at the end of the demilitarization period.

Pakistan, Dr. Graham stated, accepted the four remaining points of his 12-point demilitarization proposals, i. e., 5, 6, 7, and 10, with certain qualifications regarding the character of the forces to be demilitarized. In his view the demilitarization of the state had reached a stage at which further reductions of troops were directly related to the preparation of a plebiscite. Accordingly, he deemed it necessary that the Plebiscite Administrator-designate should be associated with him in his studies and the consideration of common problems. Dr. Graham also stated that the parties should be encouraged to continue their negotiations in the future.

(a) resolving the remaining difficulties on the 12 proposals submitted to the parties, with special reference to the number of forces to be left on each side of the cease-fire line at the end of the period of demilitarization, and

(b) the general implementation of the UNCIP resolutions of August 13, 1948 and January 5, 1949.

FOURTH REPORT, MAY-SEPTEMBER 1952

Dr. Graham, in a letter dated May 29, 1952, informed the President of the Security Council that, in agreement with the Government of India and Pakistan, the negotiations on the question of the status of Jammu and Kashmir had been renewed and that at the appropriate moment he would report to the Council on the outcome of the fourth phase of negotiations.

His fourth report, submitted on September 16, detailed the recent round of negotiations held at New York and Geneva.¹ He had first attempted to bridge the remaining differences between the parties by proposing bracketed figures of 3,000 to 6,000 armed forces on Pakistan's side and 12,000 to 18,000 on the Indian side to break the deadlock on the number of troops. As he was unable to obtain agreement on this suggestion, he submitted another draft proposal on September 12 which fixed the figures at 6,000 and 18,000 excluding Gilgit and Northern Scouts on the Pakistan side and the state militia on the Indian side. Pakistan accepted this proposal, with certain reservations; India did not.

Concluding that he could not obtain agreement on fixed figures, Dr. Graham decided it might be possible for the two Governments to agree on certain principles which could serve as criteria for fixing the number of forces in a conference of civil and military representatives of both sides. Instead of including a fixed troop quantum, his new proposal, presented on September 4, provided that the minimum number of forces to be maintained on each side of the cease-fire line be defined as those "required for the maintenance of law and order and of the cease-fire agreement with due regard to the freedom of the plebs to secede." In the case of India, the proposal added the phrase "with due regard to the security of the state" and expanded the term "forces" to include "Indian forces and state armed forces."

Dr. Graham reported the following reaction of the parties to the proposal: India, although it believed that the proposal contained "the germs of a settlement," indicated it could not accept any equating of its responsibilities with those of the local authorities on the Pakistan side of the cease-fire line and insisted that the defense of the entire state is the concern of India. Pakistan objected to certain clauses in the proposals which it suggested should be eliminated to avoid the Administrator, a matter which he termed "the heart of the int program for demilitarization and a plebiscite." He concluded by expressing the view that to reach an agreement on a plan of demilitarization it is necessary either:

(a) to establish the character and number of forces to be left on each side of the cease-fire line at the end of the period of demilitarization; or

(b) to declare that the forces to remain on each side of the cease-fire line at the end of the period of demilitarization should be determined in accordance with the requirements of each area, and, accordingly, principles or criteria should be established which would serve as guidance for the civil and military representatives of the Governments of India and Pakistan in the meeting contemplated in the Provisional Clause of the revised proposals.

59. FIFTH REPORT BY THE UNITED NATIONS REPRESENTATIVE FOR INDIA AND PAKISTAN,¹ MARCH 27, 1951 (Excerpts)²

1. In previous reports and statements to the Security Council the United Nations Representative has reviewed the background and content and the steps in the acceptance of the twelve proposals for a plan of demilitarization of the State of Jammu and Kashmir submitted to the Governments of India and Pakistan on 7 September 1948. In his report of 1951.

2. This report should be read in connexion with the first (S/2383 Corr. 1), second (S/2448), third (S/2611) and fourth (S/2783) reports of the United Nations Representative.

3. We shall in this report not review again the twelve proposals as a whole but shall concentrate on proposal seven. Differences between proposal seven continue on two issues (1) the number and character of the forces to be left on the two sides of the cease-fire line at the end of the period of demilitarization. In his efforts to bring the two Governments to reach an agreement the United Nations Representative has made six suggestions for the negotiation of the parties, including the latest exploratory suggestions made in October 1951. In reviewing these suggestions and the present situation the report will be in five parts.

4. Part I will review the suggestions regarding proposal seven. Part II will point out the values of the induction of the Plebiscite Administrator into office at an early fixed time; Part III will review the assurances and elucidations regarding the 13 August 1948 Declaration of the United Nations Representative. Part IV will review the suggestions regarding the part V will emphasize the importance to the people of the State, the two nations, and the world of an agreement on the Kashmir dispute.

IV

A. CONVERSATIONS IN NEW YORK PRELIMINARY TO THE CONFERENCE IN GENEVA

4. These conversations were participated in, on the part of India by Mr. Rajeshwar Dayal, Minister, Permanent Representative to the United Nations, and Mr. B. Rajan, Adviser; and, on the part of Pakistan, by Mr. Mohammed Zafrulla Khan, Minister for Foreign Affairs, Mr. A. A. Khan, Adviser.

5. On 23 December 1952, following the presentation by the United Kingdom and the United States of America of the joint draft resolution [S/2839], the Security Council at the 611th meeting adopted resolution [S/2883] which provided, inter alia, that:

"The Security Council

"Endorses the general principles on which the United Nations Representative has sought to bring about agreement between the Governments of India and Pakistan;

"Urges the Governments of India and Pakistan to enter into immediate negotiations under the auspices of the United Nations Representative for India and Pakistan in order to reach agreement on the specific number of forces to remain on each side of the cease-fire line at the end of the period of demilitarization, this number to be between 3,000 and 6,000 armed forces remaining on the Pakistan side of the cease-fire line and between 12,000 and 18,000 armed forces remaining on the Indian side of the cease-fire line, as suggested by the United Nations Representative in his proposal of 16 July 1952 (annex III of S/2783) such specific numbers to be arrived at bearing in mind the principles of criteria contained in paragraph 7 of the United Nations Representative's proposal of September 1952 (annex VIII of S/2783).

"Requests the Governments of India and Pakistan to report to the Security Council not later than thirty days from the date of the adoption of this resolution; and further requests the United Nations Representative for India and Pakistan to keep the Security

The Government of India is not prepared to be a party to talks on the basis suggested in paragraph 7 of the draft resolution. With these explicit reservations, however, the Government of India would, in line with its readiness to explore all avenues towards a peaceful settlement, be prepared to join in any talks in connexion with this dispute. If the Council, in its wisdom, still considers it useful or necessary to proceed with the draft resolution we can only profoundly regret its decision.

(b) At another meeting of the Security Council held on 10 January 1952 [610th meeting], Mr. Zafrulla Khan, the representative of Pakistan, stated inter alia:

"I should like to state, once again, that we are prepared to move forward on the basis of the draft resolution now before the Security Council, subject to the suggestions which I made when the draft was first introduced and which might improve the situation, as well as the desirability of reaching an agreement between the two sides."

37. The United Nations Representative invited the representatives of India and Pakistan to meet on 12 January 1953 in the United Nations Headquarters in New York, in order to ascertain attitudes towards a renewal of the negotiations. At that meeting and in those that followed it was evident that whereas the Government of Pakistan was prepared to comply with the resolution of the Security Council of 23 December 1952 and to enter into immediate negotiations on that basis, the Government of India remained unwilling to accept the resolution as the basis for the resumption of negotiations. However, the representative of India confirmed that India was prepared "to consider avenues of peaceful negotiations which do not violate the basic principles and standards of the two resolutions of the UNCIP".

38. Following upon these conversations, the Governments of India and Pakistan, on 23 January 1953, agreed that a meeting of the representatives of the two Governments at ministerial level should be held under the auspices of the United Nations Representative in Geneva, India and Pakistan in the European Office of the United Nations, beginning 4 February 1953, for the purpose of continuing the negotiations,

"... on the basis of the UNCIP's resolutions of 13 April 1948 and 5 January 1949, bearing in mind the assurances, recommendations and elucidations given to the Governments of India and Pakistan by the UNCIP. This basis for the resumption of the negotiations will be without prejudice to a further consideration,

B. CONFERENCE IN GENEVA FROM 4 TO 19 FEBRUARY 1953

9. The Conference took place in Geneva from 4 to 19 February 1953.
10. The delegations of India and Pakistan were composed as follows:

India:

Sir Girja Shankar Bajpai, Ambassador, Governor of Bombay Leader

Mr. D. P. Dhar, Adviser

Mr. V. Shankar, Adviser

Mr. J. Kidwai, Adviser

Pakistan:

Mr. Mohammed Zafrulla Khan, Minister for Foreign Affairs
Leader

Mr. Aftab A. Khan, Adviser

Major-General K. H. Shakh, Senior Military Adviser

Lieut. Colonel Mohammed Iqbal Khan, Junior Military Adviser

1. The Conference in Geneva may be divided into two different stages as follows:

1) Consideration of the UNCIP resolutions of 13 August 1948 and 5 January 1949

2. The first meeting of the Conference took place on 4 February 1953 and was confined to discussion of the procedure to be followed. The United Nations Representative made a statement [see annex II to this report]¹ in which he stated, inter alia:

"I should like to propose that we start with the examination of the resolution of 13 August 1948, part by part. In this way we may determine to what extent the resolution has already been implemented, and define, as completely as possible, the obstacles which have until now impeded the implementation of those parts which have not yet been carried into effect. I hope that with regard to each of such obstacles it will be possible for the Governments concerned to indicate the conditions under which the obstacles might be removed."

3. It was agreed that (a) the discussion would start with the consideration of part I (Cease-fire order) of the resolution of the UNCIP of 13 August 1948, followed by part II (Truce agreement) of that resolution, and (b) the discussion of part II would be initiated with consideration of paragraph A, sub-paragraphs 1 and 2, and paragraph B, sub-paragraphs 1 and 2, and then, if agreement were reached on those points, examination of paragraph A, sub-paragraph 3, and paragraph B, sub-paragraph 3, would take place.

of 13 August 1948. The discussion was confined to paragraph A, sub-paragraphs 1 and 2, and paragraph B, sub-paragraphs 1 and 2 which read as follows:

UNCIP's resolution of 13 August 1948

"PART II

"Truce agreement

" . . .

"1. As the presence of troops of Pakistan in the territory of the State of Jammu and Kashmir constitutes a material change in the situation since it was represented by the Government of Pakistan before the Security Council, the Government of Pakistan agrees to withdraw its troops from that State.

"2. The Government of Pakistan will use its best endeavours to secure the withdrawal from the State of Jammu and Kashmir of tribesmen and Pakistani nationals not normally resident therein who have entered the State for the purpose of fighting.

" . . .

"B

"1. When the Commission shall have notified the Government of India that the tribesmen and Pakistani nationals referred to in part II, A, 2 hereof have withdrawn, thereby terminating the situation which was represented by the Government of India to the Security Council as having occasioned the presence of Indian forces in the State of Jammu and Kashmir, and further, that the Pakistani forces are being withdrawn from the State of Jammu and Kashmir, the Government of India agree to begin to withdraw the bulk of its forces from that State in stages to be agreed upon with the Commission.

"2. Pending the acceptance of the conditions for a final settlement of the situation in the State of Jammu and Kashmir the Indian Government will maintain within the lines existing at the moment of the cease-fire the minimum strength of its forces which in agreement with the Commission are considered necessary to assist the local authorities in the observance of law and order. The Commission will have observers stationed where it deems necessary."

45. The positions of India and Pakistan in regard to the implementation of this part of the resolution were summarized by the two repre-part, and that their numbers, equipment and efficiency constituted a threat to the security of the State. The implementation, therefore, by Pakistan of A. 1 and 2 of Part II of the resolution will not materially diminish this threat which is aggravated by the ease with which, owing to the proximity of Pakistan's military cantonments, these forces could be quickly reinforced by the Pakistan army. So long as agreement regarding the complete disbanding and disarming of the Azad Kashmir forces is not reached, a truce agreement cannot create 'the conditions for a final settlement of the situation in the State of Jammu and Kashmir'. India is, therefore, unable to accept any reduction of its present forces except as part of an overall arrangement which includes not only the withdrawal of Pakistan troops, tribesmen and Pakistan nationals not normally resident in the State who have entered for the purpose of fighting but also agreement on the measures to be adopted for the complete disbanding and disarming of the Azad Kashmir forces" (see annex IV, appendix).¹

"It will be seen that under the resolution the withdrawal of Pakistan troops is contingent upon the withdrawal of the 'bulk' of the Indian Army (clause B (1)). The UNCIP had explained that 'synchronization of the withdrawal of the armed forces of the two Governments will be arranged between the respective High Commands and the Commission'. (See paragraph 10 of appendix I to the Commission's letter dated 27th August 1948 to the Foreign Minister of Pakistan).

"It was reaffirmed by the Pakistan Delegation on 5 February 1953 that once a satisfactory truce agreement based on the above principles was arrived at, the Government of Pakistan would proceed to fulfill all the obligations that devolved on it.

"The problem thus resolved itself into one of securing India's agreement to withdraw the 'bulk' of its forces from the State of Jammu and Kashmir as provided for in Part II of the 13 August 1948 resolution" [see annex V, memorandum, paras. 4 and 5].¹

46. The results of the meetings and conversations with the representatives separately on this approach led the United Nations Representative to the conclusion that agreement was not possible at that time between the two Governments on a truce agreement based solely on part II of the 13 August 1948 resolution and it appeared to him that the same difficulties that existed as early as 1949 were still the main obstacles in the way of carrying out the commitment embodied in part II.

47. The United Nations Representative did not feel he could continue this approach as the figures of troops proposed by the Government of India for the withdrawal of the bulk of their Army were not such as he could sponsor with Pakistan; nor were the figures suggested by Pakistan negotiable with India.

48. It was clear to the United Nations Representative, that this approach would not lead to any fruitful result and, in accordance with the terms of reference agreed upon between the two Governments for the Conference, further consideration of the twelve proposals ensued.

(2) Further consideration of the twelve proposals

49. As the United Nations Representative has pointed out and as it was borne out in the last discussions in the Security Council, the main problem under the programme of demilitarization was the question dealt with under paragraph 7 of his twelve proposals, that is to say the number and character of forces to remain on each side of the cease-fire line at the end of a period of demilitarization.

50. The United Nations Representative, having met separately with the representatives of India and Pakistan to discuss with each their positions on this important matter, presented on 14 February 1951 to the two representatives for discussion, proposals [see annex I to this report]¹ which contained, inter alia, in paragraph 7 specific figures for the forces on each side of the cease-fire line at the end of the period of demilitarization. The revised text of paragraph 7 appears in annex II.

51. The positions of the representatives of India and Pakistan on these proposals were set forth in their communications of 17 February 1951 [annexes IV and V to this report].¹

[For the position of India, see annex IV, memorandum.]

[For the position of Pakistan, see annex V, memorandum, para. 9.]

52. After thorough consideration of these communications and further conversations with the representatives of India and Pakistan the United Nations Representative felt that there was no ground left at that stage on which to continue the conference and therefore, in agreement with the two representatives, he decided to conclude it.

V. IN VIEW OF THE CONTINUING DISAGREEMENT, IT IS TIMELY AGAIN TO RECALL THE VALUE OF AN AGREEMENT TO THE PEOPLE OF (A) THE STATE, (B) THE TWO NATIONS AND (C) THE WORLD.

A. Values to the People of the State

53. The people of the State of Jammu and Kashmir have waited for a long time for the fulfilment of their just aspirations.

historic state. Renewed physical and spiritual energies would be released by an agreed settlement of this dispute.

54. The meaning of this new freedom would shine across the earth from the top-most roof of the world, brightening the lives of the people in the hills and valleys, fields and forests, the homes and schools, mosques and temples, the shops and workplaces, beckoning near and far to all people struggling to be free.

B. Values to the People of the Two Nations

55. An agreement would have many positive values to India and Pakistan:

(1) The two Governments, without prejudice to their conceptions and claims, would by the reconciliation of their long maintained differences over Kashmir, take a decisive and co-operative step forward, rather than continuing to the point of possible catastrophe, a disagreement over the ways for the carrying out of these four-year-old agreements which provide for the determination by the people of Jammu and Kashmir of their relation to India and Pakistan.

(2) The dispute over Kashmir would be settled by a constructive peace and not by force of arms or the attrition of years, with their attendant international bitterness and their running sore drawing off the higher interests and energies of two peoples.

(3) Settlement of the Kashmir dispute might contribute to the settlement of the disputes over evacuee property and water ways, with all the meaning of these steps to the morale, and the productive programmes of these historic peoples, most ancient on the earth, yet youngest in the hopes and dreams of their new liberation, and most resolute in the faith and courage of their dedicated leadership.

C. Values to the People of the World

56. The universal yearning of the people for peace is today confronted with the high potentials of the world for war. The people of the sub-continent have an unprecedented opportunity for providing the leadership, setting the example and mayhap turning the direction of human affairs, away from the tendencies to self-destruction, to the ways of self-determination, peace and co-operation. The settlement of the Kashmir dispute, with its implications for the 400,000,000 people of the sub-continent, might set in motion the Kashmir and thereby light a torch along the difficult path of the people's pilgrimage toward peace.

8. Out of the East, the cradle of civilizations and the home of great spiritual faiths, would come again the example to the nations and the call to all peoples for demilitarization, self-determination, and co-operation in great programmes for education, health, production and peace on all the earth.

[Negotiations concerning the disposition of Kashmir were subsequently conducted bilaterally between Pakistan and India without the benefit of the presence of a United Nations Representative.]

Goa

60. PEACEFUL SETTLEMENT OF THE GOA CONTROVERSY Statement by the Secretary of State at a News Conference, August 2, 1955 ¹

At his news conference on August 2 Secretary Dulles was asked if he would comment on the tension over the Portuguese colony of Goa on the west coast of India since India and Portugal have broken off relations over the dispute and some members of the Indian Parliament have demanded limited war. In reply, the Secretary made the following statement:

The United States is concerned with tension in that area as it is with tension in any area. It has always been our policy to favor the settlement of disputes by peaceful means. That is, of course, the principle which is expressed in the charter of the United Nations. That applies to Goa as well as to any other place in the world. We are pleased to note that, as I recall, Prime Minister Nehru affirmed that principle for his own Government, and I am confident that that is also the view that will be taken by the Government of Portugal.

61. DEVELOPMENTS IN THE GOA CONTROVERSY: Transcript of a News Conference of the Secretary of State, December 6, 1955 (Excerpts) ²

Q. Mr. Secretary, did you say "province" or "colony"?

A. Province.

Q. Mr. Secretary, in connection with Goa, is there any question that the NATO commitment could possibly cover Goa or any of the other Portuguese possessions in Asia or in that part of the world?

A. That part of the world is definitely outside of the North Atlantic Treaty area.

Q. Mr. Secretary, in your statement in connection with the visit of the Portuguese Foreign Minister and your reference to the Portuguese provinces¹ were you attempting to give support of the United States to the Portuguese position in the controversy with India, or just what was your purpose in making that reference?

A. Well, you will recall that in an earlier statement, which I made, I think the early part of August² I indicated the interest of the United States in a peaceful solution of the problem. The statement which was issued here the other day was primarily a statement directed against the introduction of hate and prejudice into a situation which needs to be dealt with in a spirit of calm. We did not take, or attempt to take, any position on the merits of the matter. We did jointly express our concern at the atmosphere of hatred and prejudice which was sought to be created out of it.

Q. Mr. Secretary, you said that all the world regards it as a Portuguese province. India does not, apparently, and I wondered whether or not there had been any exchanges since this statement was made between your Government and the Indian Government.

A. I do not think that the Indian Government questions the status of these various portions of territory that are governed by Portugal as being under Portuguese law "provinces." I believe that they are such under the Constitution of Portugal and that the residents of these areas, which include not merely Goa but several others, such as Macao, have the full rights of Portuguese citizens. They can be elected to office and serve in Portugal and also elsewhere. I do not think there is any particular controversy about the status of those areas under the Constitution of Portugal.

Q. And you include Goa in that?

A. Goa, and there are two other points I think in India and there is the province of Macao off the China coast. I think their status is

A. Well, we did give it very careful consideration. The communiqué was not lightly issued. But we did feel that it was appropriate and right to indicate our attitude toward the emotionalism which was sought to be created by the Soviet rulers when they were in India. They were not in India at that time but had just left India. But the creation and fomenting of that atmosphere of hatred was something we felt we should express ourselves against.

Q. Mr. Secretary, are you saying, in effect, that the United States is against the settlement of this incident between Portugal and India on anything other than peaceful grounds but that the United States is not taking sides on how it should be settled?

A. As you know, we have been strongly advocating the principle that these situations should not be settled by force. That general approach has, I think, been sympathetically shared by Prime Minister Nehru. We have taken that position in relation to all these situations where there are national claims that conflict. We did not think that should be settled by force. And we had the feeling that the statements which were made by the Russians in relation to this matter were designed to create an atmosphere which might generate efforts to invoke force. That was our objection.

G. DEVELOPMENTS IN AFRICA

Morocco

2. RIGHTS OF AMERICAN NATIONALS IN MOROCCO Statement by the Department of State, June 29, 1951¹

In October 1950 the Government of the French Republic instituted proceedings against the United States in the International Court of Justice concerning the rights of American nationals in Morocco. The Court subsequently set time limits for the filing by the two Governments of written pleadings.² On March 1, 1951, the French Government filed its Memorial with the Court. The United States pursuant to which Morocco is represented in foreign affairs by France. The French Memorial, and the French application instituting proceedings, had not specified whether the French Government brought this case on behalf of France, on behalf of Morocco, or on behalf of both countries. The United States Government is concerned that both France and Morocco, as well as the United States, should be parties to the case before the International Court and should be bound by the Court's judgment. Since the French written pleadings had not made clear whether the moving party or parties were France, Morocco, or both, the United States Government sought in discussion with the French Government, beginning April 23, 1951, to have this point clarified prior to the filing of this Government's Counter-Memorial. However, representatives of the French Government informed representatives of the United States Government on June 9, 1951, that the French Government was not prepared to make any formal statement concerning the identity of the parties in whose name and on whose behalf the present case has been brought. The representatives of the French Government stated that the application and the Memorial did not require clarification. Accordingly, last week the United States Government filed with the Court, pursuant to its rules, a preliminary objection¹ asking the Court to rule on the identity of the party or parties which had instituted the proceedings and which would therefore be bound by the judgment of the Court in the case. The United States wishes to secure an authoritative determination by the Court on the rights of American nationals in Morocco pursuant to treaties governing the obligations between France, Morocco, and the United States. This Government is naturally anxious that the case proceed without unnecessary delays, and indeed regretted the necessity of filing a preliminary objection. It is hoped, nevertheless, that the issue raised in the preliminary objection may be disposed of promptly and that it will then be possible to proceed without delay to subsequent phases of the Moroccan case.²

² The French Government presented to the International Court of Justice on July 28, 1951, observations and submissions on the U.S. Government's preliminary objection of June 15, 1951 (ibid., Dec. 17, 1951, pp. 978-982). As a result of clarification which followed from an exchange of correspondence between the U.S. and French Governments and between the two Governments and the Court Registrar, the U.S. withdrew its preliminary objection in October 1951, upon the French Government's declaration that it was acting both on its own behalf and as the protecting power of Morocco. The proceedings on the merits were then resumed upon filing by the U.S. of a counter-memorial on Dec. 20, 1951 (not printed). Following the filing of a French reply on Feb. 15, 1952, a U.S. rejoinder was filed on Feb. 22, 1952.

3. FREE POLITICAL INSTITUTIONS FOR MOROCCO: United Nations General Assembly Resolution 612 (VII), December 1, 1952¹

The General Assembly,
Having debated the "Question of Morocco", as proposed by thirteen Member States in document A/2175,
Mindful of the necessity of developing friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples,
Considering that the United Nations, as a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of their common ends under the Charter, should strive towards removing any causes or factors of misunderstanding among Member States, thus reasserting the general principles of co-operation in the maintenance of international peace and security,

1. Expresses the confidence that, in pursuance of its proclaimed policies, the Government of France will endeavour to further the fundamental liberties of the people of Morocco, in conformity with the purposes and Principles of the Charter;
2. Expresses the hope that the parties will continue negotiations on an urgent basis towards developing the free political institutions of the people of Morocco, with due regard to legitimate rights and interests under the established norms and practices of the law of nations;
3. Appeals to the parties to conduct their relations in an atmosphere of goodwill, mutual confidence and respect and to settle their disputes in accordance with the spirit of the Charter, thus refraining from acts or measures likely to aggravate the present tension.

The General Assembly adopted a further resolution on the Morocco question on Dec. 17, 1954 (Res. 812 (IX)), which in substance expressed confidence that a satisfactory solution would be achieved by the two peoples concerned, and decided to postpone for the time being further consideration of this item; U. 4. RETURN OF SULTAN MOHAMMED BEN YOUSEF (MOHAMMED V) TO MOROCCO: Statement by the Department of State, November 18, 1955 ¹

The U.S. Government welcomes the return of Mohammed V to Morocco and on this anniversary of his accession to the throne wishes to extend warm and friendly greetings to him and the people of Morocco.

His Majesty's return marks a significant step in the development of cooperation between Morocco and France. While there are many problems yet to be worked out, the degree of concession and the friendly spirit which are demonstrated by both French and Moroccan leaders bode well for success in working out mutually satisfactory arrangements. It is earnestly hoped that such arrangements will lead to the peace and prosperity of the Moroccan community.

Tunisia

5. FREE POLITICAL INSTITUTIONS FOR TUNISIA: United Nations General Assembly Resolution 611 (VII), December 17, 1952 ²

The General Assembly,
Having debated the question proposed by thirteen Member States in document A/2152,³

Mindful of the necessity of developing friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples,

Considering that the United Nations, as a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of their common ends under the Charter, should strive towards removing any causes and factors of misunderstanding among Member States, thus reasserting the general principles of co-operation in the maintenance of international peace and security,

encies, the Government of France will endeavour to further the effective development of the free institutions of the Tunisian people, in conformity with the Purposes and Principles of the Charter;

2. Expresses the hope that the parties will continue negotiations on an urgent basis with a view to bringing about self-government for Tunisians in the light of the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations;

3. Appeals to the parties concerned to conduct their relations and settle their disputes in accordance with the spirit of the Charter and to refrain from any acts or measures likely to aggravate the present tension.¹

66. INTERNAL AUTONOMY FOR TUNISIA: Statement by the Secretary of State at a News Conference, August 10, 1955²

It is a source of much satisfaction to the United States that France and Tunisia have agreed upon conventions which provide a new framework for close cooperation between the French and Tunisian communities. It is significant that agreement on these conventions was reached through negotiations on a basis of equality between the parties directly concerned. France and Tunisia may take real satisfaction and pride in the achievement of this agreement.

The manner in which the agreement was reached, the impressive majorities by which both Houses of the French Parliament approved the conventions, and the extensive support they have received in Tunisia indicate a common realization of the need for continued cooperation.

The Franco-Tunisian negotiations demonstrate that mutually satisfactory progress can be made on such difficult problems if they are dealt with in time by the parties concerned with determination, realism and good will.

¹ The General Assembly adopted a resolution on Dec. 17, 1954 (813 (IX)), which noted with satisfaction the negotiations then in progress between the parties concerned, expressed confidence that the negotiations would bring about a satisfactory solution, and decided to postpone for the time being further consideration of this item; ibid., Ninth Session, Supplement No. 21 (A/2890), p. 5. *Algeria7. COMPETENCE OF THE UNITED NATIONS IN RELATION TO THE ALGERIAN QUESTION: Statement by the United States Representative at the United Nations¹ Before the General Assembly, September 30, 1955²

Mr. President, we believe the Assembly should bear in mind certain relevant factors as it decides whether to inscribe in its agenda the item entitled "The Question of Algeria."

Remembering that a vote on the inscription of an item is without prejudice to the ultimate question of the Assembly's competence, we must nevertheless in this particular case take into account the following:

Unlike Morocco and Tunisia, which are French protectorates, Algeria under French law is administratively an integral part of the French Republic.

We have noted in the explanatory memorandum (Document A/2924) which has been submitted by the members that have proposed the item respecting Algeria that it is stated that "there is an imperative need for negotiations between the Government of France and the true representatives of the Algerian people" and that consideration of the Algerian question by the General Assembly would facilitate a solution by making the need for negotiation evident. We have noted further that reference is made to the right of the people of Algeria to independence as well as to the concern of the international community in a prompt solution of the Algerian problem, a concern to which the French Government is claimed to have failed to respond. Now, Mr. President, this memorandum indicates clearly that what is sought by the sponsors of the item is the sanction of the General Assembly to a course of action intended to bring about fundamental changes in the composition of one of the General Assembly's own members, that is, the French Republic. If it doesn't mean that, it doesn't mean anything.

The United States believes that the proposed item, viewed in the context of this action proposed to be sought in the General Assembly, falls within the provisions of article 2, paragraph 7, of the United Nations Charter.³

Let me say this final word. There is grave danger to the future of the United Nations in taking up questions whose consideration would pletely clear in our own minds as to just exactly what it is that we are doing.

For these reasons, the United States will vote to support the recommendation of the General Committee that this item not be included in the agenda.

68. INAPPROPRIATENESS OF UNITED NATIONS CONSIDERATION OF THE ALGERIAN QUESTION: United Nations General Assembly Resolution 909 (X), November 25, 1955 ¹

The General Assembly

Decides not to consider further the item entitled "The question of Algeria" and is therefore no longer seized of this item on the agenda of its tenth session.

Libya

69. RECOGNITION OF THE UNITED KINGDOM OF LIBYA Statement by the Department of State, December 24, 1951 ²

The United Kingdom of Libya on December 24 proclaimed its independence pursuant to a United Nations General Assembly resolution of November 21, 1949,³ and the Government of the United States is extending full recognition to the new Government.

The American Consul General at Tripoli, Andrew G. Lynch, informed the Libyan Foreign Minister of the recognition of his Government by the United States and of the elevation of the American Consulate General to the status of legation. Mr. Lynch will serve as chargé d'affaires ad interim until a Minister arrives.

Following is the text of a message from President Truman to King Idris I of Libya on the declaration of the independence of Libya:

The announcement today that all powers have been transferred to the Government of Libya and that Your Majesty, as King, has proclaimed the independence of Libya is a significant fact of historical importance not only to the people of Libya but to the entire community of free nations. The United States of America strongly supported the decision of the General Assembly of the United Nations that Libya should become an independent state. Therefore, it is gratifying to observe the establishment of a Government in Libya in accordance with a con-achievement and to extend to Your Majesty and to the Libyan people the hand of friendship of the people of the United States of America.

Message from Secretary Acheson to the Foreign Minister of Libya

It was with great satisfaction and pleasure that I received your telegram today announcing the proclamation of Libyan independence. My Government deems it a great privilege to have been associated with United Nations action which assisted the Libyan people in determining a constitution and establishing an independent government. The Government of the United States of America looks forward with pleasure to the establishment of mutually beneficial and friendly relations with the Libyan Government, which it welcomes to its rightful place among the sovereign states of the world. I shall take the first opportunity on behalf of my government, to urge that immediate action be taken to admit Libya to membership in the United Nations. I send my heartiest congratulations to Your Excellency and to members of the Libyan Government and may I ask that you convey to His Majesty, King Idris I, and through him to the people of Libya, an expression of the friendship of the people of the United States of America.

Sudan

70. EGYPTIAN ABROGATION OF CONDOMINIUM IN THE SUDAN: Statement by the Secretary of State, October 10, 1951

The American Embassy in Cairo has confirmed that the Egyptian Prime Minister on October 8 introduced in the Egyptian Chamber of Deputies draft legislation which would abrogate the Anglo-Egyptian treaty of 1936² and the Anglo-Egyptian condominium agreements of 1899,³ which provide for joint Anglo-Egyptian administration of the Sudan.

The parties directly involved are the United Kingdom and Egypt and, in the case of the 1899 agreements, the Sudanese people as well. However, these matters are also of general concern to the free world for they affect the security and defense of the important Middle East area.

None of the agreements in question provides for abrogation. The U.S. Government believes that proper respect for international obligations requires that they be altered by mutual agreement rather than by unilateral action of one of the parties. Furthermore, it should be noted that procedures wholly in accord with such respect for international commitments have already been set in motion.

During past months, new proposals to be offered to Egypt have been states considers that the new proposals shortly to be presented to the Egyptian Government should serve as a sound basis for an agreement which will not only satisfy the interests of all parties concerned but also contribute to the defense of the free world in which the Middle East plays such an important role.

1. ANGLO-EGYPTIAN AGREEMENT ON THE SUDAN: Note From the Secretary of State to the Foreign Minister of Egypt February 14, 1953¹

The United States is gratified that an agreement on the Sudan has been arrived at by Egypt and the United Kingdom.² This is a truly important occasion. It affords an opportunity for me to express my Government's pleasure at the spirit in which these difficult negotiations were carried out.

My Government trusts that the same spirit of good will and cooperation will characterize the transitional period preceding the decision by the Sudanese people of their future status. The amicable resolution of this long outstanding question goes far toward creating an atmosphere of mutual understanding and trust in the Near East which can only result in great benefits for all the nations of the free world.

My Government continues to follow with interest and sympathy the progressive attitude and energetic efforts of the Government of General Naguib to meet and overcome the internal problems which face the Egyptian people. The United States wishes the Egyptian Government every success in its efforts.

2. UNITED STATES PARTICIPATION IN THE MIXED ELECTORAL COMMISSION FOR THE SUDAN: Statement by the Department of State, March 23, 1953 (Excerpt)³

In reply to requests received from the Governments of Egypt and the United Kingdom, the Government of the United States has agreed to participate on the Mixed Electoral Commission for the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan. Mr. Warwick Perkins, a Foreign Service Career Officer of Class One, has been nominated as United States representative on the Commission. Mr. Perkins departed for Khartoum on March 19, 1953, and has been accorded by the President the personal rank of Minister for the duration of his service on this Commission. Our belief is that progress can only come to the extent that the parties are willing to confer and to negotiate" (ibid., p. 786).

THE FAR EAST AND SOUTHEAST ASIA

A. THE BASIC POSITION OF THE UNITED STATES

1. REVIEW OF THE POSITION AS OF 1950: Address by the Secretary of State, January 12, 1950 ¹

FOUNDATIONS OF POLICY

This afternoon I should like to discuss with you the relations between the peoples of the United States and the peoples of Asia and I used the words "relations of the peoples of the United States and the peoples of Asia" advisedly. I am not talking about governments or nations because it seems to me what I want to discuss with you is this feeling of mine that the relations depend upon the attitudes of the people; that there are fundamental attitudes, fundamental interests, fundamental purposes of the people of the United States, 150 million of them, and of the peoples of Asia, unnumbered millions, which determine and out of which grow the relations of our countries and the policies of our governments. Out of these attitudes and interests and purposes grow what we do from day to day.

Now, let's dispose of one idea right at the start and not bother with it any more. That is that the policies of the United States are determined out of abstract principles in the Department of State or in the White House or in the Congress. That is not the case. If these policies are going to be good, they must grow out of the fundamental attitudes of our people on both sides. If they are to be effective, they must become articulate through all the institutions of our national life, of which this is one of the greatest—through the press, through the radio, through the churches, through the labor unions, through the business organizations, through all the groupings of our national life. There must become articulate the attitudes of our people and the to understand before we announce what we are going to do, and that is a proposition so heretical in this town that I advance it with some hesitation.

Now, let's consider some of the basic factors which go into the making of the attitudes of the peoples on both sides. I am frequently asked: Has the State Department got an Asian policy? And it seems to me that that discloses such a depth of ignorance that it is very hard to begin to deal with it. The peoples of Asia are so incredibly diverse and their problems are so incredibly diverse that how could anyone, even the most utter charlatan believe that he had a uniform policy which would deal with all of them. On the other hand, there are very important similarities in ideas and in problems among the peoples of Asia and so what we come to, after we understand these diversities and these common attitudes of mind, is the fact that there must be certain similarities of approach, and there must be very great dissimilarities in action.

To illustrate this only a moment: If you will consider as an example of the differences in Asia the subcontinent of India and Pakistan, you will find there an area which is roughly comparable in size and population to Europe. You will find that the different states and provinces of that subcontinent are roughly comparable in size to the nations of Europe and yet you will find such differences in race, in ideas, in languages, and religion, and culture, that compared to that subcontinent, Europe is almost one homogeneous people.

Or take the difference, for instance, between the people and problems of Japan and Indonesia, both in the same Asian area. In Japan, you have a people far advanced in the complexities of industrial civilization, a people whose problems grow out of overpopulation on small islands and the necessity of finding raw materials to bring in and finding markets for the finished goods which they produce. In Indonesia, you find something wholly different—a people on the very threshold of their experience with these complexities and a people who live in an area which possesses vast resources which are awaiting development. Now, those are illustrations of complexities.

EMERGING INDEPENDENCE

Let's come now to the matters which Asia has in common. There is in this vast area what we might call a developing Asian consciousness, and a developing pattern, and this, I think, is based upon two factors which are pretty nearly common to the entire experience of all these Asian people.

One of these factors is a revulsion against the acceptance of misery and poverty as the normal condition of life. Throughout all of this in Asia tend to fuse in the minds of many Asian peoples and many of them tend to believe that if you could get rid of foreign domination, if you could gain independence, then the relief from poverty and misery would follow almost in course. It is easy to point out that that is not true, and of course they are discovering that it is not true. But underneath that belief there was a very profound understanding of a basic truth and it is the basic truth which underlies all our democratic belief and all our democratic concept. That truth is that just as no man and no government is wise enough or disinterested enough to direct the thinking and the action of another individual, so no nation and no people are wise enough and disinterested enough very long to assume the responsibility for another people or to control another people's opportunities.

That great truth they have sensed, and on that great truth they are acting. They say and they believe that from now on they are on their own. They will make their own decisions. They will attempt to better their own lot, and on occasion they will make their own mistakes. But it will be their mistakes, and they are not going to have their mistakes dictated to them by anybody else.

The symbol of these concepts has become nationalism. National independence has become the symbol both of freedom from foreign domination and freedom from the tyranny of poverty and misery.

Since the end of the war in Asia, we have seen over 500 million people gain their independence and over seven new nations come into existence in this area.

We have the Philippines with 20 million citizens. We have Pakistan, India, Ceylon, and Burma with 400 million citizens, southern Korea with 20 million, and within the last few weeks, the United States of Indonesia with 75 million.¹

This is the outward and visible sign of the internal ferment of Asia. But this ferment and change is not restricted to these countries which are just gaining their independence. It is the common idea and the common pattern of Asia, and as I tried to suggest a moment ago, it is not based on purely political conceptions. It is not based purely on ideological conceptions. It is based on a fundamental and an earthly and a deeply individual realization of the problems of their own daily lives. This new sense of nationalism means that they are going to deal with those daily problems—the problems of the relation of man to the soil, the problem of how much can be exacted from them by the tax collectors of the state. It is rooted in those ideas. With those ideas they are going forward. Resignation is no longer the typical emotion of Asia. It has given way to hope, to a sense of effort and in many cases, to a real sense of anger.

RECENT DEVELOPMENTS IN CHINA

Now, may I suggest to you that much of the bewilderment which has seized the minds of many of us about recent developments in China comes from a failure to understand this basic revolutionary force which is loose in Asia. The reasons for the fall of the Nationalist Government in China are preoccupying many people. All sorts of reasons have been attributed to it. Most commonly, it is said in various speeches and publications that it is the result of American bungling, that we are incompetent, that we did not understand, that American aid was too little, that we did the wrong things at the wrong time. Other people go on and say: "No, it is not quite that, but that an American general did not like Chiang Kai-shek and out of all that relationship grows the real trouble." And they say: "Well you have to add to that there are a lot of women fooling around in politics in China."

Nobody, I think, says that the Nationalist Government fell because it was confronted by overwhelming military force which it could not resist. Certainly no one in his right mind suggests that. Now, what I ask you to do is to stop looking for a moment under the bed and under the chair and under the rug to find out these reasons, but rather to look at the broad picture and see whether something doesn't suggest itself.

The broad picture is that after the war, Chiang Kai-shek emerged as the undisputed leader of the Chinese people. Only one faction, the Communists, up in the hills, ill-equipped, ragged, a very small military force, was determinedly opposed to his position. He had overwhelming military power, greater military power than any ruler had ever had in the entire history of China. He had tremendous economic and military support and backing from the United States. He had the acceptance of all other foreign countries, whether sincerely or insincerely in the case of the Soviet Union is not really material to this matter. Here he was in this position, and 4 years later what do we find? We find that his armies have melted away. His support in the country has melted away. His support largely outside the country has melted away, and he is a refugee on a small island off the coast of China with the remnants of his forces.

As I said, no one says that vast armies moved out of the hills and defeated him. To attribute this to the inadequacy of American aid is only to point out the depth and power of the forces which were miscalculated or ignored. What has happened in my judgment is that the almost inexhaustible patience of the Chinese people in their misery ended. They did not bother to overthrow this government tence ever experienced by any military command was this total lack of support both in the armies and in the country, and so the whole matter just simply disintegrated.

The Communists did not create this. The Communists did not create this condition. They did not create this revolutionary spirit. They did not create a great force which moved out from under Chiang Kai-shek. But they were shrewd and cunning to mount it, to ride this thing into victory and into power.

That, I suggest to you, is an explanation which has certain roots in realism and which does not require all this examination of intricate and perhaps irrelevant details. So much for the attitudes of the peoples of Asia.

U.S. ATTITUDE TOWARD ASIA

Let's consider for a moment another important factor in this relationship. That is the attitude of our own people to Asia. What is that fundamental attitude out of which our policy has grown? What is the history of it? Because history is very important, and history furnishes the belief on the one side in the reality and truth of the attitude.

What has our attitude been toward the peoples of Asia? It has been, I submit to you, that we are interested—that Americans and individuals are interested in the peoples of Asia. We are not interested in them as pawns or as subjects for exploitation but just as people.

For 100 years some Americans have gone to Asia to bring in what they thought was the most valuable thing they had—their faith. They wanted to tell them what they thought about the nature and relationship of man to God. Others went to them to bring to them what they knew of learning. Others went to them to bring them healing for their bodies. Others and perhaps fewer went to them to learn the depth and beauty of their own cultures, and some went to them to trade and they traded with them. But this trade was a very small part of American interest in the Far East, and it was a very small part of American interest in trade. It was a valid interest; it was a good interest. There was nothing wrong about it, but out of the total sum of the interests of the American people in Asia, it was a comparatively small part.

Through all this period of time also, we had, and still have, great interests in Asia. But let me point out to you one very important factor about our interests in Asia. That is that our interests have been parallel to the interests of the people of Asia. For 50 years it has been the fundamental belief of the American people—and I am of the announcement of the open door policy ¹ through the 9-power treaty ² to the very latest resolution of the General Assembly of the United Nations,³ we have stated that principle and we believe it. And similarly in all the rest of Asia—in the Philippines, in India, in Pakistan and Indonesia, and in Korea—for years and years and years, the interests of Americans throughout this country have been in favor of their independence. This is where their independence societies, and their patriotic groups have come for funds and sympathy. The whole policy of our government insofar as we have responsibility in the Philippines was to bring about the accomplishment of their independence and our sympathy and help. The very real help which we have given other nations in Asia has been in that direction, and it is still in that direction.

THE FACTOR OF COMMUNISM

Now, I stress this, which you may think is a platitude, because of a very important fact: I hear almost every day someone say that the real interest of the United States is to stop the spread of communism. Nothing seems to me to put the cart before the horse more completely than that. Of course we are interested in stopping the spread of communism. But we are interested for a far deeper reason than any conflict between the Soviet Union and the United States. We are interested in stopping the spread of communism because communism is a doctrine that we don't happen to like. Communism is the most subtle instrument of Soviet foreign policy that has ever been devised, and it is really the spearhead of Russian imperialism which would, if it could, take from these people what they have won, what we want them to keep and develop, which is their own national independence, their own individual independence, their own development of their own resources for their own good and not as mere tributary states to this great Soviet Union.

Now, it is fortunate that this point that I made does not represent any real conflict. It is an important point because people will do more damage and create more misrepresentation in the Far East by saying our interest is merely to stop the spread of communism than any other way. Our real interest is in those people as people. It is because communism is hostile to that interest that we want to stop it. But it happens that the best way of doing both things is to do just exactly what the peoples of Asia want to do and what we want to help them to do, which is to develop a soundness of administration of these new governments and to develop their resources and their technical skills so that they are not subject to penetration either about the best way that anyone knows of stopping this spread of communism.

It is important to take this attitude not as a mere negative reaction to communism but as the most positive affirmation of the most affirmative truth that we hold, which is in the dignity and right of every nation, of every people, and of every individual to develop in their own way, making their own mistakes, reaching their own triumphs but acting under their own responsibility. That is what we are pressing for in the Far East, and that is what we must affirm and not get mixed up with purely negative and inconsequential statements.

SOVIET ATTITUDE

Now, let me come to another underlying and important factor which determines our relations and, in turn, our policy with the peoples of Asia. That is the attitude of the Soviet Union toward Asia, and particularly towards those parts of Asia which are contiguous to the Soviet Union, and with great particularity this afternoon, to north China.

The attitude and interest of the Russians in north China, and in these other areas as well, long antedates communism. This is not something that has come out of communism at all. It long antedates it. But the Communist regime has added new methods, new skills and new concepts to the thrust of Russian imperialism. This [These] Communistic concept[s] and techniques have armed Russian imperialism with a new and most insidious weapon of penetration. Armed with these new powers, what is happening in China is that the Soviet Union is detaching the northern provinces [areas] of China from China and is attaching them to the Soviet Union. This process is complete in Outer Mongolia. It is nearly complete in Manchuria and I am sure that in inner Mongolia and in Sinkiang there are very happy reports coming from Soviet agents to Moscow. This is what is going on. It is the detachment of these whole areas, vast areas populated by Chinese—the detachment of these areas from China and their attachment to the Soviet Union.

I wish to state this and perhaps sin against my doctrine of non-dogmatism, but I should like to suggest at any rate that this fact that the Soviet Union is taking the four northern provinces of China is the single most significant, most important fact, in the relation of any foreign power with Asia.¹

TWO RULES OF U.S. POLICY

of propaganda will not be able to obscure it. The only thing that can obscure it is the folly of ill-conceived adventures on our part which easily could do so, and I urge all who are thinking about these foolish adventures to remember that we must not seize the unenviable position which the Russians have carved out for themselves. We must not undertake to deflect from the Russians to ourselves the righteous anger, and the wrath, and the hatred of the Chinese people which must develop. It would be folly to deflect it to ourselves. We must take the position we have always taken—that anyone who violates the integrity of China is the enemy of China and is acting contrary to our own interest. That, I suggest to you this afternoon is the first and the greatest rule in regard to the formulation of American policy toward Asia.

I suggest that the second rule is very like the first. That is to keep our own purposes perfectly straight, perfectly pure, and perfectly aboveboard and do not get them mixed-up with legal quibbles or the attempt to do one thing and really achieve another.

The consequences of this Russian attitude and this Russian action in China are perfectly enormous. They are saddling all those in China who are proclaiming their loyalty to Moscow, and who are allowing themselves to be used as puppets of Moscow, with the most awful responsibility which they must pay for. Furthermore, these actions of the Russians are making plainer than any speech, or any utterance, or any legislation can make throughout all of Asia, what the true purposes of the Soviet Union are and what the true function of communism as an agent of Russian imperialism is. These I suggest to you are the fundamental factors, fundamental realities of attitude out of which our relations and policies must grow.

MILITARY SECURITY IN THE PACIFIC

Now, let's in the light of that consider some of these policies. First of all, let's deal with the question of military security. I deal with it first because it is important and because, having stated our policy in that regard, we must clearly understand that the military menace is not the most immediate.

What is the situation in regard to the military security of the Pacific area, and what is our policy in regard to it?

In the first place, the defeat and the disarmament of Japan has placed upon the United States the necessity of assuming the military defense of Japan so long as that is required, both in the interest of our security and in the interests of the security of the entire Pacific area and, in all honor, in the interest of Japanese security. We have the Ryukyu Islands, and those we will continue to hold. In the interest of the population of the Ryukyu Islands, we will at an appropriate time offer to hold these islands under trusteeship of the United Nations. But they are essential parts of the defensive perimeter of the Pacific, and they must and will be held.

The defensive perimeter runs from the Ryukyus to the Philippines and the Japanese Islands. Our relations, our defensive relations with the Philippines are contained in agreements between us.¹ Those agreements are being loyally carried out and will be loyally carried out. Both peoples have learned by bitter experience the vital connections between our mutual defense requirements. We are in no doubt about that, and it is hardly necessary for me to say an attack on the Philippines would not and would not be tolerated by the United States. But I hasten to add that no one perceives the imminence of any such attack.

So far as the military security of other areas in the Pacific is concerned, it must be clear that no person can guarantee these areas against military attack. But it must also be clear that such a guarantee is hardly sensible or necessary within the realm of practical relationships. Should such an attack occur—one hesitates to say where such an armed attack could come from—the initial reliance must be on the people attacked to resist it and then upon the commitments of the entire civilized world under the Charter of the United Nations which so far has not proved a weak reed to lean on by any people who are determined to protect their independence against outside aggression. But it is a mistake, I think, in considering Pacific and Far Eastern problems to become obsessed with military considerations. Important as they are, there are other problems that press, and these other problems are not capable of solution through military means. The other problems arise out of the susceptibility of many areas, and many countries in the Pacific area, to subversion and penetration. That cannot be stopped by military means.

SUSCEPTIBILITY TO PENETRATION

The susceptibility to penetration arises because in many areas there are new governments which have little experience in government administration and have not become firmly established or perhaps not firmly accepted in their countries. They grow, in part, from very serious economic problems, some of them growing out directly from the last war, others growing indirectly out of the last war because of the disruptions of trade with other parts of the world, with the disruption of arrangements which furnished credit and management.

cerned. In part this susceptibility to penetration comes from the great social upheaval about which I have been speaking, an upheaval which was carried on and confused a great deal by the Japanese occupation and by the propaganda which has gone on from Soviet sources since the war.

Here, then, are the problems in these other areas which require some policy on our part, and I should like to point out two facts to you and then discuss in more detail some of these areas.

The first fact is the great difference between our responsibility and our opportunities in the northern part of the Pacific area and in the southern part of the Pacific area. In the north, we have direct responsibility in Japan and we have direct opportunity to act. The same thing to a lesser degree is true in Korea. There we had direct responsibility, and there we did act, and there we have a greater opportunity to be effective than we have in the more southerly part.

In the southerly part of the area, we are one of many nations who can do no more than help. The direct responsibility lies with the peoples concerned. They are proud of their new national responsibility. You can not sit around in Washington, or London, or Paris or The Hague, and determine what the policies are going to be in those areas. You can be willing to help, and you can help only when the conditions are right for help to be effective.

LIMITATIONS OF U.S. ASSISTANCE

That leads me to the other thing that I wanted to point out, and that is the limitation of effective American assistance. American assistance can be effective when it is the missing component in a situation which might otherwise be solved. The United States cannot furnish all these components to solve the question. It can not furnish determination, it can not furnish the will, and it can not furnish the loyalty of a people to its government. But if the will and if the determination exists and if the people are behind their government, then and not always then, is there a very good chance. In that situation American help can be effective and it can lead to an accomplishment which could not otherwise be achieved.

Japan.—Now, with that statement, let's deal very briefly—because the time is going on and I am almost equaling my performance in the Senate and House—let's deal very briefly with some of the problems. Let's take the situation in Japan for a moment. There are three great factors to be faced. The security matter I have dealt with. Aside from that, there are the economic questions and the political questions. In the political field, General MacArthur has been very successful produced difficulties. The willingness of other countries to receive Japanese goods has very much contracted since the war.

Difficulties of currency have added to those problems. But those matters have got to be faced and have got to be solved. Whether they are solved under a treaty or if the procedural difficulties of that are too great under some other mechanism, they must be solved along lines which permit the Japanese greater freedom—complete freedom if possible—to buy what they need in the world and to sell what they have to offer on the mainland of Asia, in southeast Asia, and in other parts of the world. That is the nature of the problem and it is a very tough one. It is one on which the occupation authorities, the Japanese government, ourselves, and others are working. There can be no magic solution to it.

Korea.—In Korea, we have taken great steps which have ended our military occupation, and in cooperation with the United Nations have established an independent and sovereign country recognized by nearly all the rest of the world.¹ We have given that nation great help in getting itself established. We are asking the Congress to continue that help until it is firmly established, and that legislation is now pending before the Congress.² The idea that we should scrap all of that, that we should stop half way through the achievement of the establishment of this country, seems to me to be the most utter defeatism and utter madness in our interests in Asia. But there our responsibilities are more direct and our opportunities more clear. When you move to the south, you find that our opportunity is much slighter and that our responsibilities, except in the Philippines and there indirectly, are very small. Those problems are very confusing.

Philippines.—In the Philippines, we acted with vigor and speed to set up an independent sovereign nation which we have done.³ We have given the Philippines a billion dollars of direct economic aid since the war. We have spent another billion dollars in such matters as veterans' benefits and other payments in the Philippines. Much of that money has not been used as wisely as we wish it had been used but here again, we come up against the matter of responsibility. It is the Philippine Government which is responsible. It is the Philippine Government which must make its own mistakes. What we can do is advise and urge, and if help continues to be misused, to stop giving the help. We cannot direct, we should not direct, we have not the slightest desire to direct. I believe that there are indications that the Philippines may be facing serious economic difficulties. With energetic, determined action, they can perhaps be avoided or certainly minimized. Whether that will be true or not

I can not say, but it does not rest within the power of the American Government to determine that. We are always ready to help and to advise. That is all we can and all we should do.

Asia.—Elsewhere in southeast Asia, the limits of what we can do are to help where we are wanted. We are organizing the machinery through which we can make effective help possible. The western powers are all interested. We all know the techniques. We have all had experiences which can be useful to those governments which are newly starting out if they want it. It cannot be useful if they don't want it. We know techniques of administration. We know techniques of organizing school districts, and road districts, and taxation districts. We know agricultural and industrial techniques all of which can be helpful, and those we are preparing to make available if they are wanted, where they are wanted, and under circumstances where they have a fighting chance to be successful. We will not do these things for the mere purpose of being active. They will not be done for the mere purpose of running around and doing good, but for the purpose of moving in where we are wanted to a situation where we have the missing component which, if put into the rest of the picture, will spell success.

The situation in the different countries of southeast Asia is difficult. It is highly confused in Burma where five different factions have utterly disrupted the immediate government of the country. Progress is being made in Indochina where the French, although moving slowly, are moving. There are noticeable signs of progress in transferring responsibility to a local administration and getting the adherence of the population to this local administration. We hope that the situation will be such that the French can make further progress and make it quickly, but I know full well the difficulties which are faced by the Foreign Minister of France and my admiration and respect for him are so great that I would not want one word I say to add a feather to the burden that he carries.

In Malaya, the British have and are discharging their responsibility harmoniously with the people of Malaya and are making progress.

Indonesia.—In Indonesia, a great success has been achieved within the last few weeks and over a period of months. The round table conferences at The Hague in which great statesmanship and restraint were displayed, both on the Dutch and the Indonesian side, have resulted in this new government being formed.¹ Relations of this government with the Dutch will be very good, and the Dutch can furnish them great help and advice, and we will be willing to stand by to give whatever help we can rightly and profitably give. That situation is one which is full of encouragement although it is full of Kashmir, and to the utter difficulties—economic difficulties growing out of the differences in devaluation, settlement of monetary plans back and forth, et cetera. We know that they have assured one another, and they have assured the world, that as stubborn as these difficulties may be and difficult as they may be of solution, they are not going to resort to war to solve them. We are glad to hear those assurances and the whole world is glad to hear it, but we know also that the problems are in such a situation and in such an area that they are most inflammable, and we believe that in addition to these most desirable assurances there should be some accommodation of wills to bring about a result as soon as possible.

In India and in Pakistan we are willing to be of such help as we can give. Again, the responsibility is not ours. Again we can only be helpful friends. Again the responsibility lies with people who have won their freedom and who are very proud of it.

THE NEW DAY FOR ASIA

So after this survey, what we conclude, I believe, is that there is a new day which has dawned in Asia. It is a day in which the Asian peoples are on their own, and know it, and intend to continue on their own. It is a day in which the old relationships between east and west are gone, relationships which at their worst were exploitation, and which at their best were paternalism. That relationship is over, and the relationship of east and west must now be in the Far East one of mutual respect and mutual helpfulness. We are their friends. Others are their friends. We and those others are willing to help, but we can help only where we are wanted and only where the conditions of help are really sensible and possible. So what we can see is that this new day in Asia, this new day which is dawning, may go on to a glorious noon or it may darken and it may drizzle out. But the decision lies within the countries of Asia and within the power of the Asian people. It is not a decision which a friend or even an enemy from the outside can decide for them.

2. REVIEW OF THE POSITION AS OF 1955: Address by the Secretary of State, February 16, 1955 (Excerpts)¹

FAR EAST SECURITY TREATIES

In the Far East the United States has responded to the desire

China, Australia and New Zealand.¹ Also we have joined the eight-power Manila Pact for the security of Southeast Asia.²

The total of these treaties is a mutual security system which, starting from the Aleutian Islands in the North, runs in a great arc to the South Pacific. This constitutes a defensive bulwark for freedom in that part of the world.

What has thus been done by many nations is important. Also important is the manner in which the United States has played its part, particularly during recent days.

When the Congress convened last January, it was organized by the Democratic Party. So when the Manila Pact and the China treaty were submitted, they were submitted by a Republican President to a Democrat-controlled body. The same was true of President Eisenhower's request for Congressional authority to use the armed forces of the United States in the Formosa area.³

Nevertheless, the two treaties were ratified and the Congressional authority was granted. This was done promptly and with virtual unanimity.⁴

These events demonstrate a national unity and capacity of action which is needed in the world today. Too often representative processes lead to such partisanship and such consequent delays that hostile forces are encouraged to believe that democracies are inherently ineffective. The Government of the United States has shown the contrary. Partisanship was wholly subordinated to the national good so that action of great importance could be taken with deliberation but with decisiveness.

For this the nation can be grateful to the leadership and to the general membership of both parties in the Congress. I know that they would expect me to pay special tribute to Walter F. George, who, as Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, carried the heaviest aggregate burden of responsibility in relation to the three acts to which I refer.

We can all take pride, as Americans, in this demonstration of national unity and capacity. Because of it, free men throughout the world can face the future with better hope and new confidence.

MUTUAL DEFENSE TREATY WITH CHINA

Let me turn now to deal with some of the substantive problems which arise out of the two Far Eastern treaties to which I have referred—the China treaty and the Manila Pact.

The United States is firmly committed to the defense of Formosa and in 1895.¹ They continued as such for half a century, until they were relinquished by Japan as a result of her defeat in war²—a defeat principally wrought by the efforts and sacrifices of the United States.

These islands form an important part of the Western Pacific defense system which I have described. The people of the islands eagerly seek our help.

Thus Formosa and the Pescadores have been properly a matter of concern to the United States.

In 1945 our long-time ally, the Republic of China, was entrusted with authority over these islands.³ In 1950, when the aggression against Korea occurred, President Truman ordered our Pacific fleet to defend Formosa against possible Chinese Communist attack.⁴ Now that determination has been converted into our Mutual Defense Treaty with the Republic of China.

It is important to note that the treaty, except as it relates to United States territories, covers only the islands of Formosa and the Pescadores, and an armed attack directed against those islands. The Congressional authority is to secure and protect Formosa and the Pescadores against armed attack, and to make secure and to protect "related positions and territories" as the President judges "this would be required or appropriate in assuring the defense of Formosa and the Pescadores."

The President did not use our armed forces to help the Chinese Nationalists to hold the Tachen Islands and Yushan and Pishan,⁵ lying some 200 miles north of Formosa. These islands were virtually unrelated to the defense of Formosa and the Pescadores. We helped the Chinese Nationalists to evacuate these islands and regroup their forces, so as to avoid a bloody and wasteful battle which would have inflamed public emotions. Thus, Nationalist China and the United States have made an important contribution to the cause of peace.

It has been suggested that Nationalist China should go further and surrender to the Chinese Communists the coastal positions which the Communists need to stage their announced attack on Formosa. It is doubtful that this would serve either the cause of peace or the cause of freedom.

The Chinese Communists have been the initiators of violence in this area. They have already formally declared their intention to take Formosa by force. If the Chinese Nationalists now oblige by making it easier for the Chinese Communists to conquer Formosa, will they be less apt to do so? I doubt it.

The United States has no commitment and no purpose to defend the coastal positions as such. The basic purpose is to assure that Formosa

Communists. However, Foreign Minister Chou says they will use all their force to take Formosa and they treat the coastal islands as means to that end. When the Nationalists voluntarily evacuated the Tachen islands, the Chinese Communists' comment was: "The liberation of these islands has created favorable conditions for our People's Liberation Army in the liberation of Formosa."

Thus the Chinese Communists have linked the coastal positions to the defense of Formosa. That is the fact which, as President Eisenhower said in his message to Congress about Formosa, "compels us to take into account closely related localities." Accordingly, we shall be alert to subsequent Chinese Communist actions, rejecting for ourselves any initiative of warlike deeds.

It is hardly to be expected that the Chinese Communists will renounce their ambitions. However, might they not renounce their efforts to realize their goals by force?

Such renunciation of force is one of the basic principles of the United Nations, and the United States had hoped, and still hopes, that the United Nations may be able to effect a cessation of the present hostilities. President Eisenhower, in his message to Congress dealing with this matter, made clear that the United States would welcome action by the United Nations which might bring an end to the active hostilities in the area.¹ The Government of New Zealand has brought this situation before the Security Council,² and the United States in the interest of peace, went to the length of voting to invite the Chinese Communists to come to the Security Council to discuss the matter.³

In 1950, the Chinese Communists had accepted a Security Council invitation in relation to Korea.⁴ However, this time the Chinese Communists contemptuously rejected the invitation.⁵

We sincerely hope that this decision of the Chinese Communists is not irrevocable and that they will abide by the principles of the United Nations rather than challenge by force the defensive obligations of this country. In any event, we believe that their attitude toward the United Nations Security Council has not ended the responsibility of that body which, by the Charter, has the "primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security."

It should not, moreover, be carelessly assumed that peace and security will be promoted merely by the non-Communist nations indefinitely granting one-sided concessions to the Communist nations

² See letter of Jan. 28, 1955, from the Representative of New Zealand to the President of the Security Council; Department of State Bulletin, Feb. 14, 1955.

A great danger in Asia is the fear of many non-Communist people that the United States has no real intention of standing firmly behind them. Already that fear has mounted to the danger point. We accepted in Korea an armistice which the Chinese Communists boastfully misrepresent as a "victory" for them. We acquiesced in a Indochina armistice¹ which reflected the defeat of the French Union forces at Dien Bien Phu. We aided the Tachen evacuation. These reasons were compelling; nevertheless the result added a few square miles to the Communist domain.

If the non-Communist Asians ever come to feel that their Western Allies are disposed to retreat whenever communism threatens the peace, then the entire area could quickly become indefensible.

As the situation now exists, neither the cause of freedom, nor United States security, nor world peace and security would be promoted by undermining the faith of the free Asian peoples in our strength and in our willingness to use that strength to restrain those who violently menace liberty. The American people have, through the Congress, made their own resolution clear. That is a verdict which the Government accepts as sound and which it will soberly execute.

SECURITY OF SOUTHEAST ASIA

Let me turn now to Southeast Asia. In a few hours I shall be going to Bangkok to attend the first meeting of the Council created under the Manila Pact for the security of Southeast Asia.²

We shall at Bangkok deal with the problem of organizing the Treaty Council. Also we shall begin to deal with the three substantive problems assigned to the Council, namely, military security, security against subversion directed from without, and economic welfare. I cannot anticipate what the decisions will be, but I am confident that our gathering will show the advantages of cooperation between the East and the West.

Some Asians retain a fear, derived from past colonial relationships, that close ties with the Western powers will lead to their being dominated by the Western powers. It is essential that that fear should be dispelled.

An important step in that direction was taken at Manila when, at the inspiration of President Magsaysay, the eight powers there signed the Pacific Charter.³ Thereby we dedicated ourselves to promoting self-government and to securing independence for all countries whose peoples desire it and are able to undertake its responsibilities. Also we agreed to cooperate in the economic, social, and cultural fields in order to promote higher living standards, economic progress, and social well-being.

ways to diminish the risk of armed attack against the treaty area and the danger of subversion from without. Also we shall begin to study economic problems. These are not capable of any dramatic and spectacular solution, but they do respond to steady, painstaking, and sympathetic efforts.

The first task is to deal with fundamentals. That we are already doing, particularly in the basic realm of education. United States universities and colleges are cooperating with Asian institutions in Thailand, the Philippines, and Pakistan. Many United States technicians are serving in Asia in economic, educational, and health tasks and the number is being increased. Our cooperation is already beginning to show results in better food and better health, and we are together taking the first steps to expand trade, to increase private investment, and to raise standards of living.

In such ways, we can justify man's faith in freedom.

There should indeed be no cleavage between the Western and Asian nations. Our concept of the nature of man had its beginning in Asia where East and West met. We believe that all men are the creation and concern of a universal God and that He has endowed every person with a right to develop in accordance with the dictates of his individual reason and conscience.

That religious faith, politically translated into the Magna Charta, the French Declaration of the Rights of Man, and our own Declaration of Independence, was, as Lincoln said of our Declaration, nothing exclusive but designed to provide "liberty, not alone to the people of this country, but hope for the world for all future time."¹

We also realize that, if human liberty is to be a reality, there must be an economic as well as a political foundation. The impoverished and the destitute cannot be truly free. So we recognize that economic values are essential to give reality to the moral and political values that we cherish.

Such a philosophy is indeed very different from that of Soviet communism.

Soviet communism denies the principle of human equality and instead substitutes the principle of class rule.

It denies that men are capable of self-government and substitutes the principle of dictatorship, the so-called dictatorship of the proletariat.

It denies nationalism, except as it can be used as a slogan to drive a wedge between East and West and prepare the way for an absorption of the peoples by international communism.

It preaches a new doctrine of segregation. The peoples of Asia, it is said, must be separated from the peoples of the West. The peowill be unable to resist the iron embrace of international communism. At the Berlin Conference last year, Mr. Molotov denounced NATO and proposed a European security system which would exclude the United States.¹ Now, the Soviet and Chinese Communists denounce the Manila Pact, because it may bring to Southeast Asia the strength needed to resist Communist aggression.

The Bangkok Conference will enable the free nations of the West and of the East to begin a vital demonstration. They can show that through association as sovereign equals, they can each help the other to independence, security, and well-being.

That result accords with the high ideals with which our nation was founded. It is in keeping with what our people have sought throughout their history. So our delegation goes to Bangkok with confidence, because we know that our mission is sustained by national faith and national purpose.

B. THE PACIFIC AND SOUTHEAST ASIA

The ANZUS Pact

[For the text of the Security Treaty of Sept. 1, 1951, between the United States, Australia, and New Zealand (the ANZUS Treaty), see supra pp. 878-880.]

B. ESTABLISHING THE MACHINERY OF THE ANZUS COUNCIL

Communiqué of the First Meeting of the ANZUS Council, Kaneohe, Hawaii, August 7, 1952 ²

The ANZUS Council established by the security treaty between Australia, New Zealand and the United States ³ concluded its first meeting at Kaneohe today. The Right Honorable Richard G. Case, Minister for External Affairs, represented Australia; The Honorable F. Clifton Webb, Minister for External Affairs, represented New Zealand; and The Honorable Dean Acheson, Secretary of State, represented the United States of America.

Advisers of the Australian Minister for External Affairs included The Honorable Sir Percy Spender, Ambassador to the United States.

The Advisers of the New Zealand Minister for External Affairs included: The Honorable Leslie K. Munro, Ambassador to the United States; Mr. Foss Shanahan, Deputy Secretary, Department of External Affairs; and Major General W. G. Gentry, Chief of General Staff.

The Advisers of the United States Secretary of State included The Honorable Philip C. Jessup, Ambassador at Large; The Honorable George W. Perkins, Assistant Secretary of State for European Affairs; The Honorable John M. Allison, Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs; and Admiral Arthur W. Radford, Commander in Chief, Pacific and U. S. Pacific Fleet.

At the end of the meeting the three Foreign Ministers issued the following announcement:

[The] ANZUS treaty recognizes that an armed attack in the Pacific area on any of the parties would be dangerous to the peace and security of all signatories and declares that each would act to meet the common danger in accordance with constitutional processes. The treaty also establishes the Council as the means for a closer consultative relationship among the three governments. We believe that the Council will afford each of us the opportunity to achieve more effective cooperation as members of the free world. We take this occasion to reaffirm the principles of the treaty.

At this first meeting we have established the necessary organization to implement the treaty. In following the provisions of the treaty which states that the Council is to consist of the three foreign ministers or their deputies we have agreed that the Council of Ministers should meet annually, one year in the United States and the alternate year in Australia or New Zealand. The Council also agreed that special meetings normally attended by the Deputies will be held in Washington to provide for continuing consultation and to provide a focus where existing channels and agencies may be utilized in the implementation of the treaty.

The deputy members of the Council will be: For Australia, The Honorable Sir Percy C. Spender, Ambassador to the United States; for New Zealand, The Honorable Leslie K. Munro, Ambassador to the United States; and for the United States, The Honorable David K. Bruce, Under Secretary of State.

To ensure that effective measures are taken to implement Article II of the treaty the Council will have the advice of appropriate military officers of the three governments. Admiral Arthur W. Radford, USN, has been designated as the United States military representative accredited to the Council. The Australian and New Zealand military representatives will soon be designated. An early meeting of these this article and reaffirmed on behalf of the three governments the need for collective defense in the Pacific area. The Council examined the possibility of providing arrangements for the association of other governments in its work. Recognizing that the Council is just beginning to evolve its own tripartite organization and program it came to the conclusion that it would be premature at this early stage in its development to attempt to establish relationships with other states or regional organizations. The Council agreed, however, that in the meantime the members of the Council would continue to keep in close touch through existing channels with other states concerned to preserve peace in the Pacific area.

We reaffirm that our governments are dedicated to the strengthening and furtherance of friendly and peaceful relationships among nations in the Pacific area. In so doing we emphasize that the purpose of the ANZUS treaty is solely the defense of its members against aggression. As is clear from the treaty itself this is fully consistent with the principles of the United Nations Charter and with the obligations of the members under the charter. The ANZUS Council is dedicated to help support and implement the principles and responsibilities of the United Nations. The principle of collective security is the common objective of both and the security system of the United Nations which we are seeking to build will be made stronger by the steps which we have taken here. Furthermore, in our discussion of how best to contribute by constructive measures to the security of the Pacific area we have taken into account the membership of Australia and New Zealand in the British Commonwealth and United States participation in the North Atlantic Treaty organization and its association by treaty with the other American republics and with Japan and the Philippines.

We have taken the opportunity to review situations of mutual concern. We exchanged views on the operations of the United Nations in Korea and the problem of assisting the free nations of Asia to resist Communist imperialism.

We emphasize, however, that we neither reached any decisions nor undertook any commitments regarding matters of direct concern to our friends in the Pacific area or elsewhere.

. THE ANNUAL REVIEW: Communiqué of the Second Meeting of the ANZUS Council, Washington, September 10, 1953¹

The ANZUS Council, established by the Security Treaty between Australia, New Zealand, and the United States, concluded its 2-day

In addition to the Ministers the delegations included, for Australia: His Excellency the Honorable Sir Percy C. Spender, Ambassador to the United States, and Lt. General Sir Sydney F. Rowell, Chief of the General Staff; for New Zealand: His Excellency Leslie K. Munro, Ambassador to the United States; Alistair D. McIntosh, Secretary of External Affairs; and Maj. Gen. W. G. Gentry, Chief of the General Staff; and for the United States: The Honorable Livingston T. Merchant, Assistant Secretary for European Affairs; the Honorable S. Robertson, Assistant Secretary for Far Eastern Affairs; the Honorable Carl W. McCardle, Assistant Secretary for Public Affairs; and Admiral Felix Stump, Commander-in-Chief, Pacific and U. S. Pacific Fleet. By invitation of the Council Admiral Arthur W. Radford, Chairman of the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff and formerly U. S. Military Representative accredited to the Council, attended the meeting in a consultative capacity.

At the conclusion of the meeting the Council issued the following statement:

The Council affords the Foreign Ministers of the three Governments the opportunity to consult together periodically in regard to the implementation of the ANZUS Security Treaty and to discuss various matters of interest and concern to their countries. It is the over-all objective of the ANZUS partners, building on the foundation of the Treaty, to strengthen the relationships between their Governments at both the political and military levels and to seek the most effective means of providing for their common defense.

At this meeting the Ministers again affirmed the defensive nature of the Treaty. They expressed the determination of their Governments that ANZUS shall play its full part in the maintenance of peace and security in the Pacific. They took, however, no decisions and reached no agreements directly affecting the interests of the other nations of the free world, but discussed in considerable detail the general world situation with specific reference to areas under threat from Communist imperialism.

In its deliberations the Council surveyed situations in the Pacific specifically affecting the security of the three countries. It took special note of those areas in which Communist aggression has led to outright hostilities. In particular the Council considered the situation in Korea and in Indo-China. Each Minister expressed the view of his Government that under present circumstances no question of the recognition of Communist China or of the admission of its representatives to the United Nations would be entertained.

The Council examined reports from the Military Representatives who were appointed at its first meeting last year to advise the Council tinuing the close cooperation established by the Republic during the past year.

The Council considered its responsibilities in the light of Article VIII of the Treaty, which authorizes it to establish close relationships with other states and regional organizations. It reviewed its own position vis-a-vis other existing defense arrangements in the Pacific and considered the place of ANZUS in the development of a broader collective security system for the area. The Council affirmed its readiness to consider any measure which would strengthen the defense of the area. It unanimously agreed, however, that to attempt to enlarge its membership would detract directly and materially to this end.

The Council noted the fact that each of the three Governments already has other relationships and responsibilities. It recognized the important interests of other countries in the Pacific. The ANZUS Treaty is one of a number of arrangements for the maintenance of security among the nations of the area. The United States is a partner in a mutual security pact with the Philippines and has initialed such a pact with Korea.¹ It has a Security Treaty with Japan and has defense understandings with the National Government of China in Formosa.² Then again, Australia and New Zealand as members of the British Commonwealth, have treaties with Great Britain and the other Commonwealth nations. These arrangements and relationships constitute together a deterrent to any potential aggressor and represent the growing basis for lasting peace in the Pacific.

5. COLLECTIVE DEFENSE IN SOUTHEAST ASIA: Statement of Representatives of the ANZUS Governments at Their Consultative Meeting, Washington, June 30, 1954³

Today's ANZUS meeting was one in the continuing series of meetings providing close consultation among Australia, New Zealand, and the United States, the three signatories to the ANZUS treaty.

The situation in Southeast Asia was discussed in the light of recent developments, including the talks just concluded in Washington between the United Kingdom and the United States.

The Australian and New Zealand representatives expressed satisfaction with the statement by President Eisenhower and Sir Winston Churchill that plans for collective defense in Southeast Asia that, if at Geneva the French Government is confronted with demands which prevent an acceptable agreement regarding Indochina, the international situation will be seriously aggravated.

All three representatives at the ANZUS meeting agreed on the need for immediate action to bring about the early establishment of collective defense in Southeast Asia—an area in which the three participating countries are all vitally concerned.

6. THE ANNUAL REVIEW: Communiqué of the Fourth Meeting of the ANZUS Council, Washington, September 24, 1955¹

The ANZUS Council affords the Foreign Ministers of the three Governments the opportunity of regular, periodic consultation in regard to international and defense matters of mutual interest and concern. The over-riding objective of the ANZUS partners is to strengthen the relationships between their Governments and to seek effective means of providing for their mutual security.

At this meeting the representatives of the three Governments were glad to note that since their last meeting in 1954,² at which they had agreed on the need for the early establishment of collective defense in Southeast Asia, the Manila Pact has been concluded.³ They unanimously agreed that the Manila Pact, which is history's first multilateral collective defense organization with East Asian participation, represents a further highly significant development toward sustaining and strengthening peace and security in an area of vital concern to the free world. In addition to mutual membership in ANZUS and the Manila Pact, the Ministers noted that their countries have other relationships which contribute to the development of strength and stability in the area.

The Ministers discussed at some length the developments in the world situation occurring since the last meeting of the ANZUS Council. They noted with satisfaction the efforts made at the Geneva meeting of heads of government⁴ toward reducing the causes of world tension. They expressed the hope that these preliminary steps would be followed by positive action. They were in firm agreement that world developments do not so far justify any relaxation of the efforts of the free world to maintain a posture of defensive strength.

7. ESTABLISHING THE MACHINERY OF SEATO: Communiqué of the First Meeting of the SEATO Council, Bangkok, February 25, 1955 ¹

The Foreign Ministers of Australia, New Zealand, Pakistan, the Philippines, Thailand, the United Kingdom, and the United States and the Representative of France have completed the First Meeting of the Council established by the Southeast Asia Collective Defense Treaty.² The Treaty entered into force on February 19, 1955 following the deposit of the instruments of ratification with the Government of the Republic of the Philippines. The Council has held six sessions in Bangkok from February 23 to February 25 under the Chairmanship of H. R. H. Prince Wan Waithayakon, Foreign Minister of the Government of Thailand.

The Council met in circumstances which give increasing urgency to the objectives of the Treaty. The Members of the Council declared the dedication of their Governments to the purposes and principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations, and in particular, they asserted their hatred of war and their determination to take all possible measures to preserve and strengthen peace. They reiterated that such military arrangements as they may make will be purely defensive in accordance with their international obligations, and will never be used for purposes of aggression.

The Council reaffirmed the aim of their Governments, as set forth in the Pacific Charter:³ to uphold the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples; to promote self-government and to secure the independence of all countries whose peoples desire it and are able to undertake its responsibilities; to continue to cooperate in the economic, social, and welfare fields in order to promote higher living standards, economic progress, and social well-being in this region; and to prevent or counter by appropriate means any attempt in the Treaty area to subvert their freedom or to destroy their sovereignty or territorial integrity.

Upholding the principle of non-interference in the internal affairs of other states, the Council stressed the paramount need for the maintenance in peace of the integrity and authority of freely constituted sion by which freedom and self-government are undermined men's minds subverted.

s Meeting has provided the Members of the Council with an unity for bringing about closer ties among their own govern- in achieving their common objectives and purposes under the r. They believe that the Manila Treaty is already exerting a e influence for the maintenance of peace in Southeast Asia and uthwest Pacific, and that the solidarity of the member nations, at the present meeting, will serve as an increasingly powerful ent against aggression. The Council recognized the continuing rs to peace and security in the Treaty area and agreed that threats make it imperative that the member governments take o strengthen the common defense.

as recognized that subversion and infiltration constitute a serious o the peace and security of the area and that this demands d efforts in all aspects of the national life. The Council dis- specific attempts by elements directed from outside to subvert stitutions and governments in the Treaty area. The Council d these subversive activities with grave concern and was deter- to help the peoples of the area to resist them. There was ment on the need for cooperation among the member govern- to assist one another in combatting the subversive activities of ational Communism. The Council decided to arrange for con- g consultation and mutual assistance and to make it possible ch member government to draw upon the experience of the in dealing with this danger. In this connection the Council ed a valuable report on the Philippine experience in combatting al dissidence, and noted the statement of the United Kingdom ation on the improved situation in Malaya.

Council agreed upon the importance of implementing Article the Treaty which provides:

Parties undertake to strengthen their free institutions and to cooperate ne another in the further development of economic measures, including al assistance, designed both to promote economic progress and social well- nd to further the individual and collective efforts of governments toward nds.

The Council noted with interest the statement by the U. S. Delegation about the peaceful uses of atomic energy. The Council is deeply conscious of the potential contributions of atomic energy to the health and standards of living of the peoples of all nations and welcomed the proposed discussions relating to cooperation and assistance in the atomic energy program toward achieving these benefits.

Realizing the importance to the security of Southeast Asia and Southwest Pacific of the States of Cambodia, Laos, and Viet Nam, the Council reaffirmed the determination of the member governments to support these three States in maintaining their freedom and independence as set forth in the Protocol to the Treaty.¹ The Council informed of assistance which had been extended to the three States and expressed the hope that member governments would continue to provide assistance.

Having thus exchanged views, the members of the Council agreed on the following arrangements to help carry out the provisions of the Treaty:

Operation of the Council

The governments will be represented on the Council by their Foreign Ministers or their designated representatives. The Council will meet at least once each year and more often when deemed necessary. It will usually meet in the Treaty area. Decisions of the Council will be taken by unanimous agreement.

Designation of Council Representatives

In order to assure close and continuing cooperation when the Council is not in session, the Council has agreed to designate Council representatives who will have their seat in Bangkok. The Council representatives will maintain continuing consultation on matters relating to the Treaty and will perform such special tasks as the Council may from time to time, direct. They may make agreed recommendations to the Council or, when the Council is not in session, to the member governments with respect to implementation of the Treaty. The Council representatives will inform the member governments of the steps the Council representatives take and agree on the steps to be taken by the member governments relating to the Treaty and agree on the steps to be taken by the Council in carrying out its provisions.

The Council representatives may request the member governments to designate specially qualified personnel to assist them in carrying out their tasks. Working groups composed of such personnel the personnel of the Secretariat being made available by the representatives on a contributed basis.

The Council directed that the Council representatives begin operations as soon as possible and that one of their first tasks should be to arrange meetings of specially qualified personnel designated by member governments to assist the Council representatives in considering means of strengthening cooperation in combatting subversion and infiltration.

The Council also requested the Council representatives to explore the opportunities for increasing cultural and technical cooperation among the member governments and to submit recommendations to the next meeting of the Council.

Military Advisers to the Council

Each of the governments agreed to designate a Military Adviser to its member of the Council.

The Military Advisers will make recommendations to the Council on military cooperation under the Treaty.

They will meet periodically as required, will formulate their own rules of procedure and any necessary organizational arrangements.

The Military Advisers at this Council meeting met on February 24 and 25. They exchanged views concerning the military aspects of the Defense Treaty and as a result of these discussions their staff planners will meet in Manila in April 1955 to initiate plans for the implementation of certain military aspects of the Treaty. Shortly thereafter the Military Advisers will again convene in Bangkok.

Peace and Security of the Area

Although they represent diverse nations and peoples, the members of the Council were unanimous in the belief that this meeting has enabled them to understand and appreciate the problems facing the governments of the countries covered by the Treaty in the common effort to ensure peace and security under the Treaty. The progress achieved at this first Council meeting provides solid hope for closer cooperation among the member governments for the good of the region as a whole. The members of the Council are united in their conviction that the common efforts of their governments are contributing positively to the peace and security of the area, both for the member governments and for other free nations in the region. The Council expressed the hope that these free nations will associate themselves in the near future with the work to be undertaken under the Treaty.

The Colombo Plan

8. THE ROLE OF THE UNITED STATES IN THE PLAN: Address by the Assistant Secretary of State Affairs,¹ October 14, 1954²

The theme of your conference is "Strengthening Economic Ties Between the United States and Asia." There is no need to tell this audience the importance of that objective. Indeed, it exists largely for that purpose—to enlarge American understanding of the nature and content of our economic relations with Asia and to strengthen the economic ties between our country and Asia.

Neither do I need to tell the members of this audience that it is for our own interests and for the sake of peace in the world that the aspirations of the countries of Asia for economic progress should be fulfilled. In those countries it is not only that the future of the democratic way of life and the democratic form of government depends to a very considerable extent on whether or not it will prove possible to achieve some measurable economic progress, some visible economic development, by democratic means.

All of the free countries of Asia stand challenged by the economic progress of the governments of Russia and Red China. They are constantly told that enormous progress has been made and is being made in those Communist countries. They are not in a position to dispute this; this is not so. They know, however, that if it is so that progress is being accomplished at a great price in human freedom and democratic principles.

Nevertheless, whatever progress is being made in the Communist countries is a challenge to the free countries. The peoples of those countries—many of them newly independent and newly possessing the freedom to manage their own affairs—have chosen a system of government that is democratic and free. The peoples in those countries, however, are not academic political scientists; they are farmers, businessmen, and workers in the factories. To them the worth of a system is measured by what it can do—what it can provide for the way of economic well-being and increasing general welfare.

To us the outcome of this challenge and this effort is of great importance. I need not belabor with you the reasons why this is so. You know them full well.

I have been asked to talk today about one important economic tie between the free countries of Asia and the United States and certain other free countries of the West—the Colombo that not enough of our people understand what the Colombo Plan is and what our relationship to the Plan involves.

The Colombo Plan was conceived initially in 1950 as an organization of Commonwealth countries to focus attention on the economic development problems of the countries of South and Southeast Asia. It is designed to provide a framework within which international cooperative efforts can be made to promote sound and enduring economic progress in that area.

As I said, in its origins the Colombo Plan was a Commonwealth concept. It initially included on the one side the economically developed countries of the Commonwealth such as Great Britain, Canada, Australia, and New Zealand; and on the other side the newly independent or not yet fully independent Asian countries members of the Commonwealth such as India, Pakistan, Ceylon, Malaya, British Borneo, plus Burma.

In the interim, however, the geographic scope of the membership has been so radically enlarged that it can no longer be thought of as being, in any way except historically, a Commonwealth project. Not only has the United States since 1951 associated itself as a full member, but other non-Commonwealth countries of South and Southeast Asia have also joined, such as Cambodia, Laos, Viet-Nam, and Indonesia. Last week at Ottawa, Japan was admitted to membership and Thailand and the Philippines, which had heretofore been observers also became full members. In all, there are now 17 member countries and the area stretches from Pakistan to the Philippines. In this area live 720 million people, about 29 percent of the world's population.

A COMMITTEE FOR ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

What is the Colombo Plan? The easiest and most enlightening answer to that question is to explain it is not a plan in the commonly accepted use of the word "plan," but that it is exactly what its title says it is—the Consultative Committee for Economic Development in South and Southeast Asia. It is a committee of nations all of which are, for one reason or another, constructively interested in the economic development of the free countries of this area. It is a consultative committee, not a continuing organization. There were initial formative meetings of the group in 1950 and 1951 at Colombo, at Canberra, and at London. Starting in 1952 there have been annual meetings to review progress in economic development and to assess prospects for the future.

In the course of the formative meetings the member countries of the South and Southeast Asia area were encouraged to formulate period, they hoped to be able to accomplish, how they expected to finance their programs, what policies and legislative measures they expected to have to pursue, and what goals of investment and production they hoped to be able to reach.

These economic development programs—each of which is an individual country development program—when taken collectively are known as the Colombo Plan.

The subsequent meetings, which took place after the formative meetings, were held in 1952 and 1953 at Karachi and New Delhi and this year (1954) in Ottawa. At these annual meetings the countries of the area review the results of the year just passed. They lay out on the table for frank and friendly discussion what they have accomplished, what they have failed to accomplish, what difficulties they have encountered, what changes they have felt constrained to make in their development plans, and what policies they have pursued. Similarly, they evaluate their prospects for the future; they try to assess what is likely to happen in the way of changes in the terms of trade, increases or decreases in public revenues, shortfalls or overages in the achievement of specific development targets. They appraise what has been available to them heretofore and what is likely to be available in the future in the way of external assistance. They examine what has been and what is likely to be the role of private foreign investment in their economic development, what they have done and left undone to attract foreign investment and mobilize domestic capital.

The Colombo Plan period from 1951 to 1957 is, you will notice, just a little bit more than half over. After the formative meeting the significance of the 6-year framework has, I think, become progressively less. The usefulness of the 6-year concept was that it helped and enabled the countries of the area to view their development problems more concretely. It forced them to examine their problems and their aspirations in terms of what definite, concrete things could be done within a finite and agreed period of time. This searching examination by the Colombo Plan countries was very healthy. It made for realism and for a very valuable, if painful, translation of general plans into precise projects.

ANNUAL REVIEW OF PROGRESS

Now, however, the benefits of this rigid time period have been realized. It is no longer necessary or even very useful to continue refining and modifying the 6-year targets. Indeed, at the very first annual review meeting—that held at Karachi in 1952¹—it was been accomplished in the preceding year and to evaluate the tasks and the problems for the foreseeable period lying ahead.

It has been customary in the deliberations of the Consultative Committee to draw a loose line of distinction between the so-called recipient countries and the so-called contributing countries. This distinction is, however, becoming more and more a tenuous one because—and this is one of the great virtues of the Plan—there has been engendered a process of cooperation and mutual aid among the recipient countries such that almost all of them are to greater or lesser extent contributing countries to one another. They borrow technical skills and technical assistance from each other according to their respective needs and their respective capacities to assist.

Nevertheless, certain member countries obviously are altogether or almost altogether contributing countries. The United States is one of this group.

I have said that we are a full member of the Colombo Plan. I have also said that we are a contributing-country member. Now what does this mean?

The point that must be emphasized is that the Colombo Plan is simply an intergovernmental committee. We do not contribute anything to any central pool. There is nothing analogous to the Organization for European Economic Cooperation.¹ There is no process by which the contributions of the contributing countries are parceled out or allocated by any international organization. Our assistance to the countries of the area—like that provided by Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and the United Kingdom—is bilaterally given and bilaterally received. Our contribution, in other words, is the sum total we do in the various countries of the area to promote the economic development of those countries. Our aid programs are our governmental contribution. We are not under any contractual obligation either to provide any definite amount of assistance to any one country or to all of them taken together; nor, for that matter, are we under any contractual obligation to provide aid at all to any particular country. In Burma, for example, our aid program terminated at the request of the Burmese Government.²

Neither are we under any obligation to provide assistance in any uniform way or according to any uniform pattern. Our aid programs in Viet-Nam, Laos, and Cambodia have been very different in their nature and orientation from our programs, for example, in India and Indonesia. Nevertheless, whatever we do to help to promote economic development in any of the countries of the area is accepted and regarded as our contribution in relation to that particular country.

I have been emphasizing our aid programs and our public contribu-

The governments of the area naturally are in a better measure what has been accomplished by public action than what needs to be done through public development programs. Otherwise the aid that is given by governments and received by the area is easier to measure than the less tangible benefits of private investment.

Nevertheless, this natural tendency to concentrate on the public sector has been done in what these countries call "the public sector" doing away with any unhealthy bias in favor of public projects. Indeed, the governments of this area are fully aware of the benefits of and their need for foreign capital. They have, for example, included private enterprise in their calculations of sources and possibilities of external capital, and an assessment of what can be borrowed on the private capital markets and of what steps need to be taken by the area to improve their credit-worthiness. Many of the countries have taken specific measures to improve the climate for private investment. They have issued official declarations welcoming foreign enterprise either in general or at least in specific fields. They have publicly recognized also that government measures are not the only factors governing the import of capital, and, for example, that the mere absence of discriminatory government measures is in all cases sufficient to overcome the shyness of foreign investors. Hence they recognize further that if they desire foreign capital in specific fields they will probably have to take positive steps to attract it.

Therefore, in the various annual reviews the Colombian governments have recognized and welcomed any evidence that has been developed during the preceding year of willingness on the part of foreign investors to undertake enterprises in the countries of the area, especially if these enterprises happen to be undertaken with local capital—as was the case, for example, with the oil project in Pakistan and the oil refinery investments in India. It promises to be the case in the investment finance corporations established in India and Ceylon.

PRIVATE CAPITAL MOBILIZED

The countries of the area have not only, therefore, recognized the need and the scope for private foreign participation in the development process; they have also recognized the overwhelming problem of mobilizing private domestic capital. In the annual report, for example—that which was just prepared and which has not yet been published—they have noted that government measures can help to mobilize private capital by seeking are rather a frank and friendly review of what has been done and what still needs to be done.

The prevailing tone, for example, of the annual report just drafted at Ottawa is one of optimism combined with stark realism. The countries, when they reviewed the pace and the content of economic development during the year just passed, were able to conclude that significant and encouraging progress had been made in a number of important respects but that there was no room for relaxation of effort. They recognized that in some countries the progress realized was relatively small; that throughout the region as a whole the population has been growing rapidly (indeed, at an annual rate of slightly over 9 million) and that, therefore, food production per capita (despite very creditable increases in total food output) was still below prewar levels; that underemployment in rural areas was widespread and that unemployment in urban areas, particularly of educated persons, presented a serious social problem; that trained personnel in many fields was not yet available in sufficient numbers; that in some of the countries of the area the process of formulating balanced development programs was still not far enough along; that there was only a narrow margin of production over consumption and that, therefore, the level of savings and the level of tax revenues provided on the whole only a precarious base for development financing.

This is indeed a formidable enumeration of problems to be faced and difficulties to be overcome. It is, of course, not the whole story. Just as I did not want you to think that the annual meetings of the Colombo Plan group of countries were limited to an uncritical eulogy of results achieved, neither did I want you to think that they represented a session of breastbeating and complaining over the hardness of the task. Indeed, at this same Ottawa meeting which produced the catalogue of problems which I summarized a few minutes ago, the countries of the area were able also to record that their own outlays on development had increased considerably over those for the preceding year. In India, for example, development expenditures by public authorities for the year 1951-52 were roughly $550 million. For the year 1953-54, they had increased to $705 million and are expected for the year ending June 30 next to approximate $1,170 million if financing is available. For Pakistan the comparable figures are for the fiscal year 1951-52, $125 million; for the fiscal year 1953-54, $275 million.

These, indeed, are very creditable results and expectations. I mention them merely lest you think that the sessions of the Colombo Plan meetings are devoted entirely to lamenting over the difficulties of the economic development problems of the area. But to return great experiment in human relations." It is very rarely that governments are able to come together and with so much freedom and honesty and openness to say what they have done, what they have failed to do, what they still need to do, what they intend to do, and what are the political and cultural limitations upon what they can do.

If there is any conclusion to be drawn as concerns what the members of this Far East-America Council might learn from the experience, at governmental level, in the Colombo Plan, it is, I should think that there are almost limitless possibilities of fruitful cooperation between the United States and the countries of Asia if there is evidenced the same frankness, the same patience, and the same understanding. We in government know that there are difficulties in the way of establishing business connections in the countries of Asia. We know that there are frictions, there are uncertainties, there are difficulties of mutual understanding. However, from our experience at the governmental level we are quite certain there is a great fund of common interest and of common viewpoint. We conclude, therefore that there is much which should be done and can be done to accomplish the objective stated as the theme of this conference: "Strengthening Economic Ties Between the United States and Asia."

9. COMMUNIQUÉ OF THE CONFERENCE OF AFRO-ASIAN COUNTRIES, ISSUED AT BANDUNG, INDONESIA, APRIL 24, 1955¹

The Asian-African Conference, convened upon the invitation of the Prime Ministers of Burma, Ceylon, India, Indonesia and Pakistan met in Bandung from the 18th to the 24th April, 1955. In addition to the sponsoring countries the following 24 countries participated in the conference:

The Asian-African Conference considered problems of common interest and concern to countries of Asia and Africa and discussed ways and means by which their people could achieve fuller economic, cultural and political cooperation.

A. Economic Cooperation

1. The Asian-African Conference recognized the urgency of promoting economic development in the Asian-African region. There was a general desire for economic cooperation among the participating countries on the basis of mutual interest and respect for national sovereignty. The proposals with regard to economic cooperation within the participating countries do not preclude either the desirability or the need for cooperation with countries outside the region, including the investment of foreign capital. It was further recognized that the assistance being received by certain participating countries from outside the region, through international or under bilateral arrangements, had made a valuable contribution to the implementation of their development programmes.

2. The participating countries agreed to provide technical assistance to one another, to the maximum extent practicable, in the form of: experts, trainees, pilot projects and equipment for demonstration purposes; exchange of know-how and establishment of national, and where possible, regional training and research institutes for imparting technical knowledge and skills in cooperation with the existing international agencies.

3. The Asian-African Conference recommended: the early establishment of the Special United Nations Fund for Economic Development; the allocation by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development of a greater part of its resources to Asian-African countries; the early establishment of the International Finance Corporation which should include in its activities the undertaking of equity investment, and encouragement to the promotion of joint ventures among Asian-African countries in so far as this will promote their common stabilizing commodity trade in the region. The principle the scope of multilateral trade and payments was accepted, however, it was recognized that some countries would have recourse to bilateral trade arrangements in view of their economic conditions.

5. The Asian-African Conference recommended that action be taken by participating countries for stabilizing national prices of and demand for primary commodities by bilateral and multilateral arrangements, and that as far as possible and desirable, they should adopt a unified approach on this matter. The United Nations Permanent Advisory Commission on International Commodity Trade¹ and other international forums were mentioned.

6. The Asian-African Conference further recommended that African countries should diversify their export trade by their raw material, wherever economically feasible, be encouraged. Intraregional trade fairs should be promoted and encouraged. The exchange of trade delegations and groups of business men for change of information and of samples should be encouraged. View to promoting intraregional trade and normal facilities should be provided for transit trade of landlocked countries.

7. The Asian-African Conference attached considerable importance to Shipping and expressed concern that shipping lines raise their freight rates, often to the detriment of the countries. It recommended a study of this problem, and action thereafter, to induce the shipping lines to adopt a reasonable attitude. It was suggested that a study of railway transit trade may be made.

8. The Asian-African Conference agreed that encouragement be given to the establishment of national and regional insurance companies.

9. The Asian-African Conference felt that exchange of views on matters relating to oil, such as remittance of profits and taxes might eventually lead to the formulation of common policies.

10. The Asian-African Conference emphasized the significance of the development of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes, for the Asian-African countries. The Conference took the initiative of the Powers principally concerned in offering available information regarding the use of atomic energy for peaceful purposes;² urged the speedy establishment of the International Atomic Energy Agency³ which should provide for adequate representation of the Asian-African countries on the executive board of the Agency; and recommended to the Asian and African countries to take full advantage of the training and other facilities peaceful uses of atomic energy offered by the countries sponsoring such programmes.

11. The Asian-African Conference agreed to the appointment of Liaison Officers in participating countries, to be nominated by their respective national Governments, for the exchange of information and ideas on matters of mutual interest. It recommended that fuller use should be made of the existing international organizations, and participating countries who were not members of such international organizations, but were eligible, should secure membership.

12. The Asian-African Conference recommended that there should be prior consultation of participating countries in international forums with a view, as far as possible, to furthering their mutual economic interest. It is, however, not intended to form a regional bloc.

C. Cultural Cooperation

1. The Asian-African Conference was convinced that among the most powerful means of promoting understanding among nations is the development of cultural cooperation. Asia and Africa have been the cradle of great religions and civilizations which have enriched other cultures and civilizations while themselves being enriched in the process. Thus the cultures of Asia and Africa are based on spiritual and universal foundations. Unfortunately contacts among Asian and African countries were interrupted during the past centuries. The peoples of Asia and Africa are now animated by a keen and sincere desire to renew their old cultural contacts and develop new ones in the context of the modern world. All participating Governments at the Conference reiterated their determination to work for closer cultural cooperation.

2. The Asian-African Conference took note of the fact that the existence of colonialism in many parts of Asia and Africa in whatever form it may be not only prevents cultural cooperation but also suppresses the national cultures of the people. Some colonial powers have denied to their dependent peoples basic rights in the sphere of education and culture which hampers the development of their personality and also prevents cultural intercourse with other Asian and African peoples. This is particularly true in the case of Tunisia, Algeria, and Morocco, where the basic right of the people to study their own language and culture has been suppressed. Similar discrimination has been practised against African and coloured people in some parts of the Continent of Africa. The Conference felt that these policies amount to a denial of the fundamental rights in the and universality, the Conference believed that Asian and cultural cooperation should be developed in the larger world cooperation.

Side by side with the development of Asian-African culture the countries of Asia and Africa desire to develop culture with others. This would enrich their own culture and help in the promotion of world peace and understanding.

4. There are many countries in Asia and Africa which yet been able to develop their educational, scientific and institutions. The Conference recommended that countries and Africa which are more fortunately placed in this respect give facilities for the admission of students and trainees to their institutions. Such facilities should also be available to the Asian and African people in Africa to whom facilities for acquiring higher education are at present denied.

5. The Asian-African Conference felt that the promotion of cooperation among countries of Asia and Africa should be directed towards:

- (I) the acquisition of knowledge of each other's countries
- (II) mutual cultural exchange, and
- (III) exchange of information.

6. The Asian-African Conference was of opinion that at the best results in cultural cooperation would be achieved by bilateral arrangements to implement its recommendations, each country taking action on its own, wherever possible and appropriate.

C. Human Rights and Self-determination

1. The Asian-African Conference declared its full support of the fundamental principles of Human Rights as set forth in the Charter of the United Nations¹ and took note of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights² as a common standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations.

The Conference declared its full support of the principle of self-determination of peoples and nations as set forth in the Charter of the United Nations³ and took note of the United Nations resolution on the rights of peoples and nations to self-determination,⁴ which is a prerequisite of the full enjoyment of all fundamental Human Rights.

2. The Asian-African Conference deplored the policies and practices of racial segregation and discrimination which form the basis of government and human relations in large regions of Africa and in parts of the world. Such conduct is not only a gross violation human rights, but also a denial of the fundamental values of civilization and the dignity of man.

The Conference extended its warm sympathy and support for the courageous stand taken by the victims of racial discrimination, especially by the peoples of African and Indian and Pakistani origin in South Africa; applauded all those who sustain their cause, re-affirmed the determination of Asian-African peoples to eradicate every trace of racialism that might exist in their own countries; and pledged to use its full moral influence to guard against the danger of falling victims to the same evil in their struggle to eradicate it.

D. Problems of Dependent Peoples

1. The Asian-African Conference discussed the problems of dependent peoples and colonialism and the evils arising from the subjection of peoples to alien subjugation, domination and exploitation.

The Conference is agreed:

(a) in declaring that colonialism in all its manifestations is a evil which should speedily be brought to an end;

(b) in affirming that the subjection of peoples to alien subjugation, domination and exploitation constitutes a denial of fundamental human rights, is contrary to the Charter of the United Nations and is an impediment to the promotion of world peace and cooperation;

(c) in declaring its support of the cause of freedom and independence for all such people, and

(d) in calling upon the powers concerned to grant freedom and independence to such peoples.

2. In view of the unsettled situation in North Africa and of the persisting denial to the peoples of North Africa of their right to self-determination, the Asian-African Conference declared its support of the rights of the people of Algeria, Morocco and Tunisia to self-determination and independence and urged the French Government to bring about a peaceful settlement of the issue without delay.

E. Other Problems

1. In view of the existing tension in the Middle East, caused by the situation in Palestine and of the danger of that tension to world peace, the Asian-African Conference declared its support of the rights of the Arab people of Palestine and called for the implementation of the United Nations Resolutions on Palestine¹ and the achievement of the peaceful settlement of the Palestine question.

2. The Asian-African Conference, in the context of its expressed attitude on the abolition of colonialism, supported the Indonesian position in the case of West Irian based on the relevant articles of the Charter of the United Nations and the agreement between Indonesia and the Netherlands.¹

The Asian-African Conference urged the Netherlands to reopen negotiations as soon as possible, to implement the provisions under the above-mentioned agreements and expressed the hope that the United Nations would assist the parties in finding a peaceful solution to the dispute.²

3. The Asian-African Conference supported the position in the case of Aden and the Southern parts of Yemen Protectorates and urged the parties concerned to arrive at a settlement of the dispute.

F. Promotion of World Peace and Cooperation

1. The Asian-African Conference, taking note of the fact that several States have still not been admitted to the United Nations, considered that for effective cooperation for world peace and security in the United Nations should be universal, called on the Security Council to support the admission of all those States which are qualified for membership in terms of the Charter. In the opinion of the Asian-African Conference, the following among particular States, viz: Cambodia, Ceylon, Japan, Jordan, Libya, Nepal, and Vietnam were so qualified.³

The Conference considered that the representation of the Asian-African region on the Security Council, in accordance with the principle of equitable geographical distribution, was inadequate. It expressed the view that as regards the distribution of the permanent seats, the Asian-African countries which, under the present arrangement, arrived at in London in 1946, are precluded from being represented should be enabled to serve on the Security Council, so that they should make a more effective contribution to the maintenance of international peace and security.

2. The Asian-African Conference having considered the situation of international tension existing and the risks to the whole human race from the outbreak of global war, expressed the view that the destructive power of all types of armaments, including

² The question of West Irian (West New Guinea) was placed on the agenda of the Ninth Session of the U.N. General Assembly. The draft resolution all nations to the terrible consequences that would follow if such a war were to break out.

The Conference considered that disarmament and the prohibition of the production, experimentation and use of nuclear and thermo-nuclear weapons of war are imperative to save mankind and civilisation from the fear and prospect of wholesale destruction. It considered that the nations of Asia and Africa assembled here have a duty towards humanity and civilisation to proclaim their support for disarmament and for the prohibition of these weapons and to appeal to nations principally concerned and to world opinion, to bring about such disarmament and prohibition.

The Conference considered that effective international control should be established and maintained to implement such disarmament and prohibition and that speedy and determined efforts should be made to this end.

Pending the total prohibition of the manufacture of nuclear and thermo-nuclear weapons, this Conference appealed to all the powers concerned to reach agreement to suspend experiments with such weapons.

The Conference declared that universal disarmament is an absolute necessity for the preservation of peace and requested the United Nations to continue its efforts and appealed to all concerned speedily to bring about the regulation, limitation, control and reduction of all armed forces and armaments, including the prohibition of the production, experimentation and use of all weapons of mass destruction and to establish effective international control to this end.

G. Declaration on the Promotion of World Peace and Cooperation

The Asian-African Conference gave anxious thought to the question of world peace and cooperation. It viewed with deep concern the present state of international tension with its danger of an atomic world war. The problem of peace is correlative with the problem of international security. In this connection, all States should cooperate, especially through the United Nations, in bringing about the reduction of armaments and the elimination of nuclear weapons under effective international control. In this way, international peace can be promoted and nuclear energy may be used exclusively for peaceful purposes. This would help answer the needs particularly of Asia and Africa, for what they urgently require are social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom. Freedom and peace are interdependent. The right of self-determination must be enjoyed by all peoples, and freedom and independence must be granted, with the least possible delay, to those who are still dependent peoples. Indeed, all nations should have the right freely to choose their own political and economic systems and their own way of life, in conformity with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations.

Free from mistrust and fear, and with confidence towards each other, nations should practise tolerance and in peace with one another as good neighbours and dev cooperation on the basis of the following principles:

1. Respect for fundamental human rights and for the principles of the Charter of the United Nations.
2. Respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of nations.
3. Recognition of the equality of all races and of the rights of all nations large and small.
4. Abstention from intervention or interference in the affairs of another country.
5. Respect for the right of each nation to defend itself, collectively, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations.
6. (a) Abstention from the use of arrangements of collective defence to serve the particular interests of any of the countries.
(b) Abstention by any country from exerting pressure on other countries.
7. Refraining from acts or threats of aggression or the use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any country.
8. Settlement of all international disputes by peaceful means, such as negotiation, conciliation, arbitration or judicial settlement, as well as other peaceful means of the parties' own choice, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations.
9. Promotion of mutual interests and cooperation.
10. Respect for justice and international obligations.

The Asian-African Conference declared its conviction that cooperation in accordance with these principles would effectively contribute to the maintenance and promotion of international security, while cooperation in the economic, social and cultural fields would help bring about the common prosperity and well-being of all peoples.

The Asian-African Conference recommended that the participating countries¹ consider the convening of the next meeting of the Conference, in consultation with the participating countries.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report² dated 27 September 1954 of the Government of the Union of Burma on the situation relating to the presence of foreign forces in its territory,

Having taken note of the report³ of the Joint Military Committee for the Evacuation of Foreign Forces from Burma the efforts of which were directed to securing the removal of these foreign forces,

2. Expresses its appreciation of the efforts of the Governments of the United States of America and of Thailand in helping to bring about this evacuation;

3. Deplores the fact that considerable foreign forces with a significant quantity of arms still remain in the territory of the Union of Burma and have failed to respond to the declarations of the General Assembly that they should either leave the territory of the Union of Burma or submit to internment;⁴

4. Declares once more that these forces should submit to disarmament and internment;

5. Assures the Government of the Union of Burma of its continuing sympathy with and support of the efforts of that Government to bring about a complete solution of this serious problem;

11. EXCHANGE OF VIEWS: Joint Statement by the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Burma, July 2, 1955¹

The Prime Minister of Burma, His Excellency U Nu, has visited Washington for three days at the invitation of President Eisenhower. The President and the Prime Minister discussed many matters of common concern and exchanged views on current international problems.

The Prime Minister, the President and the Secretary of State reviewed problems of peace and security in Asia. They had a frank discussion of the complex economic problems arising from the existence of substantial surpluses of exportable rice both in Burma—one of the world's leading rice exporting countries—and in the United States.

Note was taken of the salutary influence of religion as exemplified by the Sixth Buddhist Synod presently being held in Rangoon and attended by leading Buddhist scholars from many nations.

The problem of imprisoned American fliers in Communist China was reviewed.²

These talks have been of special value in increasing mutual understanding between Burma and the United States. There is a wide area of agreement and a traditional friendship between Burma and the United States resting firmly upon certain noble concepts to which both countries subscribe. Our two peoples, those of the United States and the Union of Burma, share two fundamental goals, a peaceful world and a democratic way of life.

They reaffirmed their dedication to the ideal of peace and friendly cooperation amongst nations founded on international justice and morality. Both countries are deeply concerned with a subject that is predominant in the minds of all responsible world leaders today—the problem of achieving peace with justice, a peace based upon the liberty of human beings and the security of nations.

Such a peace can best be achieved by loyal steadfast support for the Charter of the United Nations. That is the surest and most practical avenue along which to seek peace with justice in this world. A patient striving to uphold the fundamental moral and religious beliefs underlying the Charter provides the best hope for the fulfillment of mankind's aspirations.

The Prime Minister, the President and the Secretary of State deplored the conditions which force the peoples of the world to divert their energies and talents from a single-minded effort to improve and expand those cultural and economic opportunities by which men can

*Republic of the Philippines12. ECONOMIC SURVEY OF THE PHILIPPINES: Summary and Recommendations From the Report of the Bell Mission, October 9, 1950 (Excerpts) ¹

At the request of the President of the Philippine Republic, President Truman appointed a United States Economic Survey Mission to consider the economic and financial problems of that country and to recommend measures that will enable the Philippines to become and to remain self-supporting. The Mission was instructed to survey all aspects of the Philippine economy, including agriculture, industry, internal and external finances, domestic and foreign trade, and public administration. The Mission was asked to give special consideration to immediate measures to help raise production and living standards in the Philippines. The Mission has had the full cooperation of the Philippine Government and of many individuals and organizations outside the Government. Their help has been invaluable in providing the Mission with the data necessary for its work.

Economic conditions in the Philippines are unsatisfactory. The economic situation has been deteriorating in the past 2 years and the factors that have brought this about cannot be expected to remedy themselves. Unless positive measures are taken to deal with the fundamental causes of these difficulties, it must be expected that the economic situation will deteriorate further and political disorder will inevitably result. Whatever is to be done to improve economic conditions in the Philippines must be done promptly, for if the situation is allowed to drift there is no certainty that moderate remedies will suffice.

The mission recommends that the following measures be taken:

1. That the finances of the Government be placed on a sound basis in order to avoid further inflation; that additional tax revenues be raised immediately in as equitable a manner as possible to meet the expenditures of the Government; that the tax structure be revised to increase the proportion of taxes collected from high incomes and large property holdings; that the tax collecting machinery be overhauled to secure greater efficiency in tax collection; that a credit policy be adopted which will encourage investment in productive enterprises; methods of increasing the yield from all basic crops; that the Department of Agriculture and Natural Resources be adequately supplied with funds and the agricultural extension service expanded; that the agricultural college at Los Baños be rehabilitated and the experiment station located there, with other stations at appropriate places throughout the country; that rural banks be established to provide production credit for small farmers; that the open lands for settlement in homesteads be expedited and the clearing of land titles promptly assured; that a program of land redistribution be undertaken through the purchase of large estates for redistribution to small farmers; and that measures be undertaken to provide small farmers with reasonable security on their land and an equitable share of the crops they produce.

3. That steps be taken to diversify the economy of the country by encouraging new industries; that adequate power and transportation facilities be provided as needed for further economic development; that a Philippine Development Corporation be established to coordinate all government corporations and enterprises and to liquidate those that are ineffective; that financial assistance be made available to productive enterprises by the Corporation acting in cooperation with private banks; that the natural resources of the country be systematically explored to determine their potentialities for economic development; and that the present laws and practices with respect to the use of the public domain be re-examined.

4. That to avoid a further deterioration in the international trade position and to reduce the excessive demand for foreign exchange, a special emergency tax of 25 percent be levied for a period not exceeding two years on imports of all goods other than rice, corn, flour, fish, canned milk and fertilizer; that if such an emergency levy is not possible under the Trade Agreement with the United States,¹ either very heavy excise taxes should be imposed on imports or a 25 percent should be levied on all sales of exchange; that, as an interim measure, the present exchange and import controls be re-examined, their administration be simplified and liberalized and the repatriation of current earnings be permitted; that a Treaty of Commerce and Navigation be concluded between the Philippines and the United States and the present Trade Agreement be re-examined in the light of the new conditions.

5. That an adequate program of public health and improvement of living conditions be undertaken, and better facilities for urban housing be provided; that the right of workers to organize free trade unions be guaranteed and their economic interests be established through appropriate legislation; that the Philippine economy be diversified through appropriate be placed on a merit basis and civil service salaries raised to provide a decent standard of living; that the Philippine Government remove barriers to the employment of foreign technicians and take steps to improve training facilities for technicians in the Philippines; and that in accordance with the request of the Philippine Government, the United States send a Technical Mission to assist the Philippine Government in carrying out its agricultural and industrial development, fiscal controls, public administration, and labor and social welfare program.

7. That the United States Government provide financial assistance of 250 million dollars through loans and grants, to help in carrying out a 5-year program of economic development and technical assistance; that this aid be strictly conditioned on steps being taken by the Philippine Government to carry out the recommendations outlined above, including the immediate enactment of tax legislation and other urgent reforms; that expenditure of United States funds under this recommendation, including pesos derived from United States loans and grants, be subject to continued supervision and control of the Technical Mission; that the use of funds provided by the Philippine Government for economic and social development be co-ordinated with the expenditure of the United States funds made available for this purpose; and that an agreement be made for final settlement of outstanding financial claims between the United States and the Philippines, including funding of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation loan of 60 million dollars.¹

13. PROGRESS REPORT ON DEVELOPMENTS IN THE PHILIPPINES: Statement to the Press by the American Ambassador to the Republic of the Philippines,² June 15, 1951³

I should like to give you a progress report on developments in the Philippines and our relations with that gallant ally of ours. As a result of 50 years of American tutelage and out of loyalty to and affection for the United States, the Philippines unfalteringly stood by us when Japan embarked on its program to conquer Asia. The surrender of Japan found the Philippines destroyed and laid waste to an extent which has happened to few countries in modern history, and of which few Americans can even begin to conceive.

Against this background of death and destruction, the United States, in compliance with its undertakings transferred sovereignty to the Philippines on July 4, 1946,⁴ and agreed to assist in its rehabilitation.

tion.¹ It was to be expected that the first 5 years of Philippine independence would encounter the most serious difficulties, in view of the growing menace of the international conspiracy.

Altogether too much is heard in this country of what is wrong in the Philippines, and I would be less than fair to our Filipino friends if I denied that there is much wrong. Far more important, however, is that there is much that is right and, in all honesty, I can tell you that I am supremely confident the Philippines is well on the way to regaining the confidence we have placed in it.

Because of misleading publicity, I suspect that the first automatic reaction of the average American when he thinks of the Philippines is, "What happened to the 2 billion dollars the United States gave the Philippines?"

I believe this is as good a time as any to dispel once and for all the misconceptions about this 2 billion dollars worth of American aid. The best way to do it is to show what the United States has done with what this 2 billion dollars really consists of.

In the first place, the United States paid out 400 million dollars for private war damage claims, of which the majority were in the amount of less than 500 dollars each, and for the reconstruction of public buildings. At the same time, the United States spent roughly 1 billion dollars in the reconstruction of such essential public services as roads and bridges, ports and harbors, public health, fisheries, water supply, ice, coast surveys, interisland shipping, and civil air facilities.

Another category of American payments during the first 5 years of independence fell into a more strictly military category. A total of 822 million dollars was paid out by the American government for back pay for Philippine armed forces, civilian claims against the military, civil relief, redemption of the guerrilla currency, military benefits, and other items for military pay and construction of military bases and services.

The Veterans Administration paid out 181 million dollars in compensation to Filipino veterans.

An arrangement was also made to transfer surplus property to the Philippines at a fair value of 100 million dollars. Other kinds of economic and material and technical assistance to the amount of 1 billion dollars were also made available.

The foregoing adds up to a dollar value of less than 1.9 billion dollars. It should be noted that it was all in the form of goods and services, and payments to individuals. Not a single centavo of this total was paid to the Philippine Government in cash. The only direct financial aid has been an RFC budgetary loan of 60 million dollars.

United States dollar exchange, much of which could undoubtedly have been spent more wisely than it was. We should remember, however, that the end of hostilities found the Philippines stripped of all consumer goods. It will still take many long years to replace what was destroyed.

The Philippine Government itself realized the danger of its position when its dollar reserves, during 1949, decreased from 400 million dollars to 248 million dollars. To remedy this situation the Philippine Government imposed the most stringent import regulations with the result that its reserves are now back to the 400 million dollars level. In addition, improved collection of taxes and the imposition of new taxes in the face of serious political opposition give us confidence that the Philippine budget will be balanced this year.

And lastly, Philippine production, particularly of such strategic and important commodities as copra, abaca, sugar, lumber, and minerals is now encouragingly close to the prewar level. I maintain that in view of the obstacles which had to be overcome and those which still remain, the record of Philippine self-help and American assistance is a good one. The purpose of the United States now is to extend the assistance necessary to preserve and extend the gains which have been made.

Last year the Bell Mission made a most excellent survey and made recommendations for the improvement of the Philippine economy. Pursuant to the Quirino-Foster agreement,¹ recommendations of the Bell Mission² are now in process of implementation, both by the Philippines and by the United States.

With American military assistance, the rejuvenated Philippine armed forces are now making significant inroads on the strength and capabilities of the Communist-dominated Huk movement. The presence of the Seventh Fleet in Philippine waters has contributed significantly to Philippine morale. American naval and air bases are being expanded. These specific measures are giving the Philippine people confidence that President Truman and the Secretary of State have meant exactly what they said when they categorically stated publicly that the United States would never tolerate aggression against the Philippines.

Philippine efforts at self-improvement and of cooperation with the free world (for example, the splendid showing of Filipino troops in Korea) persuade me that the Philippines is convinced the United States, as in the past, will keep its pledged faith. In return we can know that in Asia we have no more devoted or staunch friend and ally.

14. ESTABLISHMENT OF THE COUNCIL UNDER THE UNITED STATES-PHILIPPINE MUTUAL DEFENSE TREATY
From the Secretary of State to the Philippine Chargé d'Affaires, Washington,¹ June 23, 1954²

SIR: I refer to my conversation with General Carlos P. Garcia, Personal and Special Representative of the President of the Philippines, on June 15, 1954, in regard to implementation of the Mutual Defense Treaty between the United States of America and the Republic of the Philippines,³ and to an aide-memoire handed to the Acting Secretary of State by the Personal and Special Representative of the President of the Philippines on June 3, 1954.

During the discussions on June 15, between the Personal and Special Representative of the President of the Philippines and the Secretary of State, we were in agreement that, pursuant to the provisions of the Mutual Defense Treaty, and in the light of current international developments, it would be useful to establish a Council consisting of the Secretary of State, or his Deputy, and the Secretary of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of the Philippines, or his Deputy, so that each member of the Council would designate a military representative; that consultations will be held upon the request of either party; and that the time and place of such meetings will be determined by mutual agreement.⁴

I should be glad to know whether the foregoing is acceptable to the Government of the Philippines.⁵ If so, we shall promptly act accordingly.

Accept, Sir, the renewed assurances of my high consideration.

15. REVISED UNITED STATES-PHILIPPINE TRADE AGREEMENT
MENT: Statement by the Department of State, September 6, 1955⁶

The Department of State announced on September 6 (p. 529) that a revised agreement between the Republic of the Philippines and the United States regarding trade arrangements and other matters was signed on that date at the Department.

³ Treaty of Aug. 30, 1951; supra, pp. 873-875.

⁴ The first meeting of the Council took place in Manila, Sept. 4, 1954.

ment was signed on behalf of the Philippines by Gen. Carlos P. Romulo, Special and Personal Envoy of the President of the Philippines; James M. Langley, Special Representative of the President of the United States of America, signed on behalf of the United States. It will enter into force on January 1, 1956.

The title of the agreement is "Agreement between the United States of America and the Republic of the Philippines concerning Trade and Related Matters during a Transitional Period following the Institution of Philippine Independence, signed at Manila on July 4, 1946, as revised."¹ The authorizing legislation of the U. S. Congress is Public Law 196, 84th Congress, the Philippine Trade Agreement Revision Act of 1955.²

The 1946 trade agreement³ was entered into at the time the Philippines gained its independence. At that time there were no precedents to indicate exactly how the problems of the new relationship which was to exist between the Philippines and the United States might best be met. During the 9 years of operation of this agreement problems arose on both sides suggesting the need for revisions. These revisions, affecting every article of the agreement, provide for adjustments which better accommodate the current and future economic interests of both nations and effect changes in their relationships which were mutually felt desirable as a result of the experiences of the Philippines in handling its political and economic problems since the Philippines became independent in 1946. The modification of transitional tariff schedules coupled with the elimination of an exchange tax in the Philippines is an important element of the revised agreement.

The further economic development of the Philippines is one of the objectives of the new agreement. Such development, in addition to enhancing the importance of the Philippines as a trading partner of the United States, serves to strengthen a staunch friend and close ally.

At the same time an additional agreement, relating to the status of U.S. and Philippine traders and investors entering the territories of the parties, was effected by an exchange of notes.⁴ This agreement entered into force immediately.

SUMMARY OF MODIFICATIONS CONTAINED IN THE REVISED TRADE AGREEMENT

(effective January 1, 1956)

Article I: The revised agreement replaces the schedules for the gradual disappearance of tariff preferences for Philippine articles imported into the United States and for U.S. articles imported into the Philippines by new schedules which are more liberal than the present Philippine Tariff, as set forth below:

PERCENTAGES OF CUSTOMS DUTIES TO BE APPLIED

By the United States to imports from the Philippines			By the Philippines to imports from the United States

This article also provides for the elimination by the United States of the present 17 percent exchange tax and its replacement by a temporary special import levy which will be reduced at the rate of 1 percent per year beginning in 1957. The latter will apply to imports of invisibles as did the exchange tax.

Article II: The revised agreement modifies U.S. quotas on Philippine products by:

- a) Eliminating quotas on rice.
- b) Removing absolute quotas on cigars, scrap tobacco and buttons and providing a new and slower schedule for a progressive decrease in duty-free quotas on these products.
- c) Removing any impediment to possible future increase in absolute quotas on sugar.

Article V: The revised agreement eliminates the old article relating to limitations on changes in the Philippine exchange rate and on restrictions on transferability of funds. The new language substituted provides for Philippine implementation of U.S. proposals for reciprocal arrangements to facilitate the entry and stay in either country of persons classifiable as traders and investors.

Article VI: The obsolete terms of the old agreement relating to immigration are replaced in the revised agreement by the modified terms of former article VII. These terms mutualize as between citizens of both countries the right to use and exploit natural resources and operate public utilities on the basis of national treatment.

Article VII: The revised agreement contains here a new article providing for reciprocal nondiscrimination by either party against the citizens or enterprises of the other with respect to engaging in business activities.

Article VIII: The revised agreement inserts here security exceptions not previously contained.

Article IX: With deletion of obsolete terms, former article VII regarding implementing legislation in both countries is repeated here.

Article X: Old article IX providing for consultations on interpretation or application is amended to provide for consultations 3 years prior to termination.

Article XI: Obsolete portions of former terminating article X are deleted, leaving those portions applying to termination with the insertion of the effective date of the revisions.

Protocol: Some revised definitions are substituted.

C. INDOCHINA

United States Policy Regarding the Communist Threat in Indochina, 1950-1953

16. UNITED STATES RECOGNITION OF INCREASED SOVEREIGNTY IN THE STATE OF VIET-NAM: Note From the United States Ambassador-at-Large¹ to the Chief of State of Viet-Nam, January 27, 1950³

the French Republic at the beginning of this year,¹ and its best wishes for the future of the State of Viet Nam with looks forward to establishing a closer relationship. My Government believes that both the people of Viet Nam and the people are to be congratulated on this development.

The Secretary of State also asked me to express his personal assurance that Your Majesty will succeed in his present endeavors to bring about stability and prosperity in Viet Nam, which, Your Majesty is assured, my Government is following with close attention.

17. UNITED STATES RECOGNITION OF VIET-NAM AND CAMBODIA: Statement by the Department of State, January 7, 1950²

The Government of the United States has accorded diplomatic recognition to the Governments of the State of Viet Nam, the Kingdom of Laos, and the Kingdom of Cambodia.

The President, therefore, has instructed the American Ambassador at Saigon to inform the heads of Government of the State of Viet Nam, the Kingdom of Laos, and the Kingdom of Cambodia that we extend diplomatic recognition to their Governments and to forward to an exchange of diplomatic representatives between the United States and these countries.

Our diplomatic recognition of these Governments is based on the formal establishment of the State of Viet Nam, the Kingdom of Laos, and the Kingdom of Cambodia as independent states within the French Union; this recognition is consistent with our fundamental policy of giving support to the peaceful and democratic evolution of dependent peoples toward self-government and independence.

In June of last year, this Government expressed its gratification at the signing of the France-Viet Name agreements of which provided the basis for the evolution of Viet Name independence within the French Union. These agreements, together with similar accords between France and the Kingdoms of Laos and Cambodia, have now been ratified by the French National Assembly and signed by the President of the French Republic. This ratification has established the independence of Viet Nam, Laos, and Cambodia as associated states within the French Union.

It is anticipated that the full implementation of these basic agreements and of supplementary accords which have been negotiated and are awaiting ratification will promote political stability like-minded nations, that this development shall not be hindered by internal dissension fostered from abroad.

The status of the American consulate general in Saigon will be raised to that of a legation, and the Minister who will be accredited to all three states will be appointed by the President.

18. EXTENSION OF MILITARY AND ECONOMIC AID: Statement by the Secretary of State, May 8, 1950 ¹

The [French] Foreign Minister² and I have just had an exchange of views on the situation in Indochina and are in general agreement both as to the urgency of the situation in that area and as to the necessity for remedial action. We have noted the fact that the problem of meeting the threat to the security of Viet Nam, Cambodia, and Laos which now enjoy independence within the French Union is primarily the responsibility of France and the Governments and peoples of Indochina. The United States recognizes that the solution of the Indochina problem depends both upon the restoration of security and upon the development of genuine nationalism and that United States assistance can and should contribute to these major objectives.

The United States Government, convinced that neither national independence nor democratic evolution exist in any area dominated by Soviet imperialism, considers the situation to be such as to warrant its according economic aid and military equipment to the Associated States of Indochina and to France in order to assist them in restoring stability and permitting these states to pursue their peaceful and democratic development.

19. ECONOMIC AID PROGRAM: Note From the American Chargé d'Affaires at Saigon ³ to the Chiefs of State of Viet-Nam, Laos, and Cambodia, May 24, 1950 ⁴

I have the honor to inform you that the Government of the United States has decided to initiate a program of economic aid to the States of Cambodia, Laos, and Vietnam. My Government has reached this decision in order to assist Cambodia, Laos, and Vietnam to restore stability and pursue their peaceful and democratic development.

With these purposes in mind, the United States Government is establishing, with headquarters in Saigon and associated with the United States Legation, a special economic mission to Cambodia working with the Governments of Cambodia, Laos, and Vietnam with the French High Commissioner in developing and carrying out a coordinated program of economic aid designed to assist these countries in restoring their normal economic life. The American economic mission will, at all times, be subject to the authority of the Government of the United States and will become a part of the administrations of the Associated States.

The Government of the United States recognizes that this assistance will be complementary to the effort made by the Associated States and France, without any intention of substituting American aid is designed to reinforce the joint effort of the Governments and peoples of Cambodia, Laos, and Vietnam, to whom rests the primary responsibility for the restoration of peace and stability.

United States economic aid will be granted in accordance with separate bilateral agreements between each of the Associated States and the United States of America. The approval of these agreements will be subject to legal conventions existing between the United States and France. Initial economic aid operations, however, will begin prior to the conclusion of these agreements.

The United States Government is of the opinion that it is desirable for the three governments and the French High Commissioner to reach agreement among themselves for the coordination of those matters relating to the aid program that are of common interest. The American economic mission will maintain contact with the Associated States, with the French High Commissioner in Vietnam, and, if desired, with any body which may be set up by the Associated States and France in connection with the aid program.

Mr. Robert Blum has been appointed Chief of the United States special economic mission to Cambodia, Laos, and Vietnam.

Identical letters are being addressed today to the governments of Cambodia, Laos, Vietnam and the President of the French Republic.

20. THE MILITARY AID PROGRAM: Statement by the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Defense, September 23, 1950

Discussions which have been going on for the past weeks between the General of the Army, Jean de Lattre de Tassigny, French southeast Asia. United States officials stated that General de Lattre's presentation of the situation in that area had been invaluable to them and had demonstrated that United States and French policies in the Associated States were not at variance.

In the course of the discussions with the Department of Defense the military-aid program for Indochina was reexamined, with the result that considerable improvement will be made in the rate of deliveries of many items of equipment. General de Lattre has been advised that the question of additional aid for the French and Viet-Nam forces in Indochina in the fiscal year 1952 program is under study by the United States Government.

21. THE DEFENSE OF INDOCHINA: Communiqué Regarding Discussions Between Representatives of the United States, France, Viet-Nam, and Cambodia, June 18, 1952¹

Mr. Jean Letourneau, Minister in the French Cabinet for the Associated States in Indochina, has just concluded a series of conversations with U.S. Government officials from the Department of State, Department of Defense, the Office of Director for Mutual Security, the Mutual Security Agency, and Department of the Treasury. The Ambassadors of Cambodia and Viet-Nam have also participated in these talks.

The principle which governed this frank and detailed exchange of views and information was the common recognition that the struggle in which the forces of the French Union and the Associated States are engaged against the forces of Communist aggression in Indochina is an integral part of the world-wide resistance by the Free Nations to Communist attempts at conquest and subversion. There was unanimous satisfaction over the vigorous and successful course of military operations, in spite of the continuous comfort and aid received by the Communist forces of the Viet-Minh from Communist China. The excellent performance of the Associated States' forces in battle was found to be a source of particular encouragement. Special tribute was paid to the 52,000 officers and men of the French Union and Associated States' armies who have been lost in this six years' struggle for freedom in Southeast Asia and to the 75,000 other casualties.

In this common struggle, however, history, strategic factors, as well as local and general resources require that the free countries concerned each assume primary responsibility for resistance in the specific areas where Communism has resorted to force of arms. The that success in this continuing struggle would entail an the common effort and that the United States for its part fore, within the limitations set by Congress, take steps to aid to the French Union. It was further agreed that the assistance over and above present U.S. aid for Indochina, approximates one third of the total cost of Indochina, would be especially devoted to assisting France in the building national armies of the Associated States.

Mr. Letourneau reviewed the facts which amply demonstrate the determination of the Associated States to pursue with increased the strengthening of their authority and integrity both against subversion and against external aggression.

In this connection Mr. Letourneau reminded the participants of the accords of 1949,¹ which established the independence of the French Union of Cambodia, Laos and Viet-Nam, have been interpreted and supplemented by other agreements, thus confirming this independence. Mr. Letourneau pointed out that the governments of the Associated States now exercise full authority except for a strictly limited number of services related to the necessities of the war now in progress remain temporarily in French hands. In the course of the examination of the Far Eastern economic situation, it was noted that the Governments of the Associated States are free to negotiate trade treaties and agreements of all kinds with their neighbors subject only to whatever special arrangements may be agreed between members of the French Union.

It was noted that these states have been recognized by the majority of foreign governments.

The conversations reaffirmed the common determination of the participants to prosecute the defense of Indochina and their efforts to secure a free, peaceful and prosperous future for Cambodia and Viet-Nam.

Mr. Letourneau was received by the President, Mr. A. J. A. Mr. Foster, as Acting Secretary of Defense. Mr. Joseph P. Kamp, Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs, acted as spokesman of the U.S. Delegation participating in the conversations.

22. SUPPORT BY NATO OF THE FRENCH UNION EFFORTS IN INDOCHINA: Resolution Adopted by Atlantic Council, December 17, 1952 ²

The North Atlantic Council

HAVING BEEN INFORMED at its meeting in Paris on the 16th December of the latest developments in the military and political situation in Indo-China;

Expresses its wholehearted admiration for the valiant and long continued struggle by the French forces and the armies of the Associated States against Communist aggression; and Acknowledges that the resistance of the free nations in South-East Asia as in Korea is in fullest harmony with the aims and ideals of the Atlantic Community;

And therefore agrees that the campaign waged by the French Union forces in Indo-China deserves continuing support from the NATO governments.

23. UNITED STATES SUPPORT OF LAOS AGAINST THE VIET MINH INVASION: Statement by the Department of State, April 17, 1953¹

The Royal Government of Laos has issued a statement drawing attention to the attack upon the territory of the Kingdom by Viet Minh troops and stating the determination of the Government, the army, and the people of Laos with the aid of French Union troops to resist this aggression.²

The Government of the United States is following developments with the closest attention. It expresses its sympathy with the people of Laos in their present emergency and its fervent wishes to them to their troops, and to those of the French Union in their efforts to resist and turn back the invaders. The United States will continue to provide and will study ways and means of making more effective its assistance to the Associated States of Indochina and to France in the struggle to destroy Communist aggression in Laos, Cambodia, and Vietnam.

24. UNITED STATES EMERGENCY AID TO LAOS AND THAILAND IN THE FACE OF VIET MINH AGGRESSION: Statement by the Secretary of State at a News Conference, May 9, 1953³

In view of the recent, rapid sequence of events in the Far East, I believe it would be appropriate to summarize for you our actions concerning developments in Laos and Thailand.

the free world to condemn the aggression, the United States statement of support and sympathy.¹

The urgent need for cargo aircraft to aid French and Laotians in meeting this aggression was discussed by me with French officials during our stay in Paris for the recent NATO meeting.²

Within 24 hours it was agreed at the highest level that such aircraft, if available, should be dispatched to Indochina. Within 48 hours the aircraft were located with the Far East Command. Within another 24 hours civilian operators were located to fly the aircraft because the French did not have crews accustomed to flying cargo planes and we did not desire that our military personnel be sent into the combat zone. The plan was actually put into effect within a few hours after our return from Paris, and the aircraft arrived at Hanoi on May 5 and were made operational in Laos.

Three days prior to the arrival of the aircraft in Hanoi, the United States announced on May 2³ that we were maintaining close contact with the Governments of Laos and of France regarding the developments of the situation and that the Mutual Security Administration Mission in Laos had made arrangements to help ease the economic problem by making available certain funds and supplies.

The Ambassador from Thailand, Pote Sarasin, came to Washington at 3:30 p.m. on Tuesday of this week, May 5, to discuss the situation confronting his country as a result of the Viet Minh invasion.

The Ambassador expressed his country's urgent need for arms and ammunition and for various military items urgently requested by the Thai Navy, Army, and Air Force, which requests have simultaneously been made through the U.S. Military Assistance Group and our Embassy at Bangkok. Within 24 hours of the Ambassador's request certain amounts of such ammunition were sent by the air on their way to Bangkok from the Pacific area, and it was taken to expedite delivery of the other military items.

These two instances illustrate a capacity for decision and action and of cooperative teamwork between the Department of State and Defense, which should, I believe, be gratifying to the American people. Also, they should be impressive to others, whether friends or aggressors.

25. THE CONSEQUENCES OF DIRECT CHINESE COMMUNIST INTERVENTION IN INDOCHINA: Address by the President of the United States of America, September 2, 1953 (Excerpt)⁵ communism to conquer freedom. More immediately it is part of that effort in Asia.

A single Chinese-Communist aggressive front extends from Korea on the north to Indochina in the south. The armistice in Korea, even if it leads to a political settlement in Korea, does not end United States concern in the western Pacific area. As President Eisenhower said in his April 16 speech,¹ a Korean armistice would be a fraud if it merely released Communist forces for attack elsewhere.

In Indochina a desperate struggle is in its eighth year. The outcome affects our own vital interests in the western Pacific, and we are already contributing largely in material and money to the combined efforts of the French and of Viet-Nam, Laos, and Cambodia.

We Americans have too little appreciated the magnitude of the effort and sacrifices which France has made in defense of an area which is no longer a French colony but where complete independence is now in the making. This independence program is along lines which the United States has encouraged and justifies increased United States aid, provided that will assure an effort there that is vigorous and decisive.

Communist China has been and now is training, equipping, and supplying the Communist forces in Indochina. There is the risk that, as in Korea, Red China might send its own army into Indochina. The Chinese Communist regime should realize that such a second aggression could not occur without grave consequences which might not be confined to Indochina. I say this soberly in the interest of peace and in the hope of preventing another aggressor miscalculation.

We want peace in Indochina, as well as in Korea. The political conference about to be held relates in the first instance to Korea. But growing out of that conference could come, if Red China wants it, an end of aggression and restoration of peace in Indochina. The United States would welcome such a development.

26. ADDITIONAL UNITED STATES AID FOR FRANCE AND INDOCHINA: Joint Franco-American Communiqué, September 30, 1953 ²

The forces of France and the Associated States in Indochina have for 8 years been engaged in a bitter struggle to prevent the engulfment of Southeast Asia by the forces of international communism. The heroic efforts and sacrifices of these French Union allies in assuring the liberty of the new and independent states of Cambodia, Laos and

The French Government is firmly resolved to carry out its declaration of July 3, 1953,¹ by which it announced its intention of perfecting the independence of the three Associated States of Indochina, through negotiations with the Associated States.

The Governments of France and the United States have agreed that, in support of plans of the French Government for intensified prosecution of the war against the Viet Minh, the United States will make available to the French Government prior to December 31, 1954 additional financial resources not to exceed $500 million. This aid is in addition to funds already earmarked by the United States for aid to France and the Associated States.

The French Government is determined to make every effort to break up and destroy the regular enemy forces in Indochina. To this end the government intends to carry through, in close cooperation with the Cambodian, Laotian, and Vietnamese Governments, plans for increasing the Associated States forces while maintaining temporarily French forces to levels considered necessary for the success of existing military plans. The additional United States aid is designed to help make it possible to achieve these objectives with maximum speed and effectiveness.

The increased French effort in Indochina will not entail any permanent alteration of the French Government's plans for its NATO forces.

The Indochina Phase of the Geneva Conference

27. PLANS FOR THE GENEVA CONFERENCE ON KOREA AND INDOCHINA: Quadripartite Communiqué of the Berlin Conference, February 18, 1954²

A meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the United States, the United Kingdom, and the Soviet Union—Mr. John Foster Dulles, Mr. Georges Bidault, Mr. Anthony Eden, and M. Vyacheslav Molotov—took place in Berlin between January 25 and February 1, 1954. They reached the following agreements:

(A)

The Foreign Ministers of the United States, France,

...establishing that the establishment, by peaceful means, of a united and independent Korea would be an important factor in reducing international tension and in restoring peace in other parts of Asia.

PROPOSE that a conference of representatives of the United States, France, the United Kingdom, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the Chinese People's Republic, the Republic of Korea, the People's Democratic Republic of Korea, and the other countries the armed forces of which participated in the hostilities in Korea, and which desire to attend, shall meet in Geneva on April 26 for the purpose of reaching a peaceful settlement of the Korean question;¹

AGREE that the problem of restoring peace in Indochina will also be discussed at the conference, to which representatives of the United States, France, the United Kingdom, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the Chinese People's Republic, and other interested states will be invited.

It is understood that neither the invitation to, nor the holding of the above-mentioned conference shall be deemed to imply diplomatic recognition in any case where it has not already been accorded.

(B)

The Governments of the United States of America, of France, of the United Kingdom, and of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Convinced that the solution of international controversies necessary for the establishment of a lasting peace would be considerably aided by an agreement on disarmament, or at least on a substantial reduction of armaments,

WILL SUBSEQUENTLY HOLD an exchange of views to promote a successful solution of this problem as provided for in paragraph 6 of the United Nations resolution of November 28, 1953.²

The four Ministers have had a full exchange of views on the German question, on the problems of European security, and on the Austrian question. They were unable to reach agreement upon these matters.

28. VIEWS OF THE UNITED STATES ON THE EVE OF THE GENEVA CONFERENCE: Address by the Secretary of State, March 29, 1954³

This provides a timely occasion for outlining the Administration's thinking about two related matters—Indochina and the Chinese Communist regime.

I

Indochina

Indochina is important for many reasons. First—and are the human values. About 30 million people are themselves the dignity of self-government. Until a few years ago they formed merely a French dependency. Now, their three units—Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia—are exercising a measure of independent political authority within the French Union. Each of the three is now recognized by the United States and more than 30 other nations. They signed the Japanese Peace Treaty with us. Their independence is not yet complete. But the U.S. Government last July³ declared its intention to complete independence, and negotiations to consummate that pledge are now under way.

The United States is watching this development with concern and great sympathy. We do not forget that we were won its freedom. We have sponsored in the Philippines a most successful development of political independence. We have a sense of kinship with those everywhere who yearn for freedom.

Communist Imperialism

The Communists are attempting to prevent the orderly development of independence and to confuse the issue before the Communists have, in these matters, a regular line which they laid down in 1924.

The scheme is to whip up the spirit of nationalism so that it becomes violent. That is done by professional agitators. Their work is enlarged by Communist military and technical leadership and the provision of military supplies. In these ways, international Communism gets a strangle-hold on the people and it uses the word "amalgamate" the peoples into the Soviet orbit.

"Amalgamation" is Lenin's and Stalin's word to describe this process.

"Amalgamation" is now being attempted in Indochina under the ostensible leadership of Ho Chi Minh. He was introduced to Moscow. He became an associate of the Russian, but the latter was organizing the Chinese Communist Party to bring China into the Soviet orbit. Then Ho turned his activities to Indochina.

Those fighting under the banner of Ho Chi Minh have been trained and equipped in Communist China. They y the Skoda Munition Works in Czechoslovakia and transported across Russia and Siberia and then sent through China into Vietnam. Military supplies for the Communist armies have been pouring into Vietnam at a steadily increasing rate.

Military and technical guidance is supplied by an estimated 2,000 Communist Chinese. They function with the forces of Ho Chi Minh in key positions—in staff sections of the High Command, at the division level and in specialized units such as signal, engineering, artillery and transportation.

In the present stage, the Communists in Indochina use nationalistic anti-French slogans to win local support. But if they achieved military or political success, it is certain that they would subject the people to a cruel Communist dictatorship taking its orders from Peking and Moscow.

The Scope of the Danger

The tragedy would not stop there. If the Communist forces won uncontested control over Indochina or any substantial part thereof, they would surely resume the same pattern of aggression against other free peoples in the area.

The propagandists of Red China and Russia make it apparent that the purpose is to dominate all of Southeast Asia.

Southeast Asia is the so-called "rice bowl" which helps to feed the densely populated region that extends from India to Japan. It is rich in many raw materials, such as tin, oil, rubber and iron ore. It offers industrial Japan potentially important markets and sources of raw materials.

The area has great strategic value. Southeast Asia is astride the most direct and best developed sea and air routes between the Pacific and South Asia. It has major naval and air bases. Communist control of Southeast Asia would carry a grave threat to the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand, with whom we have treaties of mutual assistance.¹ The entire Western Pacific area, including the so-called "offshore island chain", would be strategically endangered.

President Eisenhower appraised the situation last Wednesday when he said that the area is of "transcendent importance".²

The United States Position

The United States has shown in many ways its sympathy for the gallant struggle being waged in Indochina by French forces and those of the Associated States. Congress has enabled us to provide material aid to the established governments and their peoples. Also that a Korean armistice would be a fraud if it merely released aggressive armies for attack elsewhere. I said last September that Red China sent its own army into Indochina, that would have grave consequences which might not be confined to Indochina.

Recent statements have been designed to impress upon aggressors that aggression might lead to action at places of their own free world choosing, so that aggression would be less than it could gain.²

The Chinese Communists have, in fact, avoided the direct use of their own Red armies in open aggression against Indochina. They have, however, largely stepped up their support of the French in that area. Indeed, they promote that aggression by the threat of short of open invasion.

Under all the circumstances it seems desirable to clarify the United States position.

Under the conditions of today, the imposition on Southeast Asia of the political system of Communist Russia and its Chinese ally, by whatever means, would be a grave threat to the peace of the community. The United States feels that that possibility should not be passively accepted, but should be met by united action. Such action might involve serious risks. But these risks are far less than those that will face us a few years from now, if we dare not be resolute.

The free nations want peace. However, peace is not had without sacrifice. Peace has to be worked for and planned for. It is necessary to take risks to win peace just as it is necessary to take risks to win victory. The chances for peace are not bettered by letting a potential aggressor know in advance that aggression could lead him to victory.

I hope that these statements which I make here tonight will help to the cause of peace.

II

Communist China

Let me now discuss our political relations with Red China. I will first discuss the matter of recognition.

The United States does not recognize the Chinese Communist regime. That is well known. But the reasons seem not to be well known. Some think that there are no reasons and that the policy is actuated purely by emotion. Your Government believes that its position is soberly rational.

Non-Recognition

erally, it is useful that there should be diplomatic intercourse between those who exercise de facto governmental authority and it is well established that recognition does not imply moral approval.

President Monroe, in his famous message to Congress, denounced the expansionist and despotic system of Czarist Russia and its allies. But he said that it would nevertheless be our policy "to consider the government de facto as the legitimate government for us".¹ That has indeed been the general United States policy, and I believe that it is a sound general policy. However, where it does not serve our interests, we are free to vary from it.

In relation to Communist China, we are forced to take account of the fact that the Chinese Communist regime has been consistently and viciously hostile to the United States.

A typical Chinese Communist pamphlet reads: "We Must Hate America, because She is the Chinese People's Implacable Enemy" "We Must Despise America because it is a Corrupt Imperialist Nation, the World Center of Reaction and Decadency"; "We Must Look down upon America because She is a Paper Tiger and Entirely Vulnerable to Defeat".

By print, by radio, by drama, by pictures, with all the propaganda skills which Communism has devised, such themes are propagated by the Red rulers. They vent their hatred by barbarous acts, such as seizures and imprisonments of Americans.

Those responsible for United States policy must ask and answer "Will it help our country if, by recognition, we give increased prestige and influence to a regime that actively attacks our vital interests?" I can find only the answer "No".

Admission to the United Nations

Let us turn now to the matter of seating Red China in the United Nations. By the Charter, membership is supposed to be limited to "peace-loving" states. Therefore, it is relevant to recall that the Chinese Communist regime became an aggressor in the latter part of 1950. Its armies invaded Korea and waged war against the United Nations Command. They contributed largely to the killing, wounding or losing in action of about 500,000 soldiers of the United Nations Command, including over 100,000 Americans.

The United Nations General Assembly on February 1, 1951 voted 44 to 7, that the Chinese People's Republic was guilty of aggression in Korea.² It called upon it to withdraw its forces from Korea. But they still remain.

Korean Armistice.¹ But that was not a Chinese Communist offering. It was something that the United Nations Command. The Communists signed only after desperate and bloody fighting had failed to break the allied line, and only after the United Nations Command had made it apparent that the conflict, if continued, would bring into jeopardy valuable Communist military and political assets in nearby Manchuria.

The Chinese Communists' continuing lack of genuine willingness is being demonstrated in Indochina.

As one of the United Nations members who must pass on this question, we must ask "Will it serve the interests of world peace to bring into the United Nations a regime which is a convicted aggressor which has not purged itself from that aggression, and which is bent on to promote the use of force in violation of the principles of the United Nations?" I can find only the answer "No".

Free China on Formosa

There is still another aspect of this China matter. We must not forget that the National Government of China continues to exist in Formosa and millions of free Chinese are gathered there under its jurisdiction. It has the allegiance of many more. They are our loyal friends and allies when, during World War II, they stood up to each other.

Should the free nations facilitate and encourage the bloc strategy promoted by the Chinese Communists of these free Chinese citizens? To me again, the only answer is "No".

Experience with Communist Promises

Some say that the United States should recognize the Communist regime and welcome it to the United Nations, in fulfillment of its promises in relation to Korea and Indochina.

The United States must judge that proposal on the basis of past experience.

The United States agreed to recognize the Soviet regime in 1945, relying on its promise, in the so-called Litvinov agreement, to refrain from and prevent political action from Russia against our political system and order. We performed and granted recognition. But the results we received were vain.

At Yalta, in February 1945, Britain and the United States gave their sanction to the fact of dominant Soviet influence in Central Europe. They did so on the basis of a Soviet agreement that the liberated European countries would have the right "to choose the form of government under which they will live", and that in Poland the free and unfettered elections as soon as possible".¹ But those promises we received were vain.

There was also a Yalta Agreement with reference to the Far East. The United States agreed to obtain for the Soviet Union control of Port Arthur, Dairen and the Manchurian Railroad. In exchange the Soviet Union promised to support the National Government of China. This arrangement was consummated at Moscow in August 1945.² Then the Soviet Government acquired from China the Manchurian assets that had been promised it. In return it gave a 30-year engagement "to render to China moral support and aid in military supplies and other material resources, such support and aid to be entirely given to the National Government as the central government of China."³

Having gained what it wanted the Soviet Government then moved promptly to assist the Chinese Communist regime in its efforts to overthrow the National Government. It gave to the Chinese Communist forces vast stocks of military supplies and other material resources which it had promised to give entirely to the National Government.

In this matter again we gave performance. But the corresponding Communist promises proved vain.

Our experience with Chinese Communist promises is limited because we have with them only one agreement. That is the Korean Armistice. The United Nations Command has reported that the Communists have violated it 40 times. That only tells part of the story or the basic violation is that the Swedish and Swiss members of the Supervisory Commission are denied an adequate opportunity to supervise the North and to detect Communist violations.⁴

The United States recognizes that few nations have a record which is not marred by some violations of agreements. Also, we recognize that nothing human is immutable. Surely, there is nothing vindictive or implacable about the American people. Indeed, few people are as ready as we to forgive and forget. But it would be reckless for us to ignore the events of recent years which have filled our archives with vain promises. We are not in the market for more.

It is now the policy of the United States not to exchange United States performance for Communist promises.

That United States position was made clear at the recent Berlin Conference. There, by standing firm, I finally obtained the reluctant be a "Big Five Conference" and that the invitation to C itself specify that neither the invitation to, nor the hol conference should be deemed to imply diplomatic recogni had not already been accorded.²

The Chinese Communist regime has been invited on Korea and Indochina, where it is in fact a force of aggress cannot ignore. It gets no diplomatic recognition from u of its presence at Geneva. I said at Berlin: "It . . . is recognize evil as a fact. It is another thing to take evil to and call it good."³ That we shall not do.

The Dangers Ahead

The United States Delegation will go to Geneva in an e about a united and independent Korea, from which China will have withdrawn its army of invasion. Also, any Indochina discussion will serve to bring the Chinese to see the danger of their apparent design for the conqu east Asia, so that they will cease and desist. We shall r be disposed to give Communist China what it wants fro to buy its promises of future good behavior.

Some, perhaps, would have it otherwise. But we da that during the period when we accepted Communist pro face value, and took for granted their peaceful intention steadily grew.

We can, I think, take a lesson from Dien Bien Phu.⁴ F there has seemed to be a lull. But in fact the danger mounted. The enemy sappers have never ceased their have burrowed and tunneled to gain forward positions inner citadels can be subjected to mass assault from close

Today the free world also feels a sense of lull. The dan war seems to have receded. I hope that that is so. If because the free nations saw the danger and moved u courage and decision, to meet it.

France and Germany. In Asia, the whole area from Japan and Korea to Southeast Asia is troubled by Communist efforts at penetration.

As against such efforts, there is only one defense—eternal vigilance, sound policies and high courage.

The United States is a member of a goodly company who in the past have stood together in the face of great peril and have overcome it. If we are true to that past, we can face the future with hope and confidence.

29. VIEWS OF THE UNITED STATES AND FRANCE ON THE EVE OF THE GENEVA CONFERENCE: Joint Statement by the Secretary of State and the French Foreign Minister, April 14, 1954

Following their conversations in Paris on April 14th, the United States Secretary of State, Mr. John Foster Dulles, and the French Minister of Foreign Affairs, M. Bidault, issued the following statement:

For nearly two centuries it has been the practice for representatives of our two nations to meet together to discuss the grave issues which from time to time have confronted us.

In pursuance of this custom, which we hope to continue to the benefit of ourselves and others, we have had an exchange of views on Indochina and Southeast Asia.

Mr. Dulles expressed admiration for the gallant fight of the French Union forces, who continue with unshakeable courage and determination to repel Communist aggression.

We deplore the fact that on the eve of the Geneva Conference this aggression has reached a new climax in Viet-Nam particularly at Dien-Bien-Phu and has been renewed in Laos and extended to Cambodia.

The independence of the three Associated States within the French Union, which new agreements are to complete, is at stake in these battles.

We recognize that the prolongation of the war in Indochina, which endangers the security of the countries immediately affected, also threatens the entire area of Southeast Asia and of the Western Pacific. In close association with other interested nations, we will examine the possibility of establishing, within the framework of the United Nations Charter, a collective defense to assure the peace, security and freedom of this area.

We recognize that our basic objective at the Geneva Conference will be to seek the re-establishment of a peace in Indochina which will

30. PREPARATIONS FOR THE INDOCHINA PHASE OF THE GENEVA CONFERENCE: Statement by the President, 1954¹

With the return of the Secretary of State from Geneva, of course be a series of conferences on foreign affairs both within the Executive Department and between the Secretary of State and various groups of the Congress. Because of these forthcoming conferences and the probability that the Secretary of State will have something to say, and because, also, of the delicate nature of the issues now pending before the Geneva Conference, I am making my comments on the Indochina situation to a brief written statement.

United States foreign policy has consistently supported the principles on which was founded the United Nations. A basic principle of this policy was the Vandenberg Resolution of 1948.² The United States believes in assuring the peace and integrity of nations through collective action and, in pursuance of the United Nations Charter, has entered into regional security agreements with other nations. Examples are the Inter-American Agreement,³ the Manila Pact,⁴ and a whole series of pacts in the Pacific.⁵ These agreements are invariably to assure the peaceful security of the nations and to prevent likelihood of attack; they are not agreements designed primarily for waging war.

The Geneva Conference, now 9 days old, has produced no results. The expressed fears of some have proved unfounded.

It has not been a "five-power" conference as the Communists tried to make it.

It has not involved establishing express or implied recognition by the United States of the Chinese Communist Government.

The Korean phase of the Conference has been organized so that the Communists came up with a scheme for Korean unification which was a Chinese copy of the Soviet scheme for the unification of Germany.⁶ Under their proposal no election measures could be taken without Communist consent, and there could be no improvement in the election conditions or of the voting.

This scheme was rejected for Germany.⁷ Secretary of State Acheson said that it is equally unacceptable to the Republic of China.

United Nations members which took part in the Korean War under the United Nations Command now represented at Geneva.

The Indochina phase of the Conference is in process of being organized and the issues have not yet been clarified. In this matter a large measure of initiative rests with the Governments of France, Viet-Nam, Laos, and Cambodia, which are the countries most directly concerned.

Meanwhile plans are proceeding for the realization of a Southeast Asia security arrangement. This was publicly suggested by Secretary Dulles in his address of March 29.¹ Of course, our principal allies were advised in advance. This proposal of the Secretary of State was not a new one; it was merely reaffirmation of the principles that have consistently guided our postwar foreign policy and a reminder to interested Asian friends that the United States was prepared to join with others in the application of these principles to the threatened area. Most of the free nations of the area and others directly concerned have shown affirmative interest, and conversations are actively proceeding.

Obviously, it was never expected that this collective security arrangement would spring into existence overnight. There are too many important problems to be resolved. But there is a general sense of urgency. The fact that such an organization is in process of formation could have an important bearing upon what happens at Geneva during the Indochina phase of the Conference.

The countries of the area are now thinking in constructive terms, which include the indispensable concept of collective security. Progress in this matter has been considerable and I am convinced that further progress will continue to be made.

31. MIDWAY IN THE GENEVA CONFERENCE: Address by the Secretary of State, May 7, 1954²

I welcome this opportunity to talk with you about the Conference now going on in Geneva³ and the related aspects of our foreign policy.

First of all, I join with you in paying tribute to the gallant defenders of Dien-Bien-Phu.⁴ May it be given us to play a worthy part to defend the values for which they gave their lives.

This week I returned from the Geneva Conference. My return was not connected with any developments at the Conference. As long ago as last February when the Conference was called, I said I would attend

Since the Conference may last for some weeks, I did not feel able to stay with it that long. I have been out of the United States during much of the last 6 months to attend the Bermuda Conference,¹ the Berlin Conference,² the Caracas Conference,³ and two NATO Council meetings in Paris.⁴ These meetings strengthen the links with our allies and enable us to present the position of the United States to others. But the Secretary of State must also keep in close touch with our own people and with the Congress. In order to exercise our full influence in foreign affairs, the Government must have the understanding and support of the American people for its policies.

The Geneva Conference has two tasks. The first is to try to find a way to unify Korea. The second task is to discuss the possibility of restoring peace in Indochina.

The Soviet delegation, however, has sought to use the Conference for other purposes. By various devices, it has tried to create the false impression that this meeting accepted Red China as one of "five great powers" or conferred on it a new international status.

Both of these issues had been fought out in connection with calling the Conference and the Soviets had then conceded that the Conference would not be a five-power affair nor involve any recognition for Red China. We and our allies stood firmly and solidly on that position and the Soviets ended by accepting it.

By the time I left Geneva, the Korean phase of the Conference had been organized and was well under way. I will speak first of that and then of Indochina where the fighting is still active and where the question of possible United States participation has to be considered.

For many years Korea has been the pawn of great powers. Russia, Japan, and China have abused and exploited Korea and kept its peoples in servitude. The Koreans now want only to be united and free and left alone. Yet, in fact, Korea is divided, and North Korea lives under the Chinese Communist yoke. In all decency it would seem that the Communists should allow the Korean people at long last to live their own lives and to satisfy their aspirations for freedom.

When the Geneva Conference was organized, the Communists put up their program for uniting Korea.⁵ Unhappily it was not a program to satisfy the desires of the Korean people for unity and freedom. It was, as President Eisenhower said,⁶ "a Chinese copy" of the Soviet scheme for the unification of Germany.⁷ Their idea is to have elections so set up that the Communists can dictate the outcome and thus impose their rule upon the whole country.

In the case of Germany, the Communists control Eastern Ger many, with about one-fourth of the total German population. In the case of Korea, they control about one-sixth of the total Korean population. They insist, however, in both cases, that this gives them the right to equal participation in determining the election conditions. Also, they stipulate that there must be no impartial supervision or observation of the elections to be sure that they are fair and free of coercion.

The Communists feel confident that under these conditions they can make their candidates seem to win.

This scheme, when offered for Germany, was turned down by the Federal Republic of Germany and by the three Western Powers at Berlin.¹ The same scheme is equally objectionable for Korea.

I can assure you that the United States delegation will do all that lies within its power to promote, by peaceful means, the independence and freedom and unity of Korea.

More than 140,000 Americans were killed or wounded under the United Nations Command to keep Korea from being overrun by armed invasion. I promise you that we shall not surrender at the council table at Geneva the freedom for which so many fought and died.

We are pressing the Communists to accept honest elections which will be supervised by responsible outside observers, who will assure a really free election. Whether the Communists accept that remains to be seen. If they would, then I think that Korea could be unified.

Let me turn now to the problem of Southeast Asia. In that great peninsula and the islands to the south live nearly 200 million people in 7 states—Burma; the three states of Indochina—Laos, Cambodia, and Viet-Nam; Thailand; Malaya; and Indonesia. Communist conquest of this area would seriously imperil the free world position in the Western Pacific. It would, among other things, endanger the Philippines, Australia, and New Zealand, with all of which the United States has mutual-security treaties.² It would deprive Japan of important foreign markets and sources of food and raw materials.

In Viet-Nam, one of the three Indochinese states, war has been going on since 1946. When it began, Indochina was a French colony just liberated from Japanese occupation. The war started primarily as a war for independence. What started as a civil war has now been taken over by international communism for its own purposes. Ho Chi-Minh, the Communist leader in Viet-Nam, was trained in Moscow and got his first revolutionary experience in China.

In the name of nationalism, the Communists aim to deprive the people of Viet-Nam of their independence by subjecting them to the new imperialism of the Soviet bloc.

The Indochina area was vulnerable. The Government of Viet-Nam, Laos, and Cambodia had not yet received full independence. Their peoples were not adequately organized against the Communist-led rebels, and they did not feel they had a stake in the struggle which justified great sacrifices.

President Eisenhower became familiar with the problem of Indochina while he was the Supreme Commander of NATO in Europe. He was aware of the strain and the drain which the Indochina war put on France. He was aware of the growing discontent in France over the long war where the French were assuming the principal burden of the fight and where human and material costs were mounting.

I recall in December 1952 when General Eisenhower, before he was elected, was returning from his Korean trip on the cruise ship USS Intrepid, and he discussed gravely the problem of Indochina.

We realized that if Viet-Nam fell into hostile hands, the neighboring countries remained weak and divided, the Communists could move on into all of Southeast Asia. For that reason, the Eisenhower administration from the outset gave priority attention to the problem of Southeast Asia.

Our efforts took two complementary lines. We sought to strengthen the resistance to communism in Indochina. We sought to create in Southeast Asia a broader community of defense.

INDOCHINA MEASURES

In Indochina itself, the following steps seemed to us to be essential:

1. The French should give greater reality to their promises. They should grant full independence to Viet-Nam, Laos, and Cambodia. This would take away from the Communists their false claim that they were fighting for independence.

2. There should be greater reliance upon the national forces. The peoples would be fighting in their own homeland. This, we believed, could be done if the peoples felt that they had a good cause to fight and if better facilities for training and equipment were provided for them.

3. There should be greater free-world assistance. The free world should be carrying on a struggle which was overburdening her own resources.

Much progress was made in each of these respects. In the declaration of July 3, 1953, pledged full independence to Viet-Nam, Laos, and Cambodia.¹ Already, a treaty of independence was concluded with Laos,² and Emperor Bao Dai told me a few weeks ago, that he felt that Viet-Nam was assured of its independence.

States, which was already paying part of the cost of the war, agreed to bear the greater part of the total cost.¹ We are now paying at the rate of about $800 million a year, plus a very large provision for military equipment.

Despite the gains on these fronts, there has been a growing belief by the French people that France was overextended, in view of its responsibilities in Asia, in Africa, and in Europe. As a result, when I met in Berlin last January and February with the Foreign Ministers of France, Great Britain, and the Soviet Union, the French Government asked that the projected conference on Korea be expanded to discuss also the problem of peace in Indochina.²

Shortly after the Berlin Conference adjourned, the Communists, as was to be expected from them, began to expend their military assets—human and material, in a desperate effort to win some victory which they would exploit for political purposes. They concentrated on a mass assault against one of the French outposts—that of Dien-Bien-Phu. That assault was pushed with a callous disregard of human life.

Now, Dien-Bien-Phu has fallen. Its defense, of 57 days and nights, will go down in history as one of the most heroic of all time. The defenders, composed of French and native forces, inflicted staggering losses on the enemy. The French soldiers showed that they have not lost either the will or the skill to fight even under the most adverse conditions. It shows that Viet-Nam produces soldiers who have the qualities to enable them to defend their country.

An epic battle has ended. But great causes have, before now, been won out of lost battles.

The Chinese Communists have been supplying the forces of Viet Minh rebels with munitions, trucks, anti-aircraft guns, radar, and technical equipment and technical advisers. They have, however, stopped short of open intervention. In this respect, they may have been deterred by the warnings which the United States has given that such intervention would lead to grave consequences which might not be confined to Indochina.³

COLLECTIVE DEFENSE

Throughout this period the United States has also followed the second course of trying to develop strength in Southeast Asia through collective measures.

Back in 1951, I negotiated treaties with the Philippines, Australia, and New Zealand. These recognized that this area was one of vital importance to the United States. These treaties also recognized that

This we have constantly sought. However, it has proved difficult to achieve this result. There were differences of race and differences in the development of national self-government in countries which had won or were winning their independence. Western colonialism and Japanese imperialism were often concerned with past dangers from which they were extricating themselves rather than with the threat of new peril. The memories of the past drew them to the present perils of Communist imperialism. They were not disposed to make the sacrifices inherent in any collective defense system.

However, this situation began to change and by the summer of 1954 it seemed that there could be a broader program for collective defense.

On March 29, 1954, after consultations with Congress and the military, both parties, and after having advised our principal allies, the President declared: "The imposition on Southeast Asia of the political system of Communist Russia and its Chinese Communist ally, by which the free States would be a grave threat to the whole free community. The United States feels that that possibility should not be passively accepted. It should be met by united action."¹

This declaration was nothing new, although the circumstances at the moment gave the words a new significance.

President Eisenhower speaking almost a year earlier, in a speech of April 16, 1953, had said that "aggression in Korea and in China and in Asia are threats to the whole free community to be met by united action."²

After having explained our purposes to the American people, we promptly conferred with the representatives of nine free nations of immediate interest in the area, namely, Viet-Nam, Laos, Cambodia, Thailand, the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand, and the United Kingdom. We informed others whose interests might be affected.

The Governments of the United Kingdom and of France invited us to visit their capitals to develop further our concept of collective defense. At conferences at London on April 12 and 13 with Sir Winston Churchill and Mr. Eden, we issued a joint U.S.-U.K. communiqué³ reciting the danger to the entire area of Southeast Asia and the Western Pacific caused by Communist warfare in Indochina. "Accordingly we are ready to take part, with the other States principally concerned, in an examination of the possibility of organizing a collective defense, within the framework of the Charter of the United Nations, to assure the peace, security and freedom of the Asian and the Western Pacific."

sought. We had never sought any sudden spectacular act such as a ultimatum to Red China. Our goal was to develop a basic unity of constructive purpose. We advanced toward that goal. I feel confident that unity of purpose persists, and that such a tragic event as the fall of Dien-Bien-Phu will harden, not weaken, our purpose to stay united.

The United States and other countries immediately concerned are giving careful consideration to the establishment of a collective defense. Conversations are taking place among them. We must agree as to who will take part in the united defense effort, and what their commitments will be.

It must be recognized that difficulties have been encountered, but this was expected. The complexity of the problem is great. As we have pointed out, the complications were such that it was not possible even to get started until recent months. Under all the circumstances I believe that good progress is being made. I feel confident that the outcome will be such that Communist aggression will not be able to gain in Southeast Asia the results it seeks.

This may involve serious commitments by us all. But free people will never remain free unless they are willing to fight for their vital interests. Furthermore, vital interests can no longer be protected merely by local defense. The key to successful defense and to the deterring of attack is association for mutual defense. That is what the United States seeks in Southeast Asia.

CURRENT HOSTILITIES IN VIET-NAM

The question remains as to what we should do about the current hostilities in Viet-Nam.

In Korea we showed that we were prepared under proper conditions to resort to military action, if necessary, to protect our vital interests and the principles upon which stable peace must rest.

In Korea, we, along with others, joined in the defense of an independent government, which was already resisting an armed assault. We did so at the request of the Republic of Korea and under a United Nations mandate. The Korean people were inspired by a deep sense of patriotism and eager to develop a power of their own. The issues were clarified before the world by decisions of the United Nations. Under these circumstances, we and our allies fought until the enemy sued for an armistice.

In Indochina, the situation is far more complex. The present conditions there do not provide a suitable basis for the United States to participate with its armed forces.

hostilities continue, then the need will be even more urgent conditions for united action in defense of the area.

In making commitments which might involve the use of a the Congress is a full partner. Only the Congress can do. President Eisenhower has repeatedly emphasized that he will not take military action in Indochina without the support of the Congress. Furthermore, he has made clear that he would not seek that in his opinion, there would be an adequate collective effort based upon genuine mutuality of purpose in defending vital interests.

A great effort is being made by Communist propaganda to present it as something evil if Asia joins with the nations of the Americas and Europe to get assistance which will help the peoples of Asia to secure their liberty. These Communist nations have, in this connection, adopted the slogan "Asia for the Asians."

The Japanese war lords adopted a similar slogan when they sought to subject Asia to their despotic rule. The similar theme of "Europe for the Europeans" was adopted by Mr. Molotov at the Berlin Conference when he proposed that the Europeans should seek security by making commitments which would send the United States back home.

Great despotic powers have always known that they could not do their will and gain their conquests if the free nations stand united. None helps the other.

It should be observed that the Soviet Communist aggression in Europe took place only against countries which had no adequate security arrangements. Since the organization of the North Atlantic Treaty, there has been no successful aggression in Europe.

Of course, it is of the utmost importance that the United States participation in creating collective security in Asia should be on a basis which recognizes fully the aspirations and cultures of the various peoples. We have a material and industrial strength which is unique and which is an essential ingredient of security. Also we have cultural and spiritual values of their own which make them superior by every moral standard.

The United States, as the first colony of modern history to achieve independence for itself, instinctively shares the aspirations for liberty of the dependent and colonial peoples. We want to help, not hinder, the spread of liberty.

We do not seek to perpetuate Western colonialism and we regard as more intolerable the new imperialist colonialism of communism.

That is the spirit that animates us. If we remain true to it, we can face the future with confidence that we shall be able to deal with those moral forces which ultimately prevail.

¹ At his press conference on Mar. 10, 1954, President Eisenhower said: "I am going to be no involvement of America in war unless it is a result of a constitutional process that is placed upon Congress to declare it" (Times, Mar. 11, 1954).

32. CONDITIONS FOR UNITED STATES DIRECT INTERVENTION IN INDOCHINA: Transcript of a News Conference of the Secretary of State, May 25, 1954 (Excerpt) ¹

At his news conference on May 25, a correspondent recalled to Secretary Dulles his report to the Nation following his return from Geneva ² in which he set forth the conditions under which the United States intervened in Korea. Mr. Dulles was asked to relate those conditions to the Indochina situation. Mr. Dulles made the following reply:

I pointed out, I think, the existence of certain conditions in the case of Korea, and I went on to say that the situation in Indochina was different and more complex.

I think that broadly speaking the attitude of the United States toward this situation has been made clear by statements which the President has made and which I have made. I think it is fair to say that the United States attitude in this matter has been one of the few stable aspects in an otherwise changing and fluid situation.

The position of the United States toward collective security in Southeast Asia has been known basically for quite a long while. In fact, it really goes back to the time when I went out to the Far East in, I think, January of 1951 on a mission to try to create a collective security pact in that area. That effort failed at that time in the sense that we were not able to put together a collective security arrangement of any large proportions, and we ended with a series of separate pacts—one with Japan, one with Australia and New Zealand, and another with the Philippines. But there was not a regional security pact created at that time.

Then I think I pointed out that, in his great address of April 16 of last year, President Eisenhower made a statement which did not attract at the time the attention it deserved perhaps because of other aspects of his speech where he referred to Korea and Southeast Asia and said there should be united action for the defense of Southeast Asia.³

I repeated that statement in my March 29 speech after having previously discussed it with congressional leaders and with our principal allies.

The general conditions under which the United States is prepared to participate in collective defense there or elsewhere, for that matter, are quite well known. We are willing to participate in collective defense basically upon the terms that are laid down by the Vandenberg Resolution of June 1948,⁴ which laid down basic conditions under which the United States would be prepared to participate on the basis of only going to go in for defense of liberty and independence.

We don't go in alone; we go in where the other nations have an important stake in the area recognize the peril as we do.

We go in where the United Nations gives moral sanction to our action.

All of those conditions are known. They have been known for a long time. They are a basic part of American foreign policy, and they are. President said in one of his press conferences, a "stable" element in the situation.

Mr. Dulles was then asked what was initiated by this Government during the period between March or April of 1953 and May of this year about a Southeast Asian pact. He replied:

We did have conversations, particularly with the French representatives of the Associated States who under conditions existing were apt to form the core of any defensive action in the area.¹

A correspondent recalled that one of the conditions laid out by Mr. Dulles in his speech of May 7 was to give independence to the Associated States. The correspondent said that France and the Associated States had initialed proposed treaties of independence and association. He asked Mr. Dulles how far those treaties go toward meeting the conditions. Mr. Dulles made the following reply:

I think what France is doing will, from what you mean, from a juridical standpoint, be a very large step in fulfillment of the promise of July 3 of last year of complete independence to the Associated States. The main difficulty, I would say, at the present moment is not a juridical as it is the translation of legal documents into a form which is acceptable to the peoples of Viet-Nam, Laos, and Cambodia that have an independence for which it is worthwhile for them to live, and, if need be, to die.

It takes time to translate papers that are signed in Paris with a living spirit; and it also takes time to overcome a certain feeling of fear on the part of many of the Asian nations that France is not really keeping its promises. I believe the French are going a long way toward that path—perhaps from a legal standpoint as far as it is either necessary or necessary to go at the present time. But it is one thing to have the letter and another thing to have the spirit, and I would say at the present moment the principal deficiency is a translation of the spirit of the promise into the area and in the conduct of the French people in relation

United States had any plans for seeking that kind of sanction from the United Nations. Mr. Dulles answered:

There have been discussions off and on, I am sorry to say more off than on, over the past year or more with reference to bringing the United Nations into this situation. At the moment the prospects look somewhat better than they have recently, but in the past we have been very close to the United Nations action without its being actually taken. So I don't want to forecast at the present time.

Asked if we would support any appeal to the United Nations for a peace mission or observation mission to be sent into the Southeast Asian area, replied:

I believe if such an appeal were made, the United States would support it.¹

Mr. Dulles was asked if the United States had before it any request from the French Government for intervention in Indochina. He replied:

No, the French Government has made no such request of the United States. They have had some conversations to explore the conditions under which that might be possible, and in that respect the French have been told much the same thing that has been publicly said by the President and me as to the conditions, which as I say have been stable and unchanging over a considerable period of time, under which such intervention would be considered possible. Of course, let me make clear that one of the conditions which we have always stood on is that there must be congressional sanction to any such action.

3. THE THREAT OF DIRECT CHINESE COMMUNIST INTERVENTION IN INDOCHINA: Address by the Secretary of State, June 11, 1954 (Excerpt) ²

At the moment, Indochina is the area where international communism most vigorously seeks expansion under the leadership of Ho Chi-Minh. Last year President Eisenhower, in his great "Chance for Peace" address,³ said that "aggression in Korea and Southeast Asia are threats to the whole free community to be met by united action." But the French were then opposed to what they called "internationalizing" the war. They preferred to treat it as a civil war of rebellion.

declaration of independence for the three Associated States. In September it adopted the so-called Navarre plan,² which called for a rapid buildup of national native forces. The United States agreed to underwrite the costs of this plan.³

But last winter the fighting was intensified and the losses began to tell in terms of the attitude of the French people. The war then in its eighth year. Last March, after the siege of Bien-Phu had begun, I renewed President Eisenhower's promise that we seek conditions which would permit a united defense for Indochina. I went to Europe on this mission, and it seemed that there was agreement on our proposal.⁴ But when we moved to translate the proposal into reality, some of the parties held back because they concluded that any steps to create a united defense should wait for the results of the Geneva Conference.

Meanwhile, the burdens of a collective defense in Indochina mounted. The Communists have practiced dilatory negotiations at Geneva, while intensifying their fighting in Indochina. The French and national forces feel the strain of mounting enemy power on the front and of political uncertainty at their rear. I told the United States Foreign Relations Committee last week that the situation is not by no means hopeless.⁵ The future depends largely on what is awaited at Paris, London, and Geneva.

The situation in Indochina is not that of open military aggression by the Chinese Communist regime. Thus, in Indochina, the problem is one of restoring tranquillity in an area where disturbances are caused by the Communists from Communist China, but where there is no open invasion by Communist China. This task of pacification, in our opinion, cannot be successfully met merely by unilateral armed intervention. Other conditions need to be established. Throughout the Indochina developments, the United States has held to a consistent course and has made clear the conditions which, in its view, might justify intervention. These conditions were and are: (1) an invitation from the present lawful authorities; (2) clear assurance of complete independence to Laos, Cambodia, and Vietnam; (3) evidence of concern by the United Nations; (4) a joining in the collective effort of some of the other nations of the area; and (5) that France will not itself withdraw from the battle until it is victorious.

Only if these conditions were realized could the President and the Congress be justified in asking the American people to make sacrifices incident to committing our Nation, with others, to the force to help to restore peace in the area.

Another problem might, however, arise. If the Chinese Communist regime were to show in Indochina or elsewhere that it is determined to pursue the path of overt military aggression, then the situation would be different and another issue would emerge. That contingency has already been referred to publicly by the President and myself. The President, in his April 16, 1953, address, and I myself in an address of September 2, 1953,¹ made clear that the United States would take a grave view of any future overt military Chinese Communist aggression in relation to the Pacific or Southeast Asia area. Such an aggression would threaten island and peninsular positions which secure the United States and its allies.

If such overt military aggression occurred, that would be a deliberate threat to the United States itself. The United States would of course invoke the processes of the United Nations and consult with its allies. But we could not escape ultimate responsibility for decisions closely touching our own security and self-defense.

There are some, particularly abroad, who seem to assume that the attitude of the United States flows from a desire for a general war with Communist China. That is clearly false. If we had wanted such a war, it could easily have been based on the presence of Chinese aggressors in Korea. But last July, in spite of difficulties which at times seemed insuperable, we concluded a Korean armistice with Communist China.² How could it be more surely demonstrated that we have both the will to make peace and the competence to make peace?

Your Government wants peace, and the American people want peace. But should there ever be openly launched an attack that the American people would clearly recognize as a threat to our own security, then the right of self-preservation would demand that we—regardless of any other country—meet the issue squarely.

It is the task of statesmanship to seek peace and deter war, while at the same time preserving vital national interests. Under present conditions that dual result is not easy to achieve, and it cannot be achieved at all unless your Government is backed by a people who are willing, if need be, to sacrifice to preserve their vital interests.

At the Geneva Conference I said: "Peace is always easy to achieve—by surrender."³ Your Government does not propose to buy peace at that price. We do not believe that the American people want peace at that price. So long as that is our national will, and so long as that will is backed by a capacity for effective action, our Nation can face the future with that calm confidence which is the due of those who, in a troubled world, hold fast that which is good.

34. INCREASED MILITARY AID TO THAILAND

Released by the Department of Defense, July 13

The Department of Defense on July 13 announced of increased military aid and technical assistance to the of Thailand.

As a result of staff talks recently concluded between of Defense officials and a Thai military mission headed Dhanarajata, Deputy Defense Minister and Command the Royal Thai Army, a new and additional military-program has been approved for the Thais so as to increase of the Thai armed forces to resist aggression.

Additional emphasis will also be placed on the acceleration of junior officers, noncommissioned officers, and sonnel, the announcement stated. The program calls support for Thai training activities, including the provision equipment, and technical and training assistance in the

In addition to the military-aid grant, the Department also announced that approximately $3 million was being able to the Thai Government for the construction of a Saraburi, in Central Thailand, through Korat to Ban P of 297 miles.

The program will be administered in Thailand by Military Aid Group headed by Maj. Gen. W. N. Gillmore

I return from consultations at Paris with the new Minister and Foreign Minister, M. Pierre Mendès-F talks were also participated in by Anthony Eden, the Secretary.

These talks have brought about an understanding between china much more complete than has heretofore existed. to demonstrate anew the solidarity of the Western powers of Communist hostility and intrigue.

captive and endangered peoples of the world are to feel that the United States really believes in liberty.

I had the opportunity in Paris fully to explain the United States position in this respect to M. Mendès-France, whom I had known before but whom I had not met since he assumed his new offices.

The conclusion was that we would ask the Under Secretary of State Gen. Walter Bedell Smith, to return to Geneva at an early date to renew his participation in the Indochina phase of the Conference. But this is on the understanding, to which both the French and British Ministers expressly agreed, that renewed participation by the United States at the ministerial level will be without departing from the U.S. principles which I had described.

I believe that we have found a formula for constructive allied unity which will have a beneficial effect on the Geneva Conference. And it carries no danger that the United States will abandon its principles.

36. THE CEASE-FIRE AGREEMENTS IN INDOCHINA: Statement by the President, July 21, 1954 ²

I am glad, of course, that agreement has been reached at Geneva to stop the bloodshed in Indochina.³

The United States has not been a belligerent in the war. The primary responsibility for the settlement in Indochina rested with those nations which participated in the fighting. Our role at Geneva has been at all times to try to be helpful where desired and to aid France and Cambodia, Laos, and Viet-Nam to obtain a just and honorable settlement which will take into account the needs of the interested people. Accordingly, the United States has not itself been party to or bound by the decisions taken by the Conference, but it is our hope that it will lead to the establishment of peace consistent with the rights and the needs of the countries concerned. The agreement contains features which we do not like, but a great deal depends on how they work in practice.

The United States is issuing at Geneva a statement to the effect that it is not prepared to join in the Conference declaration, but, as loyal members of the United Nations, we also say that, in compliance with the obligations and principles contained in article 2 of the United Nations Charter, the United States will not use force to disturb the settlement.⁴ We also say that any renewal of Communist aggression would be viewed by us as a matter of grave concern.

37. ASSISTANCE TO REFUGEES FROM NORTH VIET-NAM Note From the American Embassy at Saigon to the Foreign Ministry, August 8, 1954¹

On August 6 the U.S. Government received from the Viet-Nam a request that the United States provide assistance over 100,000 refugees from North Viet-Nam, the area turned over to the Viet Minh, to South Viet-Nam areas of the anti-Communist government of Viet-Nam. The U.S. Government on August 8 replied as follows [Note in Department of State Bulletin, Aug. 16, 1954, p. 241].

The United States Government desires to extend to the Government of Viet-Nam all reasonable assistance to evacuate from the area of Viet-Nam under the cease-fire agreement its nationals who understand the situation and are willing to face the grim certainties of life under the Communist Government. The United States is well aware that mere removal does not solve the problem for such people or for the Government of Viet-Nam. The United States is also prepared to provide as far as possible the financial and technical help needed to enable refugees from Viet Minh domination to continue their existence under their chosen government with maximum freedom to add to the strength of that government through their own efforts.

The American Embassy will continue close cooperation with the Government of Viet-Nam to ensure that United States assistance is made effective in meeting the needs of the Government of Viet-Nam and its people. The United States will expect the maximum cooperation of the Government of Viet-Nam in working to the

38. EVACUATION OF REFUGEES FROM NORTH VIET-NAM

Statement Released by the White House, August 22, 1954 ¹

The cease-fire agreement which terminated hostilities in Viet-Nam provided that persons on either side of the dividing line, which is roughly at the 17th parallel of latitude, would be free to move to places of their own choice. Very soon all of North Viet-Nam, which includes the Delta of the Red River otherwise known as Tonkin, will be handed over provisionally to the Viet Minh Government of Ho Chi Minh.

Thousands of refugees of Tonkin, fearful of being placed under the Communist yoke, are moving outward to Free Viet-Nam. The French Government has offered transport to these evacuees, and both the French Navy and Air Force are doing what they can to carry out this movement.

The French Air Force is presently lifting approximately 3,400 evacuees a day from airfields at Hanoi and Haiphong to the Saigon area. Likewise the French Navy is carrying refugees and at the same time transporting French expeditionary forces to Saigon.

However, the number of refugees has so increased that both the French authorities and Vietnamese Government have asked additional assistance of the United States in transporting these Vietnamese citizens who prefer to give up their homes in order to remain free.

The United States promptly agreed to their request.² The French and Vietnamese authorities retain complete responsibility for the care of Vietnamese citizens who choose to leave the Delta area. The United States is providing ships to help transport refugees and, in addition, is furnishing some tentage and other supplies to better enable the French and Vietnamese officials ashore to take care of the refugees.

It is estimated that at least 200,000 civilian refugees must be moved from Hanoi or Haiphong before September 10.

The Commander in Chief, Pacific, Admiral Felix Stump, has instructed the Fifth Amphibious Group of the Western Pacific Fleet to assist in the transportation from Haiphong to points in South and Central Viet-Nam a total of between 80,000 and 100,000 refugees. The majority of refugees will probably be moved by LST's. In order to help expedite this movement, however, transport vessels and commercial freighters of the Military Sea Transport Service were dispatched earlier under the command of Rear Admiral Lorenzo Sabin and are already loading refugees at Haiphong. Several thousands of Vietnamese have already been evacuated by this service. Fortunately, Free Viet-Nam is a country with ample land resources

The United States will continue to assist the Vietnamese Government, headed by Prime Minister Ngo Dinh Diem, in its humanitarian endeavor to bring the Vietnamese to Freedom.

It is noteworthy that, although Vietnamese from Tonkin are beginning to leave the area, soon to be under Communist control, Minh adherents from Free Viet-Nam have clamored to be allowed to go north to settle in that area under the Government of France.

39. DIRECT AID TO THE ASSOCIATED STATES: Regarding Franco-American Conversations, September 1954

Representatives of the two Governments have had very useful talks which have shown the community of their views and in full agreement on the objectives to be attained.

The conclusion of the Southeast Asia Collective Defense Treaty in Manila on September 8, 1954,² has provided a firmer basis for the United States to assist the free nations of Asia in developing and maintaining their independence and security. The representatives of the United States wish to reaffirm the support of their Government for the principles of self-government, independence, justice, and peace proclaimed by the Pacific Charter in Manila on September 1, 1954.

The representatives of France and the United States have expressed their intention of their governments to support the complete independence of Cambodia, Laos, and Viet-Nam. Both France and the United States will continue to assist Cambodia, Laos, and Viet-Nam in their efforts to safeguard their freedom and independence and to promote the welfare of their peoples. In this spirit France and the United States are assisting the Government of Viet-Nam in the efforts to bring the Vietnamese who have of their own free will moved to Viet-Nam and who already number some 300,000.

In order to contribute to the security of the area pending the development of national forces for this purpose, the representatives of France indicated that France is prepared to retain a French Expeditionary Corps, in agreement with the government of Viet-Nam, within the limits permitted under the Geneva agreement, the extent to be determined. The United States will consider the provision of financial assistance for the Expeditionary Corps in the circumstances in addition to support for the forces of each of the Associated States. These questions vitally affect each of the Associated States and are being fully discussed with the representatives of the Associated States.

The channel for French and United States economic assistance discussions soon with the respective governments of the Associated States regarding direct aid. The methods for efficient coordination of French and United States aid programs to each of the three Associated States are under consideration and will be developed in discussion with each of these states.

After the bilateral talks, the chiefs of diplomatic missions in Washington of Cambodia, Laos and Viet-Nam were invited to a final meeting to have an exchange of views and information on these matters. The representatives of all five countries are in complete agreement on the objectives of peace and freedom to be achieved in Indochina.

40. AID TO CAMBODIA: Message From the President of the United States to the King of Cambodia, October 2, 1954 ¹

YOUR MAJESTY: The people of the United States have watched with concern and admiration the struggle of Cambodia against unwarranted Communist aggression. The United States is happy that Cambodia has reaffirmed its independence and that your Kingdom is in a position now to undertake a course which will secure that sovereignty and freedom for which your people fought.

At this time when Cambodia has so convincingly demonstrated its independence and its stern determination to maintain that independence, I desire Your Majesty to know that my Government will be pleased to consider ways in which our two countries can more effectively cooperate in the joint task of stemming the threats facing your territories and maintaining peace and prosperity in your Kingdom.

With assurances of my personal esteem and high regard,

41. AID TO THE STATE OF VIET-NAM: Message From the President of the United States to the President of the Council of Ministers of Viet-Nam, October 23, 1954 ²

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I have been following with great interest the course of developments in Viet-Nam, particularly since the conclusion of the conference at Geneva. The implications of the agreement concerning Viet-Nam have caused grave concern regarding the future of a country temporarily divided by an artificial military group.

ideology which they abhor, are being fulfilled. I am glad the United States is able to assist in this humanitarian effort.

We have been exploring ways and means to permit Viet-Nam to be more effective and to make a greater contribution to the welfare and stability of the Government of Viet-Nam. Accordingly, instructing the American Ambassador to Vietnam to examine with you in your capacity as Chief of Government an intelligent program of American aid given directly to your Government can serve to assist Viet-Nam in its present hour of need, provided that your Government is prepared to give assurance of the standards of performance it would be able to maintain if such aid were supplied.

The purpose of this offer is to assist the Government of Viet-Nam in developing and maintaining a strong, viable state, capable of resisting attempted subversion or aggression through military means. The Government of the United States expects that this aid will result in improved performance on the part of the Government of Viet-Nam in carrying out needed reforms. It hopes that such aid, combined with your own continuing efforts, will contribute effectively toward the development of an independent Viet-Nam endowed with a strong government. Such a government would, I hope, be so responsive to the nationalist aspirations of its people, so enlightened in purpose and effective in performance, that it will be respected both at home and abroad and discredited by those who might wish to impose a foreign ideology on your free people.

42. MISSION OF THE SPECIAL UNITED STATES REPRESENTATIVE IN VIET-NAM:¹ Statement Issued by the House, November 3, 1954²

The President on November 3 designated Gen. J. Lawton Collins as Special United States Representative in Viet-Nam with the personal rank of Ambassador, to undertake a diplomatic mission of limited duration. He will coordinate the operations of the military agencies in that country.

General Collins will proceed immediately to Saigon, where he will confer with Ambassador Donald R. Heath prior to the latter's scheduled return to the United States for reassignment after 10 years of distinguished service in Indochina. For the duration of his assignment General Collins will relinquish his other duties, including that of U.S. representative on the Military Committee of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

The U. S. Government is fully aware of the immense tasks facing the Government of Viet-Nam in its effort to achieve solidarity, internal security, and economic rehabilitation. The United States has already played an important role in the evacuation of hundreds of thousands of refugees from Communist rule in North Viet-Nam.

Moreover, as the President told Prime Minister Ngo Dinh Diem in his letter of October 23d,¹ U.S. representatives in Viet-Nam have been instructed to consider with the Vietnamese authorities how a program of American aid given directly to Viet-Nam can best assist that country. General Collins will explore this matter with Prime Minister Ngo Dinh Diem and his Government in order to help them resolve their present critical problems and to supplement measures adopted by the Vietnamese themselves.

In executing his temporary mission, General Collins will maintain close liaison with the French Commissioner General, Gen. Paul Ely, for the purpose of exchanging views on how best, under existing circumstances, the freedom and welfare of Viet-Nam can be safeguarded.

43. DIRECT AID TO VIET-NAM, CAMBODIA, AND LAOS Statement by the Department of State, December 31, 1954²

Arrangements have been completed so that on January 1, 1955 the United States can begin supplying financial aid directly to the Governments of Viet-Nam, Cambodia, and Laos for the purpose of strengthening their defense against the threat of Communist subversion and aggression. This direct aid reaffirms the independent status these Governments now possess, and is in addition to the economic aid that has been given directly to these three states by the United States since 1950. The aid will be given pursuant to section 121 of the Mutual Security Act of 1954, which provides for "the furnishing, as far as possible, of direct assistance to the Associated States of Cambodia, Laos and Viet-Nam. . . ." ³ The provision of U.S. aid directly to these Governments was confirmed by the communiqué issued at Washington on September 29 of this year, following talks between representatives of the United States, France and the Chiefs of Mission of the three Associated States and by letters from President Eisenhower to the King of Cambodia ⁵ and to President Diem of Viet-Nam. ⁶

44. UNIFICATION OF VIET-NAM THROUGH FREE ELECTIONS Statement by the Secretary of State at a News Conference, June 28, 1955¹

At his news conference on June 28, Secretary Dulles was asked the position of the United States with respect to elections in Viet-Nam. Secretary replied:

Neither the United States Government nor the Government of Viet-Nam is, of course, a party to the Geneva armistice agreements. We did not sign them, and the Government of Viet-Nam did not sign them and, indeed, protested against them. On the other hand, the United States believes, broadly speaking, in the unification of countries which have a historic unity, where the people are akin. We believe that, if there are conditions of really free elections, there is no serious risk that the Communists would win.

The Communists have never yet won any free election. I don't think they ever will. Therefore, we are not afraid at all of elections, provided they are held under conditions of genuine freedom which the Geneva armistice agreement calls for. If those conditions are met, we would be in favor of elections, because we believe they would bring about the unification of the country under a democratic government auspices.

45. RECOGNITION OF THE NEW CHIEF OF STATE OF VIET-NAM: Statement by the Department of State, October 26, 1955

On October 26, the Government of Viet-Nam sent the following communication to the American Embassy at Saigon:

"The Ministry of Foreign Affairs has the honor to inform the United States Embassy that by referendum October 23 the Vietnamese people have pronounced themselves in favor of the deposition of the late President Ngo Dinh Diem and have recognized President Diem as Chief of State. We sincerely hoped that the Government of the United States will continue in the past to entertain diplomatic relations with the new Government of the State of Viet-Nam."

U.S. Ambassador G. Frederick Reinhardt, under instructions from the State Department, replied as follows:

"The Government of the United States looks forward to establishing friendly relations with the new Government of Viet-Nam on the same cordial basis as it has maintained with the former Government."

evolution of orderly and effective democratic processes in an area of Southeast Asia which has been and continues to be threatened by Communist efforts to impose totalitarian control.

Transition From Allied Occupation to Mutual Security Arrangements, 1950-1952

16. PARTICIPATION OF JAPAN IN TECHNICAL AGREEMENTS AND CONFERENCES: Interim Directive to the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers, Japan,¹ February 21, 1950²

The following interim directive, serial 110, regarding Japanese participation in technical agreements and conferences, prepared by the Department of State, received from the Department of the Army is transmitted for your guidance in accordance with paragraph III, 3 of the Terms of Reference of the Far Eastern Commission:³

"1. The Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers, subject to his discretion and continued control, should permit Japan to participate with other nations or groups of nations in such international agreements, conventions, and conferences of a technical character as Japan may be invited to enter into, accede to, or attend and as the Supreme Commander shall consider to be in the interest of the occupation.

"2. Before leaving Japan, Japanese representatives appointed in accordance with the provisions of this policy decision, should be instructed to refrain from engaging in propaganda or subversive activities of any kind.

48. INTERIM SECURITY ARRANGEMENTS UPON TERMINATION OF ALLIED OCCUPATION: Exchange of Notes Between the Special Representative² of the President of the United States and the Japanese Foreign Minister,³ February 28, 1952⁴

pation of Japan by the Allied Powers comes to an end on the date when the Treaty of Peace with Japan,¹ the use of facilities and areas by United States forces on the basis of occupation also comes to an end on the same date; thereafter facilities and areas by United States forces must be based on agreement between the two Governments, subject to the rights which Japan might have under the Treaty of Peace with Japan, the Treaty,² and the Administrative Agreement.³ I hereby state that such is also the opinion of the United States Government.

In Article II, paragraph 1, of the Administrative Agreement it is stipulated that, "Agreements as to specific facilities and areas already reached by the two Governments by the effect of this Agreement, shall be concluded by the two Governments through the Joint Committee provided for in Article XXVI of this Agreement." The United States Government is confident that our two Governments are agreed that consultation shall be on an urgent basis to complete such arrangements at the earliest possible date. In this mind, the United States Government is prepared to join the Japanese Government in constituting a Preliminary Working Group consisting of a representative and the necessary staff of the United States Government, to begin such consultations immediately, with the understanding that the arrangements made by the Preliminary Working Group shall be put into effect as agreed and that the Preliminary Working Group would be taken over by the Joint Committee upon the effective date of the Administrative Agreement.

However, unavoidable delays may arise in the determination of the preparation of facilities and areas necessary to carry out the arrangements stated in Article I of the Security Treaty. It would be regretted, therefore, if Japan would grant the continued use of particular facilities and areas, with respect to which agreements for such arrangements have not been completed by the expiration of 60 days after the effective date of the Treaty of Peace with Japan, pending the completion of such agreements and arrangements.

Accept, Excellency, the assurances of my highest consideration.

EXCELLENCY:

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of Your Excellency's Note of today's date in which Your Excellency has informed me as follows:

[There follows the text of the note of the President's Special Representative.]

The Japanese Government fully shares the desire of the United States Government to initiate consultations on an urgent basis in order to complete arrangements for the use of facilities and areas as early as possible. The Japanese Government agrees, therefore, to the immediate constitution of the Preliminary Working Group referred to in Your Excellency's Note, with the understanding that the arrangements made by the Preliminary Working Group shall be put into effect as agreed and that the task of the Preliminary Working Group would be taken over by the Joint Committee upon the effective date of the Administrative Agreement.

With full appreciation of the contents of Your Excellency's Note, I have the honor, on behalf of the Japanese Government, to confirm that the Japanese Government will grant to the United States the continued use of those particular facilities and areas, with respect to which agreements and arrangements have not been completed by the expiration of ninety days after the effective date of the Treaty of Peace with Japan, pending the completion of such agreements and arrangements.

Accept, Excellency, the assurances of my highest consideration.

50. REPELLING VIOLATIONS OF JAPANESE TERRITORIAL AIR BY FOREIGN MILITARY AIRCRAFT: Note From the American Embassy at Tokyo to the Japanese Foreign Ministry, January 16, 1953 ¹

The Embassy of the United States of America presents its compliments to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and has the honor to acknowledge receipt of the Ministry's Note ² concerning violations of Japan's territorial air over Hokkaido by foreign military planes.

The United States Government has noted that the Japanese Government considers such trespasses to constitute a grave menace to the security of Japan. It has further noted the request of the Japanese Government that the United States authorities take effective and appropriate measures to repel similar violations of Japan's territorial air should they occur in the future.

In accordance with the request of the Japanese Government the United States Government has instructed the Commander-in-Chief Far East Command, with all practicable assistance from the Japanese Government, to take all possible measures necessary and proper under terms of the Security Treaty between the United States and Japan dated September 8, 1951, to repel all such violations of Japan's territorial air.

51. AMERICAN RIGHTS IN THE RYUKYU ISLANDS: Note From the Secretary of State to the Japanese Prime Minister, ³ August 8, 1953 ⁴ islands as soon as necessary arrangements can be concluded with the Government of Japan.

With respect to the other islands included under article 2 of the Japanese peace treaty, it will be necessary during the period of international tensions in the Far East for the United States to maintain the degree of control and authority now exercised. The United States will thus be able to carry out more effectively its responsibilities under the security treaty between the United States and Japan and to contribute to the maintenance of peace and security in the Far East. Meanwhile, the United States will make increased effort to improve the welfare of the inhabitants of these islands.

52. THE MILITARY SECURITY AND ECONOMIC COOPERATION OF JAPAN: Joint Statement by the Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs ¹ and the Personal Representative of the Japanese Prime Minister, October 30, 1953 ³

Mr. Hayato Ikeda, the personal representative of the Prime Minister of Japan, and his party had a series of conferences with Mr. Robert A. Robertson, Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs, and other officials of the United States Government during the past several weeks.

The talks covered various interrelated problems of mutual interest, such as Japan's defense buildup, United States assistance for United States postwar economic aid (GARIOA), foreign trade, and trade with Communist China. The informal exchange of views on these subjects was most profitable and lays the groundwork for further cooperation between the two countries. The discussions were exploratory and no agreements were entered into. Certain mutual understandings are set forth below.

The conferees agreed on the necessity of increasing Japan's defense forces in order to protect her from possible aggression and to reduce the United States burden related to the defense of Japan. It was, however, noted that under present circumstances Japan's constitution, constitutional, economic, budgetary and other limitations would not allow the immediate building of Japan's self-defense forces to a point sufficient for Japan's defense. With due regard to these conditions, continued effort on the part of Japan will be made to speed the build-up. Subject to necessary Congressional authorization, the United States conferees offered to assist Japan in developing her Japanese forces by supplying major items of military equipment.

future by representatives of the two governments with a view to reaching a definite understanding.

The conferees agreed that a reduction in Japan's contribution to the support of United States forces should be considered from time to time in the light of the development of Japan's own forces. It was also agreed that the withdrawal of the United States forces from Japan would be effected as the Japanese forces develop the capability to defend their country.

The conferees considered that $50 million is a reasonable target amount for commodities to be supplied to Japan under Section 550 of the Mutual Security Act.¹ It is contemplated that the local currency proceeds of the sale of such agricultural products will be used to help develop the defense production and the industrial potential of Japan through offshore procurement and investment. Necessary arrangements will be executed to cover the requirements of Section 550 and the related defense support activities.

The conferees recognized that pending a political settlement in Korea it is important to maintain a high level of controls over trade with Communist China. However, the implications of these controls for Japanese trade are such that the United States and Japan will continue current consultations on the items to be controlled.

The United States conferees attached great importance to an early settlement for GARIOA aid. It was agreed to hold a meeting in Tokyo in the near future between representatives of the United States and Japan with a view to reaching an agreement on the settlement.

As to foreign investment in Japan, the investment guaranty program under the Mutual Security Act and the Contact Clearing House Service, as well as the services of the United States Department of Commerce, were suggested as helpful measures to be taken on the side of the United States, while willingness on the part of Japan to liberalize Japanese laws and regulations pertaining to foreign investments was expressed by the Japanese conferees in order to create a better climate for foreign investment.

The Japanese conferees expressed their belief that vigorous efforts on the part of Japan to resist inflation are most important in order to strengthen Japan's economic position and to promote further economic cooperation between the United States and Japan.

It was gratifying for all the conferees to learn that while they were in conference the $40 million loans for Japanese thermal electric projects were signed by the International Bank and Japanese representatives,² and that the $60 million cotton credit to Japan was announced by the Export-Import Bank of Washington.³

53. RESTORATION OF JAPANESE SOVEREIGNTY OF THE AMAMI OSHIMA ISLANDS (RYUKYU GROUP): Statement by the Secretary of State, December 24, 1953¹

1. By arrangements concluded today in Tokyo,² the Government of the United States has relinquished in favor of Japan its rights under article III of the Japanese peace treaty over the Amami Oshima Islands of the Ryukyu Islands.

2. Questions have been raised regarding the intentions of the United States with respect to the remaining islands specified in article III of the peace treaty.³

3. The United States Government believes that it is essential to the success of the cooperative effort of the free nations of Asia and the Pacific world in the direction of peace and security, that the United States continue to exercise its present powers and rights in the Ryukyu Islands and in the other islands specified in article III of the Japanese peace treaty so long as conditions of threat and tension exist in the Far East.

4. The United States earnestly hopes that progress can be made toward reducing tensions, and we will spare no effort toward that end until conditions of genuine stability and confidence are achieved. It is the need of the free nations to preserve an armed vigilance against aggression that is an imperative. It would be an abdication of responsibility to the common effort of these free nations, including Japan, for the United States to adopt any other course than here set out, since the Ryukyu Islands and other islands specified in article III of the Japanese peace treaty constitute an essential link in the strategic defense of the Pacific area. Accordingly, the United States intends to continue to be the custodian of these islands for the foreseeable future. In exercising its treaty rights, the United States will not only continue to have the power to improve the welfare and well-being of the inhabitants of the Ryukyus, but it will continue to safeguard economic intercourse throughout the Archipelago.

54. THE NEED FOR A STRONG JAPAN: Address by the Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs, February 19, 1954 (Excerpt)⁵

We gave strong encouragement during the Occupation

Japanese people of their rights and opportunities in the years before the war and had led Japan to disaster. It is a conviction of the American people that a stable and progressive society is one in which economic and political power is widely dispersed. This is, of course, one of our outstanding points of difference with the Marxists, whose practice—whatever their theory—is to concentrate ever more power in ever fewer hands for the benefit of an ever smaller number of people.

If I may further condense the statement of our objective in the Occupation, I should say that it was to promote the creation of a strong Japan, in the true and best sense of the word. Unfortunately, a cardinal element of strength was left out of our concept. We and our allies, including those who had been occupied by the Japanese army, did that which had come to be normal after total war: We totally disarmed the enemy. In addition, Japan with our encouragement renounced military forces in its Constitution.¹ It was not that we wished to leave Japan helpless in the face of deadly danger. On the contrary. We failed to recognize that there was such a danger or to realize what kind of world we were living in and were to live in. We put our faith in the partnership of the United Nations, which had been forged in a war against aggression. We did not discriminate against Japanese safety; we impartially rushed to disarm ourselves as well.

The Japanese are now entirely in command of their country. Our relations with them are those of collaboration between friends and equals. The American troops in Japan are there for the same reason and on the same basis as those in Western Europe—in recognition that the problem of defense against aggression today transcends nationality and does not permit any of us the luxury of living unto himself. As far as we are concerned, nothing in our relations with Japan today reflects the relationship of winner or loser, occupier or occupied. I trust that the great majority of Japanese feel this statement is true.

Today, our hopes for Japan are the same as those of the Occupation. We should like to see a strong Japan, and a Japan whose strength includes adequate defense forces. This is, of course, our policy with respect to all free peoples. I think we have proved that we should like to see all the free peoples grow in strength. But our hopes for Japan have a special meaning and urgency. For in all the expanse of Asia, from the Urals and the Persian Gulf on the west to the Pacific on the east, Japan is alone in being an exporter of the industrial revolution, of its science, its technology, its skills, its machines, its with communism is not primarily an American affair. The neutrals dearly love to picture it, a conflict between powers. The Communist danger concerns most immediate countries on the borders of the Communist empire exposed to its rapacity. The United States has drawn fire of the Communists because those countries have looked to support them and have not looked in vain. While the United States has, of course, the power to attack the United States where we have been assisting those directly threatened—Turkey, the countries of Western Europe, Berlin and the Federal Republic, Southeast Asia and, of course, Korea—that we have come into conflict with the U.S.S.R. The Russians are quite aware of this, much as they would like the world believe that it is only capitalist America that stands for universal peace and brotherhood. We could put an end to the anti-American propaganda pouring out of Moscow. We could present the world with a spectacle of the association between Americans and Soviet Russians and Communists. We could eliminate with a single gesture the bothersome tensions we hear so much about. All we need do is wash our hands of the countries on the borders of the Communist empire and leave them to the mercies of what Chou En-lai calls a camp of peace and democracy headed by the Soviet Union—that would be, of course, the last way in which to serve our interests. It would lead to the progressive overpowering of the free world and ultimately to our own destruction.

The second point to be emphasized is that our reason for wanting to see the Japanese build adequate defense forces is not because we wish to see the Japanese fighting the Communist. The primary purpose of an army is not to fight. It is quite the opposite. The primary purpose of an army is to secure the nation without fighting. To the Soviet Union, the Red Army is a weapon of intimidation to be used in causing other countries to submit without the firing of a shot. To us in the free world, our armed forces are the means of preventing that from happening and maintaining our safety in peace. We know only too well that our establishments are expensive. We look forward to the day when the Soviet Union will agree to a fair system of disarmament. We believe that the sooner all sectors of the free world agree to this, the stronger, the sooner that day will come.

February 1936, when vicious attacks were launched on the Japanese civil government by groups of army officers.¹ It seems to us that the conditions of 1954 are distinctly different. The Japanese people are now possessed of the means required to prevent the accumulation of power in the hands of a military caste. They have free elections; they have a representative Diet; they have a free press; they have a Constitution in which human rights are firmly embedded; and above all, they have the experience of the past ever before them.

To assume that, because Japan embarked on imperialist adventure in the past, she is likely to do so again is to take a hopeless view of human affairs. However much we may lament it, the fact is that many of the most respected members of the family of nations have yielded to imperialist urges in the past. Militarism, expansionism, aggressiveness are—we must conclude—not endemic with certain nationalities but epidemic under certain economic, social, and political conditions. We should be watchful not of particular races but of particular circumstances that cause nations to act in certain ways.

Japan has, of course, made a beginning in the development of the means to protect herself. In the future increase in the size of the Japanese Defense Forces, which the Japanese Government has recognized is necessary, we have agreed to help by providing major items of land, sea, and air equipment. We may hope the time is not too remote when Japan—in the words of the Security Treaty of 1951²—will be ready “to assume responsibility for its own defense” and we can bring our troops home.

I have talked as if our expectations of Japan lie altogether in the realm of resistance to Communist military aggression. That is not my meaning. The role that awaits Japan is in our view far broader than that. For I think we must recognize that Communist imperialism is only a current symptom, and only one symptom, of ancient and deep-seated evils. The real enemy is the condition that produces communism. The real problem is the problem of human desperation. It is a pitiable aspect of human beings that the more desperate and frightened they are, the readier they are to grasp at panaceas and promises of the millennium, the more susceptible they are to counsel of violence and extremism, the quicker they are to follow the fanatic. The world in our lifetime has presented vast opportunities for imposing upon the credulities of suffering, bewildered humanity. There has been the damage done to men's nerves by the ferocity of our wars, the devastation left by those wars, the upsetting impact of half-understood scientific discoveries upon religious faiths, the bewilderment and confusion of youths and intellectuals looking for something to believe, the able to exploit the vast physical, spiritual, and intellectual of our era to build brutal, terroristic totalitarianisms combining immense military forces and dreams of world with fantastic dogmas of self-justification.

It is in the disillusionment and despair of so many here that the fundamental danger lies, that the real challenge those with the means of alleviating to some degree the conditions make for such disillusionment and despair. It is in this I believe that Japan can in time find its most important mission. Japanese, with their productive capacities and their technological skills, have the potential of contributing importantly to have tried to contribute, to relieving the largely voiceless the hundreds of millions of Asia and of helping them to build a more able and rewarding future. To make headway in this task requires the resources of the free peoples. Japanese resources of men cannot be dispensed with.

In speaking of Japan's role as a great industrial nation—for that matter—I do not mean to suggest that for all its materialistic solutions. What I do contend is that while peace to those who have lived amid the terrors of war and we bring medicines to those who are sick and food to the hungry, there is never any question in our hearts that we are in a great work with a meaning and consequences transcending material.

JAPAN'S ECONOMIC SITUATION

What Japan can contribute in the future must obviously depend on her state of health. The facts about Japan's economic stand out in bold relief and are doubtless already well known. The recovery of Japanese production has been one of the phenomena of the postwar years. It is now 50 percent more than it was in 1940. On the other hand, there is the alarming Japanese trade. Japan must import 20 percent of its goods each year there was a failure of the rice crop in Japan. Very little rice was produced in 1953 than in 1934, when there was a failure. But when in 1934 the population of Japan was 65 million now it is 87 million. Last year the greater part of what Japan bought by selling her products abroad went to buy food from abroad. In the continuing increase in Japan's population, the abnormal situation of 1953 may become normal.

It is, of course, not in food alone that Japan is unable to meet her own needs. Japan is lacking in most of the natural resources however. The plain fact is that Japan is living beyond her earnings from normal sources by about a billion dollars a year. Japan must sell much more abroad. If she is unable to do so we shall be back in 1930—with differences that are apparent to us all.

Trade with Communist China is not the answer. If all restrictions were removed, we believe such trade would only slightly affect Japan's commercial deficit; and to the extent that Japan supplied strategic goods to augment Communist China's war potential—which is what the Chinese Communists want—Japan would be sowing the whirlwind. For above anything else, the Chinese Communists would like to undermine or overpower Japan.

It is also not enough to say that Japan can find a natural trading partner in Southeast Asia. Certainly Southeast Asia needs Japanese manufactured goods. It is buying them at the rate of several hundred million dollars a year. This amount could, of course, be increased by devices to tie Southeast Asia's economy to Japan. But these are out of the question. Japan's products must compete for markets on their merits. And other countries—notably Great Britain, France, the Netherlands, and the United States—are also seeking to expand their trade with Southeast Asia.

What then is the answer? Here is what the Japanese tell us. After noting that there are difficult and stubborn internal problems they themselves must solve, they say "The Japanese nation . . . can exert very little control over the elements which are shackling her foreign trade. These problems—undeveloped or unavailable nearby supply sources, unstable export markets, inconvertibility of foreign currencies, tariff and export-import quota limitations—are primarily in the field of international relations and their solution is dependent upon the development of goodwill and cooperation between the sovereign nations of the free world . . . The United States is the greatest economic power in the world today. Actions taken by the U.S. Government, which appear to the average American situated in this powerful economy to be minor and unimportant, may have a tremendous effect upon the economies of other, less stable countries. Therefore, the foreign economic policy of the United States is of worldwide significance."

NEED FOR INCREASED PURCHASING POWER

I think we must admit the force of what the Japanese say. I might add one thing. I would say that what is most required, if the economies of Japan and other nations dependent on a large volume of foreign trade are to be viable, is a continuing rise in the purchasing

The report of the Randall Commission on United States Economic Policy released last week makes important recommendations on the subjects we are discussing.¹ Among these are that technical cooperation program be pressed forward vigorously; that the Government contribute all it can to the creation abroad of conditions conducive to private foreign investment, and that our Government extend loans to countries where substantial economic aid is in our interests and cannot be provided by private or international sources. I might add that it is by applying such policies in Southeast Asia that we could do most to bring about an fruitful economic relationship between Southeast Asia and the United States. But the recommendations of the Randall Commission with particular bearing on our policy toward Japan are that our customs laws should be simplified and that the President should be authorized to reduce our tariffs by 5 percent per year for 3 years and to make further reductions in the case of goods on which the tariff is manifestly and proportionately high. We have lowered our tariffs by 5 percent, and will lower them further, not out of charity for foreign producers but out of appreciation of our self-interest. The economic gains of such negotiations between two countries accrue to both. Every dollar Japan makes for us she will spend buying from us.

Moreover—and this might be even more significant—the passage of trade agreement legislation enabling the United States to negotiate trade agreements with Japan would be of great significance to Japan. The Japanese Government has taken the view that its accession to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, inelegantly known as GATT—by which the participating nations guarantee one another most-favored-nation treatment, would be a most beneficial single step Japan could take toward obtaining the kind of nondiscriminatory treatment for its exports. We agree that it is of great significance in Japan's foreign trade prospects would be the opportunity for Japan to enter into trade agreement negotiations with the individual contracting parties to GATT for the purpose of securing reductions in tariffs on a reciprocal basis. It is essential that the United States continue to lead other countries in such multilateral efforts.

Quite apart, however, from the matter of profit in international trade, we must consider the paramount interest we have in the economic health of the free nations. The economic collapse of Japan, with all the consequences that must follow from it, could be a thing like disaster for the free world. There is no excuse for not being perfectly clear upon this point. Perhaps no decision more crucial than those we make with respect to the reduction of imports. The issue at stake is the economic health of the free world.

would benefit from. This is putting the question in harsh terms, but the realities we face are themselves of an unrelenting harshness.

I have set forth in general terms what our policy is toward Japan up to the present and I have suggested what many well-informed persons believe is required in the future. Both the Japanese and we in the United States are facing crucial decisions. What we must hope is that these decisions will be made in the two countries on the basis of the actual alternatives that offer and with full regard for the realities that mean so much to us both.

55. MUTUAL DEFENSE ASSISTANCE AGREEMENT, MARCH 8, 1954¹

The Government of the United States of America and the Government of Japan,

Desiring to foster international peace and security, within the framework of the Charter of the United Nations, through voluntary arrangements which will further the ability of nations dedicated to the purposes and principles of the Charter to develop effective measures for individual and collective self-defense in support of those purposes and principles;

Reaffirming their belief as stated in the Treaty of Peace with Japan signed at the city of San Francisco on September 8, 1951² that Japan as a sovereign nation possesses the inherent right of individual or collective self-defense referred to in Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations;

Recalling the preamble of the Security Treaty between the United States of America and Japan, signed at the city of San Francisco on September 8, 1951,³ to the effect that the United States of America, in the interest of peace and security, would maintain certain of its armed forces in and about Japan as a provisional arrangement in the expectation that Japan will itself increasingly assume responsibility for its own defense against direct and indirect aggression, always avoiding any armament which could be an offensive threat or serve other than to promote peace and security in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations;

Recognizing that, in the planning of a defense assistance program for Japan, economic stability will be an essential element for consideration in the development of its defense capacities, and that Japan can contribute only to the extent permitted by its general economic condition and capacities;

Mutual Security Act of 1951, as amended,¹ which provide for the furnishing of defense assistance by the United States of America for the furtherance of the objectives referred to above; and Desiring to set forth the conditions which will govern the furnishing of such assistance;

Have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE I

1. Each Government, consistently with the principle that the stability of the world is essential to international peace and security, and that such assistance shall be available to the other and to such other governments as may be signatory to the present Agreement may in its discretion agree upon, such equipment, materials, services, or other assistance as the Government furnishing such assistance may authorize in accordance with such detailed arrangements as may be made between them. The furnishing and use of any such assistance authorized by either Government shall be consistent with the Charter of the United Nations. Such assistance as may be made available by the Government of the United States of America pursuant to the present Agreement will be furnished under those provisions subject to all of those terms, conditions and termination provisions of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, the Mutual Security Act of 1951, acts amendatory and supplementary thereto, and appropriation acts thereunder which may affect the furnishing of such assistance.

2. Each Government will make effective use of assistance furnished pursuant to the present Agreement for the purposes of promoting international peace and security in a manner that is satisfactory to both Governments, and neither Government, without the prior consent of the other, will devote such assistance to any other purpose.

3. Each Government will offer for return to the other, in accordance with terms, conditions and procedures mutually agreed upon, equipment or materials furnished under the present Agreement, and equipment and materials furnished on terms requiring reimbursement, and no longer required for the purposes for which it was made available.

4. In the interest of common security, each Government agrees not to transfer to any person not an officer or agent of such Government, or to any other government, title to or possession of such equipment, materials, or services received pursuant to the present Agreement, without the prior consent of the Government which furnished such assistance.

America as a result of deficiencies or potential deficiencies in its own resources, and which may be available in Japan. Arrangements for such transfers shall give due regard to requirements for domestic use and commercial export as determined by the Government of Japan.

ARTICLE III

1. Each Government will take such security measures as may be agreed upon between the two Governments in order to prevent the disclosure or compromise of classified articles, services or information furnished by the other Government pursuant to the present Agreement.

2. Each Government will take appropriate measures consistent with security to keep the public informed of operations under the present Agreement.

ARTICLE IV

The two Governments will, upon the request of either of them, make appropriate arrangements providing for the methods and terms of the exchange of industrial property rights and technical information for defense which will expedite such exchange and at the same time protect private interests and maintain security safeguards.

ARTICLE V

The two Governments will consult for the purpose of establishing procedures whereby the Government of Japan will so deposit, segregate, or assure title to all funds allocated to or derived from any programs of assistance undertaken by the Government of the United States of America so that such funds shall not be subject to garnishment, attachment, seizure or other legal process by any person, firm, agency, corporation, organization or government, when the Government of Japan is advised by the Government of the United States of America that any such legal process would interfere with the attainment of the objectives of the program of assistance.

ARTICLE VI

1. The Government of Japan will grant

56. ECONOMIC POSITION OF JAPAN: Statement Secretary of State at a News Conference, August 10,

The United States recognizes that one of the major problems is the problem of finding opportunities whereby Japan, with its large and industrious population, can find a way to earn a profitable living in the world.

Japan itself possesses very few natural resources, and cannot produce enough food for its people. It produces normal amounts of the foodstuffs that the people require. This is somewhat less because there was a bad failure of the rice crop. That means the Japanese have to be importing goods and raw materials and manufacturing raw materials into articles which are part of the world needs. Goods which are distinctly of Japanese origin generally pay rather high tariff duties throughout the world. Japan has not been heretofore brought into the GATT organization, nor does it benefit from the reductions which have been made in tariff rates in favor of the distinctive products of many other countries.

It is the hope of the United States that steps may be taken to improve the opportunities for Japanese trade, not just in the United States, I will emphasize, but in other countries of the world. There are actually more natural markets for much of what Japan produces. There is no necessity actually to increase large-scale imports to the United States. What is needed, rather, is to find other areas of the world where the type of goods which Japan produces will be able to find markets.

The problem is a many-sided one. The negotiation of a trade agreement on a multilateral basis is one angle to the problem. Another angle to the problem is the need for an austerity program in Japan which has been lacking somewhat over recent years but which is now to be taking shape at the present time. Also there is the problem of developing markets in Asia, particularly in the Southeast, where there are large populations which need the kind of trade which Japan makes so well and which also produce food and raw materials which Japan needs.

All of these aspects of the problem need to be explored and will be explored.

Asked whether, in view of the fact that the administration has provided economic assistance for Japan this year, it may be necessary for the United States to reconsider the possibility of some direct aid to Japan this year, Mr. Dulles replied:

It is possible, but we do not think that that will be necessary.

from the standpoint of payment—possibly in terms of local currency. But we do not anticipate the necessity for any economic aid to Japan, on the assumption that the Japanese handle their own fiscal and commercial affairs with prudence and firmness.

It seems to us the situation can be dealt with without any direct economic aid. There is, of course, a certain amount of assistance that goes to Japan through our contribution to their enlarged security program. There are still a substantial number of U.S. troops in Japan who are spending money there. In that way there is a considerable amount of what you might call invisible exports to Japan which runs up into terms of several hundred million dollars. This is not nearly as big as it was at the height of the Korean War, when there were heavy purchases in Japan for use in Korea. There is a certain decline here, but the figure is still quite a substantial one.

7. REVIEW OF AMERICAN-JAPANESE RELATIONS: Joint Statement by the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Japan, November 10, 1954 ¹

President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Yoshida met on November 9 and reaffirmed the spirit of friendly cooperation characterizing the relations between the United States and Japan. The Prime Minister also met with Secretary of State Dulles, Secretary of Treasury Humphrey, Secretary of Defense Wilson, and Director Stassen of the Foreign Operations Administration. The Prime Minister and Secretary Dulles at their meetings this week, after a full and frank exchange of views on matters of mutual interest, reviewed the conversations held during the past 3 weeks by representatives of the two governments.

I

The President and the Prime Minister agreed that the solidarity and determination of the free nations had greatly advanced the cause of world peace. They declared that their governments would, in cooperation with the free nations of Asia, continue their united efforts to maintain and promote the peace and prosperity of Asia. The Prime Minister reaffirmed his Government's determination to make a full contribution to those efforts and in particular stressed Japan's desire to cooperate, wherever possible, in the development of economic strength by the free nations of Asia.

The President and the Prime Minister declared that the goals of their governments are peaceful and that their peoples desire peace and Japanese people is a matter of importance to the entire world. The achievement of improved economic conditions in Japan depends partly upon the ability of the Japanese people themselves to develop sound and constructive internal monetary and other economic policies and partly upon Japan's ability to expand its trade with other countries. By various means since the end of the war the United States has been able to contribute substantially to the economic growth which Japan has achieved. The United States is aware of the problems which Japan is making to solve its difficult economic problems and will continue to examine sympathetically means whereby it can help the Japanese people to advance their well-being.

A number of specific measures were discussed in the recent talks. A general agreement was reached that the United States will continue to operate with Japan in its efforts to expand its foreign trade and to achieve a better balance in its foreign economic relations. The United States further agreed that the United States would sell to Japan certain types of commodities and that a substantial portion of the proceeds from these sales will be used for Japan's domestic economic improvement, for defense support and for regional economic development. Other measures were discussed, such as the establishment of a productivity program in Japan and the mutual benefits which might arise from increased participation with the other free nations of South and Southeast Asia in the economic development of that area. Both sides agreed that these measures would be of marked benefit to Japan by helping to improve its economic position and facilitating its efforts to attain a higher standard of living.

III

United States representatives expressed regret over the incident on March 1 in which 23 Japanese fishermen were injured and killed, fatally—by the fall-out of radioactive materials following a nuclear test in the Pacific.¹ They emphasized their belief that peaceful use of atomic energy would be steadily developed and would become of great value to Japan and other friendly nations throughout the world.

IV

There was also discussion of the disposition of Japanese assets now vested by the United States, and representatives of the United States stated that this matter is under consideration. Among other matters reviewed were Communist efforts to weaken and discredit the positions of free governments in Asia, the request of Japan for consideration of the cases of war criminals, and the status of the Ryukyu and Bonin Islands in the light of the recent developments.

58. BENEFICENT EFFECT OF JAPAN'S ACCESSION TO THE GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE: Statement by the Department of State, July 22, 1955 ¹

The President on July 22, 1955, signed a proclamation ² to give effect to the results of the recent negotiations for the accession of Japan to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. Under the Protocol for the Accession of Japan, which was signed for the United States on June 8, 1955,³ Japan will become a Contracting Party and the concessions negotiated between the United States and Japan will become effective on September 10, 1955, if by August 11, 1955, two-thirds of the Contracting Parties to the general agreement have cast favorable votes on a decision for the accession of Japan under the terms of the protocol. The proclamation provides that the date of entry into force of the concessions negotiated by the United States shall be notified by the President to the Secretary of the Treasury and published in the Federal Register. An analysis of the results of these negotiations was issued by the Department of State on June 9, 1955.⁴

As a result of the provisions of the exclusive trade agreement between the United States and Cuba, concluded on October 30, 1947, certain reductions in rates negotiated in connection with the accession of Japan will result in the elimination of the preferential tariff treatment now enjoyed by like Cuban products. There follows on page 230 a list of these Cuban products indicating the changes in duty which will result from the entry into force of the Protocol for the Accession of Japan.

The proclamation also provides that effect shall be given to concessions negotiated with Canada and the Benelux countries (Belgium, the Netherlands, Luxembourg) as compensation for statutory increases in the duty on fish sticks and on certain rubber-soled footwear, on both of which concessions had been granted in the general agreement. The proclamation provides that the date of the entry into force of these compensatory concessions shall be notified by the President to the Secretary of the Treasury and published in the Federal Register.

59. STRENGTHENING THE DEFENSE CAPACITY

Joint Statement by the Secretary of State and the Foreign Minister, August 31, 1955¹

Mamoru Shigemitsu, Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister of Japan, has concluded three days of discussions with Secretary of State John Foster Dulles and other high United States officials.

The Foreign Minister was accompanied among other officials by Kono, Minister of Agriculture and Forestry; Nobusuke Kishi, Secretary-General of the Japan Democratic Party; Ambassador to the United States Sadao Iguchi; Ambassador Toshikazu Kamekura, Permanent Observer to the United Nations; and Takizono, Deputy Chief Cabinet Secretary.

American officials in addition to the Secretary of State included with the Foreign Minister and members of his party included Secretary of State Herbert Hoover, Jr.; Deputy Secretary of State Reuben B. Robertson, Jr.; Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Admiral Arthur W. Radford; Mr. John Hollister, Director of International Cooperation Administration; Deputy Under Secretary of State Robert Murphy; Assistant Secretary of Defense Gray; Ambassador to Japan John M. Allison; and Acting Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs William J. Sebald.

A free and frank exchange of views from the global viewpoint was held concerning more recent international developments, the implications of the "Summit" meeting at Geneva,² the progress of the United Nations discussions on disarmament, and the impending meeting of Foreign Ministers at Geneva.³ The Far Eastern situation was also discussed. Secretary Dulles explained the policy of the United States to support freedom firmly while exploring peaceful avenues which may lead to the enhancement of general peace. Foreign Minister Shigemitsu drew on his experience in the Soviet Union and China in interpreting his nation's policies. The Secretary of State and the Foreign Minister concurred in the view that while the immediate danger of major war had perhaps receded there still remained elements of uncertainty in the situation, particularly in the Far East, and that the continued solidarity of the free world is needed to obtain improved prospects of peace.

The Foreign Minister expressed Japan's resolve to cooperate in close operation with the United States and the free world as the basis of its foreign policy. In this connection the Secretary of State and the Foreign Minister, recognizing the desirability of closer cooperation between their countries for the purpose of securing a more enduring peace in the Far East, agreed that consultation

The basic problems of Japanese security were discussed. The Foreign Minister indicated that Japan's defense strength has now reached a considerable level and expressed the firm determination that the policy of progressive increase will be continued within the limit of Japan's capacity. He explained the plans for increasing Japan's defense capabilities recently formulated by the Japanese defense authorities. It was agreed that these plans should be studied in the course of the continuing consultations in Tokyo on United States-Japanese defense relationships and should be reviewed from time to time in the light of strategic requirements.

It was agreed that efforts should be made, whenever practicable on a cooperative basis, to establish conditions such that Japan could, as rapidly as possible, assume primary responsibility for the defense of its homeland and be able to contribute to the preservation of international peace and security in the Western Pacific. It was also agreed that when such conditions are brought about it would be appropriate to replace the present Security Treaty¹ with one of greater mutuality.

With the conclusion of such a treaty as an objective, it was further agreed that consultations would take place in Tokyo between Japanese and United States representatives on defense problems and that in such consultations consideration will be given to the establishment of schedules for the progressive withdrawal of United States ground forces as Japan's own defense capacity increases and taking into account the related situation in Asia.

On the problem of Japan's financial contribution to the support of United States forces in Japan, there was agreement on the desirability of establishing a general formula for progressive reduction over the next several years.

The Foreign Minister emphasized Japan's need to expand its trade with other countries particularly in Asia and expressed appreciation for the help of the United States in assisting Japan to become a full member of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.²

Secretary Dulles expressed current thinking about assistance for the economic development of the free nations of Asia pursuant to United States legislation. It was recognized that the measures planned would facilitate Japan's efforts to improve its economic position and attain a higher standard of living. The Secretary stressed the contribution to economic development which could be made by foreign private investment both in Japan and in other countries of the area.

The Foreign Minister requested the early release of war criminals under United States jurisdiction. The Secretary of State described the complexity of the problem and indicated that the question of the that utmost efforts will be made to bring the negotiation on this subject between the two Governments to an early conclusion.

Throughout these talks the representatives of the United States and Japan recognized that Japan, as a major power in the Pacific, should play an active role in friendly cooperation with other Asian countries, contributing to stability and peace in Asia. They agreed to support Japan's efforts to establish internal stability, reconstruct its economy and strengthen its defense capacity, the basis for continuing cooperation between the United States and Japan. The United States Foreign Minister Shigemitsu and Secretary of State Dulles announced the renewal of the determination of their Governments to expand friendly relations further so that they together and with others may work for the consolidation of world peace and freedom.

E. THE REPUBLIC OF CHINA ON FORMOSA (TAIWAN) AND COMMUNIST CHINA

Immediate Results of Communist Seizure of Power in China, 1950

60. UNITED STATES POLICY RESPECTING THE SITUATION IN FORMOSA (TAIWAN): Statement by the President, January 5, 1950¹

The United States Government has always stood for the principles of freedom and self-determination in international relations. Traditional United States policy toward China, as exemplified in the open-door policy, called for respect for the territorial integrity of China.² This policy was recently reaffirmed in the United Nations General Assembly resolution of December 8, 1949, which, in part, calls on all states—

To refrain from (a) seeking to acquire spheres of influence or to establish controlled regimes within the territory of China; (b) seeking to obtain special rights or privileges within the territory of China.³

A specific application of the foregoing principles is the present situation with respect to Formosa. In the joint declaration of the United States and Great Britain at Cairo on December 1, 1943⁴ the President of the United States their purpose that territories Japan had stolen from China, such as Formosa, should be restored to the Republic of China. The United States was a signatory to the Potsdam declaration of July 26, 1945, which declared that the terms of the Cairo declaration should be carried out. The provisions of this declaration were accepted by Japan at the time of its surrender.² In keeping with these declarations Formosa was surrendered to Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek,³ and for the past 4 years, the United States and the other Allied Powers have accepted the exercise of Chinese authority over the Island.

The United States has no predatory designs on Formosa or on any other Chinese territory. The United States has no desire to obtain special rights or privileges or to establish military bases on Formosa at this time. Nor does it have any intention of utilizing its armed forces to interfere in the present situation. The United States Government will not pursue a course which will lead to involvement in the civil conflict in China.

Similarly, the United States Government will not provide military aid or advice to Chinese forces on Formosa. In the view of the United States Government, the resources on Formosa are adequate to enable them to obtain the items which they might consider necessary for the defense of the Island. The United States Government proposes to continue under existing legislative authority the present ECA program of economic assistance.

31. ELABORATION OF POLICY RESPECTING THE STATUS OF FORMOSA (TAIWAN): Remarks by the Secretary of State at a Special News Conference, January 5, 1950⁴

I am having this conference this afternoon at the request and at the direction of the President for the purpose of going into the background of the statement which he made this morning on the subject of Formosa.⁵

I should like to make a few remarks on this subject for the purpose of trying to put it in its setting for you, and then we will get down into such details as you want to get into.

Why was the statement made at this particular time? That is a question that arises in all of your minds and I want to recall to you that I have said very often in these meetings that the foreign policy of the United States is determined not merely by what the State Department says, or not even by what the President says, and not even by what the Congress says, but reflects the sum total of the activities

10 days, this subject of Formosa has become one of the foremost subjects of discussion throughout the country.

The ordinary processes of life in this town of Washington have made their contribution. We have had leak and counterleak, gossip and countergossip. We have had the contributions of distinguished statesmen in the debate. We have had a great deal of talk in the press and on the radio. Much of that is good and much of that is desirable and all of it has to go on to make the United States the democracy that it is. But we slide very easily from discussion to the statement of fact. I have here a distinguished foreign newspaper dated Friday last [December 30] which announces as a fact that President Truman has decided, et cetera, and et cetera, giving something which President Truman had not decided and had not intended to decide. Therefore what has occurred is that we have gotten a great deal of confusion in the minds of our own people. We have gotten a great deal of confusion in the minds of foreign people. We have stirred up a good deal of speculation, all of which, if allowed to continue, would be highly prejudicial to the interests of the United States of America. And therefore, it was the President's desire to clarify the situation. He was not primarily concerned in stating anything new, and you will find very little which is new in the statement. What he was interested in doing was bringing clarity out of confusion.

That, I think, gives you the background as to why it was necessary to make the statement at the present time. It would have been desirable from our point of view if the whole question of the Far East, and all of the parts of the Far East and of Formosa, which after all is a small part of the great question of the Far East, could have been discussed very fully with members of both parties on the Hill before any statement was made. But one has to choose in this life and it was more important to clarify thinking than it was to go on and have the most desirable of all possible things which is consultation.

Now, getting down to this statement, let's be clear about one or two things. There has been a great deal of amateur military strategizing indulged in in regard to this matter of Formosa. The underlying factors in the decision are not in that area. They have to do with the fundamental integrity of the United States and with maintaining in the world the belief that when the United States takes a position it sticks to that position and does not change it by reason of transitory expediency or advantage on its part. If we are going to maintain the free nations of the world as a great unit opposed to the encroachment of communism and other sorts of totalitarian aggression, the world must believe that we stand for principle and that we are honorable and decent people and that we do not act for expediency.

It is important that our position in regard to China should never be subject to the slightest doubt or the slightest question.

Now, what has that position been? In the middle of the war the President of the United States, the Prime Minister of Great Britain, and the President of China agreed at Cairo that among the areas stolen from China by Japan was Formosa and Formosa should go back to China.

As the President pointed out this morning, that statement was incorporated in the declaration at Potsdam and that declaration at Potsdam was conveyed to the Japanese as one of the terms of their surrender¹ and was accepted by them, and the surrender was made on that basis.

Shortly after that, the Island of Formosa was turned over to the Chinese in accordance with the declarations made and with the conditions of the surrender.

The Chinese have administered Formosa for 4 years. Neither the United States nor any other ally ever questioned that authority and that occupation. When Formosa was made a province of China, nobody raised any lawyers' doubts about that. That was regarded as in accordance with the commitments.

Now, in the opinion of some, the situation is changed. They believe that the forces now in control of the mainland of China, the forces which undoubtedly will soon be recognized by some other countries, are not friendly to us, and therefore they want to say "Well, we have to wait for a treaty." We did not wait for a treaty on Korea.² We did not wait for a treaty on the Kuriles.³ We did not wait for a treaty on the islands over which we have trusteeship.⁴

Whatever may be the legal situation, the United States of America, Mr. Truman said this morning, is not going to quibble on any lawyers' words about the integrity of its position. That is where we stand.

Therefore, the President says, we are not going to use our forces in connection with the present situation in Formosa. We are not going to attempt to seize the Island. We are not going to get involved militarily in any way on the Island of Formosa. So far as I know, no responsible person in the Government, no military man has ever believed that we should involve our forces in the island.

I do not believe that is new policy. It would be new policy if we decided to do that. The President is affirming what so far as I know

² General Order No. 1 provided that Soviet forces should receive the Japanese surrender north of the thirty eighth parallel and that American forces should has been the view of his Administration, and the unique ever since I have known about it.

The President goes on to say that we do not intend to assistance or advice, that is matériel and military people, on Formosa, and he says why. He says that there are that Island which are adequate to enable those on the island whatever necessary military supplies they believe they have. That is against a background of very considerable gifts of a time when the Government on Formosa was recognized by as the Government of China and was in control of a very China.¹ We gave vast amounts of military equipment to the Government after the war up until 1948. In 1948 another Congress² was passed, and 125 million dollars of military equipment turned over.

That is not where the difficulty lies in maintaining the forces on it. It is not that they lack rifles or ammunition; they do have any deficiencies in any of those, they can get what they need. That is not the trouble. The trouble lies and it is not the function of the United States nor will the United States attempt to furnish a will to resist and a purpose for resistance who must provide for themselves.

That is the background of this statement. The President goes on to say that in regard to economic assistance which we are furnishing,³ we will furnish it for as long as the legislation Congress has passed permits us to. Whether that legislation has been extended or not, I don't wish to prejudice this afternoon's matter for discussion with the leaders, and for action by the Congress.

We have been, through the ECA, conducting programs on Formosa which has resulted in all the fertilizer necessary for the spring planting on the Island of Formosa. Others have been the purchase of machinery for refining on the Island and for running the power plant and other things on the Island. Other programs have had to do with repairing their power plants and other factories in repair and improvement. Those are going forward.

Now those are the main statements of background which we are to make. I am informed by Mr. McDermott that some people want me to say what if any significance is to be attached to the last paragraph of the statement which says, "The United States has no desire to obtain special rights or privileges or military bases on Formosa at this time." The question is what that phrase "at this time" mean. That phrase does not modify or weaken the fundamental policies stated in this

62. RECALL OF FOREIGN SERVICE PERSONNEL FROM COMMUNIST CHINA: Statement by the Department of State, January 14, 1950 (Excerpts)¹

Chinese Communist authorities in Peiping have ordered the taking over of United States Government consular property in Peiping and today have seized that property in defiance of protests by the United States Government. This seizure is in violation of long standing treaty rights granted the United States in 1901² and reaffirmed in the Sino-United States treaty of 1943 by which the United States voluntarily relinquished its extraterritorial rights in China.³

The United States Government takes an extremely serious view of this situation, which constitutes a flagrant violation of our treaty rights and of the most elementary standards of international usage and conduct.

The seizure was carried out despite our protests and our announced intention to withdraw all American official personnel from Communist China if the Chinese Communists attempted to seize our office and properties.

The Department is now preparing instructions for the recall of all American official personnel from Communist China. Arrangements for the withdrawal of our official personnel will be made as expeditiously as possible and when completed our official establishments will be closed. Any facilities for evacuation from China which are arranged for our official personnel will be made available for all American citizens who desire to depart.

This violation of American consular property has arisen in almost immediate sequence to the harsh and unjustified treatment of United States Consul General Angus Ward and his staff at Mukden.⁴ It also is one in the long series of mistreatment of Americans, which included the beating of Vice Consul Olive in Shanghai and the continued detention of Messrs. Smith and Bender, United States Navy personnel.⁵

The background of this unprecedented act by the Chinese Communists is as follows:

On January 6, the Chinese Communist military authorities at Peiping issued a proclamation which stated that "certain foreign countries in the past, utilizing the so-called 'right of stationing troops' of unequal treaties, have occupied land in the Peking municipality and constructed military barracks" and expressing their intention of recovering "this type of real property right." The proclamation tary barracks and other installations will first be required. On January 7, the Chinese Communist military authorities sent a communication to the American Consul General at Peiping presented as an order for the requisitioning of United States Government official property at No. 22 Legation Street in Peiping. The Consul General was directed to send a messenger with the order to turn over this property, which was being used by the American Legation General for official purposes.²

The Department of State instructed the American Consul General at Peiping on January 7 to transmit to Gen. Chou En-lai a communication pointing out that the United States Government had the right to use for official purposes the land in question under the treaty signed at Peking [Peiping]³ on September 7, 1901, by the United States and eleven other powers and that this right was reaffirmed by the United States treaty of 1943, under which this Government relinquished its extraterritorial rights in China. The Consul General was further instructed to state that this land and the buildings were now being used for official purposes and that the barracks and tary barracks mentioned in the communication from the Chinese Communist military authorities had long since been converted into an office building and used as the office of the American Legation General. In conclusion, he was directed to express the United States Government's expectation that no action would be taken constituting any violation of the rights of the United States Government as set forth above.⁴

Mr. Clubb⁵ reported that he had sent the above communication to General Chou on January 9 and that the communication had been returned to him without answer or acknowledgment but with indications that it had been opened and read. He later informed the Department that he had delivered a communication on this subject to General Chou on January 10. This communication was also returned to Mr. Clubb with indications that it had been opened and read. On January 8 Mr. Clubb made a simple acknowledgment of the communication from the Chinese Communist military authorities and on January 11, in accordance with instructions from the Department, he sent a second communication to these authorities, enclosing each of his letters to General Chou. All these communications were returned to Mr. Clubb with indications that they had been opened and read.

In recognition of the limitations of time and in view of the extremely serious concern of the United States Government over the developments at Peiping, the Department, having informed the British Embassy in Washington on January 7 of this development, on January 10 requested the good offices of the British Foreign Office to transmit that the British officer-in-charge at Peiping be instructed to convey personally on behalf of the United States Government to General Chou En-lai or, in his absence, to the highest ranking Chinese Communist official available to him a statement to the following effect:

"General Chou will have by now received the communication regarding the question of requisition of the former military barracks area of the United States Government at Peiping forwarded to him by Mr. Clubb on instructions from this Government. In accordance with the provisions of Article II of the Sino-United States treaty of 1943, under which the United States Government relinquished its extraterritorial rights in China, the United States Government would have no objection to turning over to the authorities at Peiping the Glacis property ¹ to the west of the United States Government consular compounds. The United States Government would also be prepared to turn over to the authorities at Peiping for immediate occupancy the United States Government-owned building on this property and enter into discussions regarding indemnification for the building.

"Should the requisition order of the Chinese Communist military authorities be made applicable, however, to any part of the United States Government's consular compounds, the United States Government would consider such action a violation of its rights and would conclude that it had no alternative to closing all of its official establishments in Communist China and to withdrawing all of its official personnel from Communist China."²

The British Government was good enough to send appropriate instructions to its officer-in-charge at Peiping. In view of the time limitations involved and in order to ensure that the Chinese Communist authorities be aware of the views and intentions of the United States Government and not act without full realization of the inevitable results of a violation of United States rights, Mr. Clubb was authorized as a last resort, in the event that the British Government instructions to its officer-in-charge did not arrive prior to the expiration

63. REVIEW OF UNITED STATES POLICY IN RE CHINA (REPLIES BY THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE TO A SERIES OF QUESTIONS CONTAINED IN HOUSE RESOLU- TION 452 (81st CONGRESS, 2d SESSION): House Committee on Foreign Affairs, February 9, 1950)

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred House Resolution (H. Res. 452) requesting the State Department to furnish full and complete answers to certain questions relating to the foreign policy of the United States in the Far East, having considered the same, report adversely thereon and recommend that the resolution do not pass.

The recommendation of the committee is based on the answers to the questions contained in the resolution which were furnished the committee by the Department of State. While the publication of portions of two answers, the publication of which was felt by the Department of State would be incompatible with the national interest, the answers are included in this report for the information of the Members of the House, and are as follows:

Question 1

With respect to the President's statement of January 5, 1950,⁴ on the subject of Formosa—

(a) Were the views of the Secretary of Defense solicited in the formulation of the policy enunciated therein?

Comment.—Yes.

Question 1 (b)

Comment.—The views of the National Military Establishment were presented to the National Security Council in its deliberations preceding the issuance of the President's statement. These views presumably included those of the component parts of the National Military Establishment.

Question 1 (c)

Is Hainan included in the policy enunciated in said statement?

Comment.—Certain portions of the President's statement refer specifically to Formosa. Other portions apply clearly to all areas of China including Hainan. For example, the statements "The United States has no predatory designs on Formosa or on any other Chinese territory . . . the United States will not pursue a course which will lead to involvement in the civil conflict in China" are of general application. The statement "Similarly, the United States Government will not provide military aid or advice to Chinese forces on Formosa" applies to all forces under the Chinese Government high command which are located on Formosa regardless of the present deployment of those forces.

Question 1 (d)

Have the following been considered by the Executive as alternatives to the policy enunciated in said statement?

(1) Insistence on the execution of the terms of the Cairo Declaration, which provide for the return of Formosa to the Republic of China.

Comment.—This cannot properly be considered an alternative to the policy enunciated by the President. The President's statement of January 5, 1951 contained a reaffirmation of the Cairo Declaration on the part of the United States in respect to the disposition of Formosa. Formosa has been administered since 1945 by China, the surrender of Japanese forces on Formosa having been made to Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek.

(2) Consideration of Formosa as a possession of Japan to be administered by the victor powers until eventual disposition under a peace settlement with Japan.

(3) A plebiscite in Formosa, under the auspices of the Far Eastern Commission or a special commission of the UN, to determine whether the inhabitants desire—

(a) to continue as a province of and the seat of government of the Republic of China; (b) to be placed under a United Nations trusteeship; or (c) to become an independent nation.

Comment.—These alternatives were considered. As has been noted under (1) above, Formosa has been administered by China since 1945, when Japanese forces on the island surrendered to Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek. It was incorporated into China as a province. It is now the seat of the Chinese Government. The Allied Powers associated in the war against Japan have not questioned these steps. The United States Government has not questioned these steps because they were clearly in line with its commitments made at Cairo and reaffirmed at Potsdam. In other words, the Allied Powers including the United States have for the past 4 years treated Formosa as a part of China.

For the United States Government, at this date, to seek to establish a non-Chinese administration on Formosa, either through SCAP or a United Nations or FEC-sponsored plebiscite, would be almost universally interpreted in mainland China and widely interpreted throughout Asia as an attempt by this Government to separate Formosa from China in violation of its pledges and contrary to its long-standing policy of respecting the territorial integrity of China. The important point from the standpoint of our interests in Asia, including mainland China, is not the technical justifications which we might urge for taking such steps but rather the way such action on our part would be viewed by the people.

in either of the proposed alternatives. There is likewise the question of force to carry out the course of action proposed if the Chinese Government gives its consent, and to defend the island if either proposal were adopted. The United Nations, of course, has no forces and it seems clear that the island would finally rest upon the United States.

In any case the conduct of a plebiscite for the purpose of ascertaining the wishes of the inhabitants on the future disposition of Formosa is beyond the competence of the Far Eastern Commission. The Far Eastern Commission's terms of reference is "to formulate the policies, principles, and standards in conformity with which the fulfillment by Japan of its obligations under the terms of surrender may be accomplished."¹ The terms of reference also provide that the Commission shall not make recommendations with regard to military operations nor with regard to territorial adjustments."

Question 1 (e) (1)

Does the Executive have information as to alternate sources of essential commodities such as rice and iron ore to replace Formosa and Hainan as sources of commodities for Japan in the event of the capture of these islands by the Communists?

Comment.—In recent years Japan has procured only iron ore from Formosa, the amount of between 200,000 and 300,000 tons in 1948 and 1949. This amount was obtained largely from wartime stocks mined by Japan. Hainan's potential rate of current production is not large enough to make a problem of alternative sources. Formosa has exported no rice to Japan in recent years. It was formerly a source of rice for Japan but with increases in population and declines in production have been unable to export rice to Japan since the war. The major commodity exported from Formosa to Japan is sugar, and this has represented from one-fifth of total Japanese sugar imports. The Philippines and India may be adequate alternative sources of supply. It is probable that Japan can procure from these sources under balanced-trade arrangements, as it has imported from Formosa. Such arrangements would maintain the present level of Japan's trade with these countries. Formosa is also a source of quantities of salt for Japan; alternative sources are available, particularly in the Red Sea area.

The capture of these islands by the Communists would not necessarily eliminate them as sources of supply of commodities for Japan. Whether the Communists would be willing to engage in such trade upon acceptable terms is not yet predicted.

Question 1 (e) (2)

Does the Executive have information as to the factor of additional cost to Japan of commodities imported from the United States in the event of capture of Formosa and Hainan by the Chinese Communists?

Comment.—The extent to which elimination of Hainan and Formosa as sources of commodities for import into Japan would adversely affect Japan's international payments and thus create additional United States costs cannot be predicted with accuracy. Formosan sugar has been priced above the world-market price. It is probable that sugar could be obtained elsewhere under balanced trade arrangements which will not create a balance of payments problem. For example, Philippine sugar is available at or below the world-market price. Procurement of iron ore and salt from alternative sources would not present a problem of major importance. Accordingly, the capture of Formosa and Hainan by the Communists would not greatly increase Japan's international payments to the United States, if at all, of defraying the deficit in Japan's payments to the United States.

Question 1 (f)

Has any recent survey of the defense resources of Formosa been made by an agency of this Government?

Comment.—Information on Formosa's defense resources is received constantly from the United States reporting officers in the field and is subject to continual review and assessment by the intelligence agencies. In general, it is considered that the available material resources are adequate for the defense of Formosa provided that they can be mobilized by the Chinese Government and put to effective use by its military forces.

Question 1 (g)

For what purposes and in what amounts has assistance been rendered to Formosa under the present Economic Cooperation Administration program,¹ which, in the words of the statement, "the United States Government proposes to continue"? In this connection, what steps have been taken and what sums have been spent in (1) the $17,000,000 capital improvement program which was contemplated for Formosa at the time of the consideration of legislation to extend the China Aid Act² in March 1949; and (2) the land-tenure reforms and similar welfare-improvement measures carried out by the Provincial government of Formosa with the advice and assistance of the Joint Commission for Rural Reconstruction?³

Comment.—United States aid from appropriated funds to Formosa under the ECA program had amounted to approximately 18.5 million dollars by December 31, 1949. This figure includes the value of all commodities delivered, en route and scheduled for shipment to Formosa as well as actual payments for services. It does not include appropriated funds used for ECA administrative expenses and for the JCRR program relating to Formosa. An accounting break-down of these expenses as between the Chinese mainland and Formosa is not available at this time. Nor does the total aid figure include expenditures from counterpart funds for local currency costs of ECA administration or the JCRR program (The latter is discussed under (g) (2) below.)

There follows a list of the commodities and services for which the 18.5 million dollars has been obligated.

Question 1 (g) (1)

The $17,000,000 capital improvement program.

The item for technical assistance indicated in the above table includes the cost of preliminary engineering surveys on a variety of industrial and transportation projects of the type for which the $17,000,000 capital improvement program was contemplated in March 1949. None of the funds thus tentatively allocated, however, have been used thus far to initiate actual procurement of equipment for such projects.

This suspension of the capital improvement aspect of the ECA program for Formosa was based on two developments which had their immediate origin in the rapid Chinese Communist advance to the Yangtze River in the spring of 1949.

the late fall of 1949. The consequences of this unplanned mass migration caused considerable confusion in the administration of the island and the strong inflationary pressures through increased demands levied on resources by the new nonproductive population.

It would have been highly impractical, to say the least, to have undertaken large-scale capital-investment projects in the face of such unstable and economic circumstances. Even if the administrative difficulties had been overcome, the immediate inflationary impact of local currency necessary for installation of imported capital equipment might well have impaired the Formosan economy. This continues to be an important question governing the rate and magnitude of United States assistance to improvement projects on Formosa.

Moreover, it was considered that, in the light of all circumstances, political and military as well as economic, the danger that Formosa might go to the mainland was such as not to warrant United States Government support for the creation of substantial new industrial and transportation facilities on the island. On the other hand, United States aid to help meet the current needs of the island was continued; technical advice was extended to improve the more effective operation of the island's capital plant; ECA supported the Joint Commission on Rural Reconstruction designed to improve agricultural productivity and bring about greater social stability among the population. The United States Government took the position, however, that United States grants for permanent additions to the island's wealth should be based on a clear showing that the Chinese Government was able to employ such aid in such a manner as to ensure (a) progress toward economic and political development and (b) the effective defense of Formosa should it be attacked. This principle applies with equal validity to present implementation of the ECA program.

Question 2

With respect to the current situation in China and the Far East—

(a) *What are the numbers and types of vessels and craft transferred to China under the agreement of December 8, 1947?*¹ What balance remains to be transferred?

Comment.—The December 8, 1947 agreement between the United States and China contained a proposed list of 138 naval vessels to be transferred to the Chinese Government. A total of 131 such vessels have been transferred under this agreement. A list of these vessels, as given in the White Paper,² page 942, follows:

The seven vessels not transferred were—

Code	Type of vessel	[Vessel]	Code	Type of vessel	[Vessel]

Since the capacity of the Chinese Government to maintain and operate vessels had been taxed to the full by early transfers under the agreement, the Chinese Government requested an extension of the agreed-upon date—1948—by which time transfers of vessels in the Philippines were to have been completed. (Under terms of the agreement the Chinese had 120 days for the transfer of a vessel to effect its movement.) This Government agreed to an extension of the transfer date until September 1, 1948, for 10 of the ships in the Philippines. Two of the seven vessels not transferred, the YMS 2017 and SC 518, were either forced aground or sunk during the typhoon season. The other five were found to need reconditioning. The Chinese Navy did not relinquish itself of transfer rights on these vessels.

No further transfers of vessels pursuant to the December 8, 1947, agreement are contemplated.

Question 2 (b)

Have the Chinese Communist forces obtained, and are they obtaining, amphibious assault equipment from the Soviet Union or elsewhere?

Comment.—There have been many reports of varying degrees of reliability on this subject, many of which have appeared in the press. The Communist authorities have publicly announced that the capture of Formosa is now a major objective and it is therefore reasonable to assume that the Communists are making all possible efforts to prepare the necessary amphibious assault equipment.

Question 2 (c)

Has the United States Government made any statement with respect to the recognition of the Communist regime by the United Kingdom?

Comment.—In response to a question by a correspondent, the State Department spokesman on January 6, 1950, replied as follows:

“The American position on recognition has been previously stated.

“As has been previously announced, we have been in consultation with the British and other governments regarding this subject and each government has made its views known. The decision by a government whether to withhold or grant recognition to a new government is an exercise of a basic sovereign right and each government must make its own decision in the light of the facts as it sees it and of its own circumstances. It is the United States position that recognition of a government in no way constitutes or implies approval of that government. This is a widely held principle. The governments with which we have been in consultation all seem to have the same ultimate objective of a free and independent China free of foreign domination.”

Question 2 (d)

Has the United States Government formulated its attitude with respect to admission of the Communist regime in China to the UN?

Comment.—The United States Government has formulated its attitude on this question and that attitude may be summarized as follows:

The United States Government recognizes the National Government of China and has instructed United States representatives at the UN to vote against motions which would have the effect of depriving the National Government representatives of the seat which they are entitled to occupy in the Security Council or in other UN organs.

A motion to unseat a National Government representative or to seat a Communist representative is, in our view, a procedural matter for it relates to the internal organization of a UN organ. Under article 27 of the Charter, each

What areas in Asia come within the scope of the Truman doctrine? ¹

Comment.—The interrelated concepts of supporting those peoples who are resisting subjugation, of assisting free peoples to work out their own destinies and of aiding, primarily through economic and financial means, in the establishment of economic and political stability, are basic to the policies of this Government with respect to Asia no less than to other parts of the world.

This has been evidenced by such actions as the Point IV proposals, aid to the recognized Government of China, economic aid to Korea, the steps taken in Japan to restore economic stability and to foster democratic institutions and ideas, and the encouragement of peaceful settlements in such areas as Indonesia, India, and Pakistan.

It is axiomatic that the application of these fundamental concepts must be adapted in the light of particular circumstances in various areas. Obviously certain programs which are effective in Europe, for example, may not necessarily be equally effective in Asia. Similarly, to consider Asia as a homogeneous entity would dangerously oversimplify a complex situation. In the formulation of its policies, this Government must take into consideration the diversities in peoples, problems, and opportunities existing not only between other areas of the world and Asia, but also within Asia itself. For example, as Secretary Acheson stated in his recent address to the Press Club, there is a "great difference between our responsibility and our opportunity in the northern part of the Pacific area and in the southern part of the Pacific area." ²

The Department is constantly studying those problems related to the foreign policy of this Government in order to determine how these basic concepts may best be applied to specific areas throughout both Asia and the rest of the world.

64. TREATY OF FRIENDSHIP, ALLIANCE, AND MUTUAL ASSISTANCE BETWEEN THE SOVIET UNION AND COMMUNIST CHINA, SIGNED AT MOSCOW, FEBRUARY 14, 1950 ³

The Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Central People's Government of the People's Republic of China;

Filled with determination jointly to prevent, by the consolidation of friendship and cooperation between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the People's Republic of China, the rebirth of Japanese imperialism and a repetition of aggression on the part of Japan or any other state which should unite in any form with Japan in acts of aggression;

Imbued with the desire to consolidate lasting peace and universal security in the Far East and throughout the world in conformity with the aims and principles of the United Nations organization; lies and the People's Republic of China meets the interests of the peoples of the Soviet Union and China.

Resolved for this purpose to conclude the present appointed as their plenipotentiary representatives:

The Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the Union of Soviet Republics—Andrei Yanuaryevich Vyshinsky, Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics;

The Central People's Government of the People's Republic of China—Chou En-lai, Prime Minister of the State Council and Minister of Foreign Affairs of China;

Who, after exchange of their credentials, found in good order, agreed upon the following:

Article I

Both High Contracting Parties undertake jointly to take all necessary measures at their disposal for the purpose of preventing the repetition of aggression and violation of peace on the part of or by any state which should unite with Japan, directly or indirectly, in acts of aggression. In the event of one of the High Contracting Parties being attacked by Japan or states allied with Japan, or being involved in a state of war, the other High Contracting Party will immediately render military and other assistance to the first by all means at its disposal.

The High Contracting Parties also declare their readiness to maintain a spirit of sincere cooperation to participate in all international efforts aimed at ensuring peace and security throughout the world, and to do all in their power to achieve the speediest implementation of these tasks.

Article II

Both the High Contracting Parties undertake by means of the present agreement to strive for the earliest conclusion of a peace treaty with Japan, jointly with the other Powers which were allies of the Soviet Union in the Second World War.

Article III

Both High Contracting Parties undertake not to enter into any alliance directed against the other High Contracting Party, and not to take part in any coalition or in actions or measures directed against the other High Contracting Party.

Article IV

Both High Contracting Parties will consult each other in connection with all important international problems affecting the common interests of the Soviet Union and China, being guided by the principle of the consolidation of peace and universal security.

Article V

Both the High Contracting Parties undertake, in the spirit of friendship and cooperation and in conformity with the principles of equality, mutual interests, and also mutual respect for the state sovereignty and territorial integrity and non-interference in internal affairs of the other High Contracting Party—to develop and consolidate economic and cultural ties between the Soviet Union and China, to render each other every possible economic assistance, and to carry out the necessary economic cooperation.

Article VI

The present Treaty comes into force immediately upon its ratification; the exchange of instruments of ratification will take place in Peking.¹

The present Treaty will be valid for 30 years. If neither of the High Contracting Parties gives notice one year before the expiration of this term of its desire to denounce the Treaty, it shall remain in force for another five years and will be extended in compliance with this rule.

5. IMPLICATIONS OF THE TREATY OF ALLIANCE AND RELATED AGREEMENTS BETWEEN THE SOVIET UNION AND COMMUNIST CHINA: Address by the Secretary of State March 15, 1950 (Excerpt) ²

Since I spoke in January on the Far East ³ there has been one new and clear indication of Soviet Russia's intentions in China. We see it in the published terms of the Sino-Soviet Treaty of Friendship, Alliance and Mutual Assistance of February 14, 1950, and the other agreements concluded and announced at the same time.⁴

The Soviet Union and its most ardent supporters in China may have temporary success in persuading the people of China that these agreements refute the contention of the non-Communist world that alliance with Soviet Russia holds an evil omen of imperialistic domination. These agreements promise help in the rehabilitation of

¹ Communist China ratified the treaty. Apr. 10, 1950. The treaty entered

China's war-torn and impoverished economy. They promise, in particular, assistance in the repair and development of China's railroads and industry. The Chinese people may welcome such promises and assurances. But they will not fail, in time, to see that they fall short of China's real needs and desires. And they will wonder about the points upon which the agreements remain.

Now, let us examine these assurances and promises of economic aid. First, Soviet Russia has promised to return certain Manchurian property but not the industrial equipment robbed by the Red Army in 1945. Is this aid? Is it even a belated admission of guilt for which deprived not only China but all of Asia of some 2 billion dollars' worth of productive capacity?

Second, Soviet Russia extends to China a 300 million dollars credit at an interest rate of 1 percent yearly. This works out to 60 million dollars each year. This announcement was made in 1948. It was followed by the news that the ruble was to be revalued, thus cutting down the effective aid by one-fourth if the new dollar rate should be applied to this credit. Thus, the Chinese may find Soviet Russia's credit to be no more than 45 million dollars per year. They can compare this with a grant—not a loan—of 45 million dollars voted by the American Congress to China in the year 1948.¹

China's needs are great and pressing. China today faces a problem of 40 million people suffering from hunger between now and the next harvest. Millions may die. And yet, food moves from China to the Soviet Union.

China's need for development capital runs into billions of dollars. In its issue of February 25, the London Economist makes the following penetrating analysis of Chinese needs and hopes and the extent to which they have been dashed by the agreements with Moscow:

... it has not been the purpose of modern-minded China to stagnate in the backwardness of a pre-industrial era; for many years they have been possessed by the dream of a rapid industrialisation whereby China would break out from its old weakness and poverty and take a place among the nations more in keeping with its vast population and considerable natural resources. There is, indeed, no sign at all of a great programme of industrialisation being carried through with Russian aid; the idea seems rather to make China's economy more "colonial" than before, so that it can provide foodstuffs and raw materials for the new industrial areas of Siberia.

The more fanatical of the Communist leaders may be content with this, but it must bring a bitter disillusionment to many of American economic assistance which would have been forthcoming for a United China on a far larger scale and with fewer strings attached than the loan now received with so much official gratitude from Moscow. If any Chinese really thought that Peking would obtain an unconditional and unstinted bounty by turning from Washington to Moscow, the experience of Yugoslavia might have warned him that there are more kicks than halfpence in dependent association with the Soviet empire.

And, now, as to the political and territorial assurances contained in the agreements. Can the Chinese people fail to observe that whatever may be the promises for the future under the terms of the treaty and agreements recently concluded at Moscow, the U.S.S.R. has special rights in China which represent an infringement of China's sovereignty and which are held by no other foreign power. It is Soviet Russia which, despite all the tawdry pretense of the treaty terms, occupies the role of empire builder at China's expense.

These are the realities that must be faced by the Chinese people. In facing them, they can well consider what it means to brush aside an established friendship for new-found and voracious friends. Our friendship has been founded on the belief that anyone who violates the integrity of China is the enemy of China and is hostile to the interests of the United States. We have 50 years of history and a world war to prove that this belief is not a mere matter of words. This belief has been proved by deeds. We can and shall stand on the record.

We now face the prospect that the Communists may attempt to apply another familiar tactic and use China as a base for probing for other weak spots which they can move into and exploit.

As old friends, we say to the Chinese people that we fully understand that their present unhappy status within the orbit of the Soviet Union is not the result of any choice on their own part, but has been forced upon them. We understand that the Communist basis for their Government is similarly not the result of any free choice of their own. We do not intend to tell them what ideologies or form of government they should have. We do not intend to engage in any aggressive adventures against them. The American people will remain in the future, as we have been in the past, the friends of the Chinese people.

But they should understand that, whatever happens within their own country, they can only bring grave trouble on themselves and their friends, both in Asia and beyond, if they are led by their new rulers into aggressive or subversive adventures beyond their borders.

all in China may know who would be responsible if adventures might bring to pass.

United States Policy in the Formosa (Taiwan) Area During the Korean Hostilities, 1950–1953

66. MISSION OF THE UNITED STATES SEVENTH FLEET TO THE FORMOSA (TAIWAN) AREA: Statement by the President June 27, 1950 (Excerpt) ¹

The attack upon Korea makes it plain beyond doubt that communism has passed beyond the use of subversion to attack independent nations and will now use armed invasion. China has defied the orders of the Security Council of the United Nations issued to preserve international peace and security. Under these circumstances, the occupation of Formosa by Communism will be a direct threat to the security of the Pacific area. The United States forces performing their lawful and necessary mission in this area.

Accordingly, I have ordered the Seventh Fleet to prevent any attack on Formosa. As a corollary of this action, I have ordered the Chinese Government on Formosa to cease all air attacks against the mainland. The Seventh Fleet will see to it that the determination of the future status of Formosa is left to the restoration of security in the Pacific, a peace settlement, or consideration by the United Nations.

7. NEUTRALIZATION OF FORMOSA (TAIWAN) DURING THE KOREAN ACTION: Remarks by the Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs,¹ November 15, 1950 (Excerpt)²

. . . I should like to discuss briefly the question of Formosa. On the weekend of June 25-27, we were confronted with the fact that international communism had apparently decided to resort to formal all-out armed aggression posing some extremely difficult questions. One of them was what else do these people have in mind? Are we going to be involved in a general crisis throughout the Far East, or indeed on a world basis, or is this Korean action itself a limited action?

In order to insure that United Nations forces operating in Korea would not be heavily threatened from an important flank position and in order that in that period of crisis there would not be a sudden shift in the military position of Formosa, the President ordered the Seventh Fleet to insure the military neutralization of that island and to protect the flank of United States forces in Korea.³

Now, the question is what do we do about the future of Formosa? There are two elementary points in the American position at this point with respect to Formosa.

One is that it should be militarily neutralized while the Korean action is in progress. We do not believe that it will be tolerable to have Formosa seized and exploited militarily by those acting contrary to the policies and programs of the United Nations. Thus, military neutralization is an important element in the present situation.

The second is that whatever people think about Formosa, and people think a great many different things about Formosa, it must be settled by peaceful means. We should not allow Formosa itself to become a point around which a general war could start or that Formosa should threaten the general peace and security of the Pacific area.

Therefore, we asked that Formosa be considered by the General Assembly.⁴ We think it important that the United Nations move on to insure that Formosa be settled by peaceful means.

It would be normal for the United Nations to arrange for a Commission to take a look at it and to report back to the United Nations at a later date. Formosa is complicated in its history. It is complicated in the international commitments made with respect to it. It is complicated by the fact that there are two Chinese claimants. It is complicated by the fact that the members of the international community are seriously divided among themselves in terms of recognizing one or the other Chinese claimant or recognizing the

Thus, we hope very much that the United Nations will take this matter up and put it into the category of those questions being dealt with by peaceful means. We hope also that the other side will see fit to accept that procedure and not proceed with military action.

MONSIEUR LE CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES:

[There follows the text of the U.S. note.]

Please accept, Monsieur le Chargé d'Affaires, the assurances of my high consideration.

69. AMERICAN FRIENDSHIP FOR THE PEOPLES OF CHINA:

Address by the Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs,¹ May 18, 1951²

I should like, first of all, to congratulate the China Institute on its quarter century of splendid public service and to compliment you who are responsible for this timely chance to recall the warm friendship which has marked the relations between the Chinese and American people throughout the last two centuries.

Something of what we have in mind this evening is contained in a concurrent resolution which passed the Senate on May 4 and which is now before the House of Representatives, which reads in part:³

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States reaffirm the historic and abiding friendship of the American people for all other peoples, including the peoples of the Soviet Union, and declares—

That the American people deeply regret the artificial barriers which separate them from the peoples of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and which keep the Soviet peoples from learning of the desire of the American people to live in friendship with all other peoples and to work with them in advancing the ideal of human brotherhood; and

That the American people and their Government desire neither war with the Soviet Union nor the terrible consequences of such a war . . .

Despite the artificial barriers which now separate us from most of the peoples of China, we meet to reaffirm the historic and abiding friendship of the American people for the people of China.

Most of you here this evening are better qualified than I to explore the origins and elements of Chinese-American friendship. Over the centuries, this friendship has come to be taken for granted; cordial sentiments between a free China and a free America became strong and durable because they were constantly nourished by common purposes and common practical interests.

We and the Chinese, for example, have had a vital interest in the peace of the Pacific. Each of us wants security on our Pacific flank and wants to be able to look across those vast waters to find strength, independence, and good will in its great neighbor on the other side. It was inevitable that the driving force of Japanese militarism would sooner or later bring China and America together to oppose it, just as we had moved 40 years earlier to support China's independence and integrity against threats from Europe. The same issues are now posed again—and are made more difficult to deal with because foreign encroachment is now being arranged by Chinese who seem to love China less than they do their foreign masters.

See also statement of May 21, 1951, by the Department of State (ibid., May 28, 1951) and remarks by the Secretary of State on June 1, 1951 (Military Situation in the Far East: Hearings Before the Committee on Armed Services and the Committee on Foreign Relations, United States Senate, Eighty-second Congress, First Session, to Conduct an Inquiry into the Military Situation in the Far East and the Facts Surrounding the Relief of General of the Army Douglas MacArthur from His Assignments in That Area, part 3, pp. 1737-1739).

³ Resolution of June 26, 1951 (65 Stat. B69-B70; supra, pp. 1952-1954).

We meet here this evening to reaffirm our friendship with the Chinese people—but not merely as a routine and elegant expression of good will. For the friendship we have taken for granted for so long is now being attacked with every available weapon by those who have come to power on the mainland of China. Their sustained and violent effort to erase all evidence of this friendship bears powerful witness to the validity and strength of the bonds between our two peoples. American influence among the Chinese people is intolerable to those in power in Peiping and Moscow because they know, and quite rightly, that the idea of national and individual freedom which is at the heart of American political thought is the greatest threat to their own evil purposes.

Is the message of this meeting this evening to our friends in China prompted solely by narrowly conceived American interests? That important American interests are involved, there can be no doubt. But our historical relations with China have always reflected a high regard on our part for Chinese interests, and it is these we ask our friends in China now to consider.

The independence of China is gravely threatened. In the Communist world, there is room for only one master—a jealous and implacable master, whose price of friendship is complete submission. How many Chinese, in one community after another, are now being destroyed because they love China more than the Soviet Union? How many Chinese will remember in time the fates of Rajk, Kostov, Petkov, Clementis, and all those in other satellites who discovered that being Communist is not enough for the conspirators of the Kremlin?

The freedoms of the Chinese people are disappearing. Trial by mob, mass slaughter, banishment as forced labor to Manchuria, Siberia or Sinkiang, the arbitrary seizure of property, the destruction of loyalties within the family, the suppression of free speech—these are the facts behind the parades and celebrations and the empty promises.

The territorial integrity of China is now an ironic phrase. The movement of Soviet forces into Sinkiang, the realities of “joint exploitation” of that great province by Moscow and Peiping, the separation of Inner Mongolia from the body politic of China, and the continued inroads of Soviet power into Manchuria under the cloak of the Korean aggression mean in fact that China is losing its great northern areas to the European empire which has stretched out its greedy hands for them for at least a century.

Are our Chinese friends reflecting upon the maps of China now being published on the mainland which show Sinkiang, Inner Mongolia, Manchuria, and areas in the west and southwest as something distinct from China? Are our friends in China impressed by trade union buttons appearing on the streets of Peiping which no longer show Sinkiang and Inner Mongolia on the map of China? Have the authorities in Peiping themselves fully considered what it means for them to have Soviet troops on Chinese soil, in the light of the experience of the miserable satellites of Eastern Europe?

The peace and security of China are being sacrificed to the ambitions of the Communist conspiracy. China has been driven by foreign masters into an adventure of foreign aggression which cuts across the most fundamental national interests of the Chinese people. This action stands condemned by the great world community in which the Chinese people have always aspired to play a worthy role.

Hundreds of thousands of Chinese youths are being sacrificed in a fiery furnace, pitting their waves of human flesh against the fire power of modern weapons and without heavy equipment, adequate supply, or the most elementary medical attention. Apart from Korea, the Chinese are being pressed to aggressive action in other areas—all calculated to divert the attention and energies of China away from the encroachments of Soviet imperialism upon China itself.

I find it hard to believe that the Chinese people will acquiesce in the kind of future which their masters are now preparing for them. I find it impossible to believe that our friends in China have given up their desire to live at peace with their neighbors, to play a major role as a peaceful member of the international community of nations, to trade freely with all the world, to improve their own conditions in accordance with their own needs, aspirations and traditions, to maintain their independence as a nation, to preserve their territorial integrity, and to live out their lives in dignity and with the respect of their fellow men.

Events in China must surely challenge the concern of Chinese everywhere—in Formosa, on the mainland, and in overseas communities. There is a job to be done for China which only the Chinese can do—a job which will require sustained energy, continued sacrifice, and an abundance of the high courage with which so many Chinese have fought for so long during the struggles of the past decades. The rest of us cannot tell them exactly what is to be done or how. We cannot provide a formula to engage the unity of effort among all Chinese who love their country. But one thing we can say—as the Chinese people move to assert their freedom and to work out their destiny in accordance with their own historical purposes—they can count upon tremendous support from free peoples in other parts of the world.

It is not my purpose, in these few moments this evening, to go into specific elements of our own national policy in the present situation. But we can tell our friends in China that the United States will not acquiesce in the degradation which is being forced upon them. We do not recognize the authorities in Peiping for what they pretend to be. The Peiping regime may be a colonial Russian government—a Slavic Manchukuo on a larger scale. It is not the Government of China. It does not pass the first test. It is not Chinese.

It is not entitled to speak for China in the community of nations. It is entitled only to the fruits of its own conduct—the fruits of aggression upon which it is now willfully, openly, and senselessly embarked.

We recognize the National Government of the Republic of China, even though the territory under its control is severely restricted. We believe it more authentically represents the views of the great body of the people of China, particularly their historic demand for independence from foreign control. That Government will continue to receive important aid and assistance from the United States. Under the circumstances, however, such aid in itself cannot be decisive to the future of China. The decision and the effort are for the Chinese people, pooling their efforts, wherever they are, in behalf of China.

If the Chinese people decide for freedom, they shall find friends among all the peoples of the earth who have known and love freedom. They shall find added strength from those who refuse to believe that China is fated to become a land of tyranny and aggression and who expect China to fulfill the promise of its great past.

70. REVISED MISSION OF THE UNITED STATES SEVENTH FLEET IN THE FORMOSA (TAIWAN) AREA: Message by the President to the Congress, February 2, 1953 (Excerpt)¹

In June 1950, following the aggressive attack on the Republic of Korea, the United States Seventh Fleet was instructed both to prevent attack upon Formosa and also to insure that Formosa should not be used as a base of operations against the Chinese Communist mainland.²

This has meant, in effect, that the United States Navy was required to serve as a defensive arm of Communist China. Regardless of the situation of 1950, since the date of that order the Chinese Communists have invaded Korea to attack the United Nations forces there. They have consistently rejected the proposals of the United Nations Command for an armistice. They recently joined with Soviet Russia in rejecting the armistice proposal sponsored in the United Nations by the Government of India.³ This proposal had been accepted by the United States and 53 other nations.

Consequently there is no longer any logic or sense in a condition that required the United States Navy to assume defensive responsibilities on behalf of the Chinese Communists. This permitted those Communists, with greater impunity, to kill our soldiers and those of our United Nations allies in Korea.

I am, therefore, issuing instructions that the Seventh Fleet no longer be employed to shield Communist China. Permit me to make this crystal clear: This order implies no aggressive intent on our part. But we certainly have no obligation to protect a nation fighting us in Korea.

Communist Charges of United States Aggression in the Formosa (Taiwan) Area

71. UNITED NATIONS CONSIDERATION OF THE COMMUNIST CHARGES: Statement by the Department of State, August 24, 1950¹

The United States would welcome United Nations consideration of the Formosa problem. By direction of the President, Ambassador Austin notified the Security Council at once of the action taken by the United States on June 27.² In the President's statement of that same date, it was indicated that the problem is one which might be considered by the United Nations.³

Of course, the Security Council should not be diverted from the urgent business already on its agenda, the aggression against the Republic of Korea.

72. REFUTATION OF THE COMMUNIST CHARGES: Letter From the United States Representative at the United Nations⁴ to the Secretary-General, August 25, 1950 (Excerpts)⁵

There has been circulated to members of the Security Council a paper which charges the United States with aggression against Formosa.⁶ The paper asks the Security Council to consider the question of Formosa.

The United States Government does not intend to discuss at this time this paper or the ridiculous falsehoods which it contains. It does wish to take this occasion to make a further statement about the Formosan question.

On June 27 the United States representative read at the Security Council the following statement of the President of the United States:

⁶ Message of Aug. 24, 1950, from Chou En-lai, Chinese Communist Premier and Foreign Minister, to Yakov Malik, President of the Security Council; ibid., Oct. 16, 1950, p. 607.

Since then, the President of the United States on July 19 made the following declaration in a message to the Congress:

[There follows a portion of the text of the President's message as printed, infra, pp. 2552-2560.]

These statements and the facts to which they related make perfectly clear certain fundamental points which the people of the world will have clearly in mind:

1. The United States has not encroached on the territory of China, nor has the United States taken aggressive action against China.

2. The action of the United States in regard to Formosa was taken at a time when that island was the scene of conflict with the mainland. More serious conflict was threatened by the public declaration of the Chinese Communist authorities. Such conflict would have threatened the security of the United Nations Forces operating in Korea under the mandate of the Security Council to repel the aggression on the Republic of Korea.¹ They threatened to extend the conflict through the Pacific area.

3. The action of the United States was an impartial neutralizing action addressed both to the forces on Formosa and to those on the mainland. It was an action designed to keep the peace and was, therefore, in full accord with the spirit of the Charter of the United Nations. As President Truman has solemnly declared, we have no designs on Formosa, and our action was not inspired by any desire to acquire a special position for the United States.

4. The action of the United States was expressly stated to be without prejudice to the future political settlement of the status of the island. The actual status of the island is that it is territory taken from Japan by the victory of the Allied Forces in the Pacific. Like other such territories, its legal status cannot be fixed until there is international action to determine its future. The Chinese Government was asked by the Allies to take the surrender of the Japanese forces on the island. That is the reason the Chinese are there now.

5. The United States has a record through history of friendship for the Chinese people. We still feel the friendship and know that millions of Chinese reciprocate it. We took the lead with others in the last United Nations General Assembly to secure approval of a resolution on the integrity of China.² Only the Union of the Soviet Socialist Republics and its satellites did not approve that resolution.

6. The United States would welcome United Nations consideration of the case of Formosa. We would approve full United Nations investigation here or on the spot. We believe that United Nations consideration would contribute to a peaceful, rather than a forceable solution of that problem.

7. We do not believe that the Security Council need be or will be diverted from its consideration of the aggression against the Republic of Korea. There was a breach of the peace in Korea. The aggressor attacked, has been condemned, and the combined forces of the United Nations are now in battle to repel the aggression. Formosa is now at peace and will remain so unless someone resorts to force. If the Security Council wishes to study the question of Formosa we shall support and assist that study. Meanwhile, the President of the Security Council should discharge the duties of his office and get on with the item on the agenda which is the Complaint of Aggression Against the Republic of Korea, and, specifically, the recognition of the right of the Korean Ambassador to take his seat and the vote on the United States resolution for the localization of the Korean conflict.

I request that this letter be circulated to members of the Security Council.

[The United Nations considered three items relating to Formosa:

(1) The Chinese Communist complaint regarding "armed invasion of Formosa", submitted August 24, 1950. On November 30, 1950, the Security Council rejected by a 9-1-1 vote a Soviet resolution which would have condemned the United States.

(2) The Soviet complaint of "aggression against China by the United States of America", submitted September 20, 1950. The First Committee of the General Assembly rejected a Soviet resolution on this subject by a vote of 49-5-3 (February 1, 1951). The General Assembly itself rejected the same resolution on February 1, 1951, by a similar margin.

(3) The question of Formosa, submitted by the United States September 20, 1950 (supra, pp. 174-175). After hearing Mr. Dulles' statement of November 15, 1950 (infra, doc. 74), the First Committee decided to postpone consideration of the question. On February 7, 1951, the First Committee adopted a British proposal to adjourn discussion sine die.

For information regarding the discussion of these items, see United States Participation in the United Nations: Report by the President to the Congress for the Year 1950 (Department of State publication 4178; 1951); ibid., 1951 (Department of State publication 4583; 1952); Annual Report of the Secretary-General on the Work of the Organization, 1 July 1950-30 June 1951 (General Assembly, Official Records, Sixth Session, Supplement No. 1; U. 73. UNITED STATES REQUEST THAT THE "QUESTION OF FORMOSA" BE PLACED ON THE AGENDA OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY: Letter From the Secretary of State to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, September 21, 1950¹

In accordance with Rule 20 of the Rules of Procedure of the General Assembly,² the Delegation of the United States offers the following observations in connection with and in support of its request that the

"question of Formosa" be placed on the agenda of the Fifth Session of the General Assembly as an additional item of an important and urgent character within the meaning of Rule 15.

In the joint Declaration at Cairo of 1 December 1943,¹ the President of the United States, the British Prime Minister, and the President of China stated—

It is their purpose that . . . Manchuria, Formosa and the Pescadores shall be restored to the Republic of China. . . . The aforesaid three Great Powers, mindful of the enslavement of the people of Korea, are determined that in due course Korea shall become free and independent.

In the Potsdam Proclamation of July 1945,² defining the terms for Japanese surrender the three Allied leaders declared that the terms of the Cairo Declaration should be carried out. The provisions of this Proclamation were accepted by Japan at the time of its surrender. General Order No. 1 of the Japanese Imperial Headquarters³ issued pursuant to the terms of surrender provided for the surrender of the Japanese Forces in China (excluding Manchuria) and Formosa to Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek. Formal transfer of Formosa to China was to await the conclusion of peace with Japan or some other appropriate formal act. For the past five years, Chinese authority has been exercised over the island.

On 25 June 1950, a breach of the peace occurred in the Pacific area in the form of an armed attack against the Republic of Korea. In the resolution adopted on that day, the Security Council took the first step toward restoring the peace.⁴ On 27 June, the President of the United States stated that the North Korean forces had—

. . . defied the orders of the Security Council of the United Nations issued to preserve international peace and security. In these circumstances, the occupation of Formosa by Communist forces would be a direct threat to the security of the Pacific area and to United States forces performing their lawful and necessary functions in that area.

Accordingly, I have ordered the Seventh Fleet to prevent any attack on Formosa. As a corollary of this action, I am calling upon the Chinese Government on Formosa to cease all air and sea operation against the mainland. The Seventh Fleet will see that this is done. The determination of the future status of Formosa must await the restoration of security in the Pacific, a peace settlement with Japan, or consideration by the United Nations. . . .⁵

The Government of the United States has made it abundantly clear that the measures it has taken with respect to Formosa were without prejudice to the long-term political status of Formosa, and that the United States has no territorial ambitions and seeks no special position or privilege with respect to Formosa. The United States believes further that the future of Formosa and of the nearly 8 million people inhabited there should be settled by peaceful means in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations.

⁵ See supra, doc. 66.

The limited question, that of charges of the Peiping Regime against the United States, as set forth in document S/1715,¹ remains before the Security Council. The United States considers that the General Assembly could make an important contribution towards carrying out the purpose and principles of the United Nations in the Pacific Area if it should study the general situation with respect to Formosa with a view to formulating appropriate recommendations.

74. POSTPONEMENT OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY CONSIDERATION OF THE "QUESTION OF FORMOSA" (TAIWAN): Statements by the United States Representative² Before the General Assembly, November 15, 1950³

I am going to suggest that we should defer and put to a later place on our agenda this item of the question of Formosa.

We put the item of the question of Formosa on the agenda because, as our Secretary of State said in his opening statement to the Assembly in general debate,

It is the belief of my Government that the problem of Formosa and the nearly 8 million people who inhabit it should not be settled by force or by unilateral action. We believe that the international community has a legitimate interest and concern in having this matter settled by peaceful means.⁴

That is basically the reason, Mr. Chairman, why we asked that this item be placed on the agenda, and we still believe that the item should stay on the agenda.

We do, however, suggest that it should not be considered at the present time.

When the Secretary of State spoke, as I indicated, in September, it seemed at that time that there was a reasonable prospect that peace and security would be reestablished in Korea speedily and satisfactorily by the action of the United Nations and its forces there. I am sorry to say that that prospect has now been, in recent days, considerably changed by the rapid and substantial increase of Chinese Communist intervention in Korea. The situation that results creates a very serious problem both for the United Nations and for my own Government.

A resolution dealing with the intervention in Korea is now pending before the Security Council and is being considered.⁵

[Later in the debate, Mr. Dulles made the following remarks responding to a Soviet statement.]⁶

If the delegate of the Soviet Union understood correctly the interpretation of what I said, I had not said that this question should be postponed until there could be an arrival here of the representatives of the Chinese so-called government.

I am quite sure, Mr. Chairman, that the interpreters could not fall to such a grievous error. I am quite sure that what Mr. Malik says he thinks I said is a case of the wish perhaps being followed by thought. It is not a case of error by the interpreters.

I never suggested in any degree whatsoever that the motivation for proposal for adjournment was to allow the Chinese Communists to get here. Quite the contrary, the one reason I hesitated to urge the adjournment was that it might be interpreted, as it has been misinterpreted—I am afraid—deliberately by the honorable delegate of the Soviet Union.

What I did say was that, in the light of the conduct of this so-called government, things we can't shut our eyes to—the intervention in North Korea, the invasion of Tibet, the great aid to Ho Chi-minh in Indochina, and the threats of invasion of Formosa—we face the situation, Mr. Chairman, of the risk, at least, that that whole area may be engulfed in aggressive war.

If that is going to happen, then a discussion here of the long-range future of Formosa would be somewhat academic.

The primary task of the Security Council is to do everything it possibly can to be sure that that great disaster does not occur, and the only reason, Mr. Chairman, why I suggested the postponement of the discussion here was lest by misventure, in the course of our debate here, we might say something about this delicate problem which might make more difficult the already difficult enough task of the Security Council.

RELATION OF THE TACHEN ISLANDS TO THE DEFENSE OF FORMOSA (TAIWAN): Transcript of a News Conference of the Secretary of State, January 18, 1955 (Excerpt) ¹

Secretary Dulles was asked if he had any reports on the attempt of the Chinese Communists to take one of the offshore islands from the nationalists. Secretary Dulles made the following reply:

I have had some reports about the fighting, which is rather severe Department of State Bulletin, Jan. 31, 1955, pp. 191-192.

apparently around the island of I-chiang, an island which lies, I believe, about 8 miles to the north of the Tachen Islands.

Asked how important the Tachen Islands are to us, the Secretary replied:

I would not say that the Tachen Islands are in any sense essential to the defense of Formosa and the Pescadores, which we do regard as vital to us.

Asked whether they are useful in the defense of those places, Mr. Dulles replied:

Well, that would call for a military judgment rather than one I would want to try to express as a civilian. There is, I believe, on the island a radar point which is perhaps of some utility in picking up possible air attack against Formosa. It lies about 200 miles north of Formosa. But whether the Tachen radar could pick it up and get word to Formosa in advance of the detection of it by radar actually on Formosa I wouldn't know.

Asked whether it had any value to the United States position on Okinawa, the Secretary replied:

No.

Asked whether he was talking about the island that is currently under attack and whether it is considered one of the Tachen group or not, Secretary Dulles replied:

No, it is not one of the Tachen group. It is part of a group of islands most of which actually passed from Nationalist to Communist hands last May. There is a little group of four or five islands there, and most of them were taken over by the Communists about last May. The loss didn't attract any particular attention at that time. Since then, public opinion has been focused more on these little off-shore islands than was the case last May. But the island itself (I-chiang) is without any particular importance. It is subject to artillery fire from some of these islands that were taken over last May, and it was not held by any regular forces of the Republic of China.

Asked whether it was correct to say that the Tachen Islands were not essential to the defense of Formosa and the Pescadores, the Secretary replied:

I didn't put it as flatly as that. I put it that that was a matter of military judgment. My own information is that the only relation that it has to the defense of Formosa and the Pescadores is that there is a radar station on the island, and whether or not that radar station can usefully pick up a possible air attack against Formosa and relay knowledge of that to Formosa before that air attack could be detected by the radar on Formosa itself, that is something that I do not have any precise knowledge of. I would say the relationship to the defense of Formosa was at the best marginal.

76. EMPLOYMENT OF UNITED STATES ARMED FORCES IN DEFENSE OF THE FORMOSA (TAIWAN) AREA: Message by the President to the Congress, January 24, 1955¹

To the Congress of the United States:

The most important objective of our Nation's foreign policy is to safeguard the security of the United States by establishing and preserving a just and honorable peace. In the Western Pacific a situation is developing in the Formosa Straits that seriously imperils the peace and our security.

Since the end of Japanese hostilities in 1945, Formosa and the Pescadores have been in the friendly hands of our loyal ally, the Republic of China. We have recognized that it was important that these islands should remain in friendly hands. In unfriendly hands, Formosa and the Pescadores would seriously dislocate the existing, even if unstable, balance of moral, economic, and military forces upon which the peace of the Pacific depends. It would create a breach in the island chain of the Western Pacific that constitutes, for the United States and other free nations, the geographical backbone of their security structure in that ocean. In addition, this breach would interrupt north-south communications between other important elements of that barrier, and damage the economic life of countries friendly to us.

The United States and the friendly Government of the Republic of China, and indeed all the free nations, have a common interest that Formosa and the Pescadores should not fall into the control of aggressive Communist forces.

Influenced by such considerations, our Government was prompt, when the Communists committed armed aggression in Korea in June 1950, to direct our Seventh Fleet to defend Formosa from possible invasion from the Communist mainland.²

These considerations are still valid. The Seventh Fleet continues under Presidential directive to carry out that defensive mission.³ We also provide military and economic support to the Chinese Nationalist Government and we cooperate in every proper and feasible way with that Government in order to promote its security and stability. All of these military and related activities will be continued.

In addition, there was signed last December a Mutual Defense Treaty between this Government and the Republic of China, covering Formosa and the neighboring Pescadores.¹ It is a treaty of purely defensive character. That treaty is now before the Senate of the United States.

Meanwhile Communist China has pursued a series of provocative political and military actions, establishing a pattern of aggressive purpose. That purpose, they proclaim, is the conquest of Formosa.

In September 1954 the Chinese Communists opened up heavy artillery fire upon Quemoy Island, one of the natural approaches to Formosa, which had for several years been under the uncontested control of the Republic of China. Then came air attacks of mounting intensity against other free China islands, notably those in the vicinity of the Tachen group to the north of Formosa. One small island (Ichiang) was seized last week by air and amphibious operations after a gallant few fought bravely for days against overwhelming odds. There have been recent heavy air attacks and artillery fire against the main Tachen Islands themselves.

The Chinese Communists themselves assert that these attacks are a prelude to the conquest of Formosa. For example, after the fall of Ichiang, the Peiping radio said that it showed a—determined will to fight for the liberation of Taiwan [Formosa]. Our people will use all their strength to fulfill that task.

Clearly, this existing and developing situation poses a serious danger to the security of our country and of the entire Pacific area and indeed to the peace of the world. We believe that the situation is one for appropriate action of the United Nations under its charter, for the purpose of ending the present hostilities in that area. We would welcome assumption of such jurisdiction by that body.

Meanwhile, the situation has become sufficiently critical to impel me, without awaiting action by the United Nations, to ask the Congress to participate now, by specific resolution, in measures designed to improve the prospects for peace. These measures would contemplate the use of the Armed Forces of the United States if necessary to assure the security of Formosa and the Pescadores.

The actions that the United States must be ready to undertake are of various kinds. For example, we must be ready to assist the Republic of China to redeploy and consolidate its forces if it should so desire. Some of these forces are scattered throughout the smaller offshore islands as a result of historical rather than military reasons directly related to defending Formosa. Because of the air situation in the area, withdrawals for the purpose of redeployment of Chinese Nationalist forces would be impractical without assistance of the Armed Forces of the United States.

Moreover, we must be alert to any concentration or employment of Chinese Communist forces obviously undertaken to facilitate attack upon Formosa, and be prepared to take appropriate military action.

I do not suggest that the United States enlarge its defensive obligations beyond Formosa and the Pescadores as provided by the treaty now awaiting ratification. But, unhappily, the danger of armed attack directed against that area compels us to take into account closely related localities and actions which, under current conditions, might determine the failure or the success of such an attack. The authority that may be accorded by the Congress would be used only in situations which are recognizable as parts of, or definite preliminaries to, an attack against the main positions of Formosa and the Pescadores.

Authority for some of the actions which might be required would be inherent in the authority of the Commander in Chief. Until Congress can act I would not hesitate, so far as my constitutional powers extend, to take whatever emergency action might be forced upon us in order to protect the rights and security of the United States.

However, a suitable congressional resolution would clearly and publicly establish the authority of the President as Commander in Chief to employ the Armed Forces of this Nation promptly and effectively for the purposes indicated if in his judgment it became necessary. It would make clear the unified and serious intentions of our Government, our Congress, and our people. Thus it will reduce the possibility that the Chinese Communists, misjudging our firm purpose and national unity, might be disposed to challenge the position of the United States, and precipitate a major crisis which even they would neither anticipate nor desire.

In the interest of peace, therefore, the United States must remove any doubt regarding our readiness to fight, if necessary, to preserve the vital stake of the free world in a free Formosa, and to engage in whatever operations may be required to carry out that purpose.

To make this plain requires not only Presidential action but also congressional action. In a situation such as now confronts us, and under modern conditions of warfare, it would not be prudent to await the emergency before coming to the Congress. Then it might be too late. Already the warning signals are flying.

I believe that the threatening aspects of the present situation, if resolutely faced, may be temporary in character. Consequently, I recommend that the resolution expire as soon as the President is able to report to the Congress that the peace and security of the area are reasonably assured by international conditions, resulting from United Nations action or otherwise.

Again I say that we would welcome action by the United Nations which might, in fact, bring an end to the active hostilities in the area. This critical situation has been created by the choice of the Chinese Communists, not by us. Their offensive military intent has been flaunted to the whole world by words and by deeds. Just as they created the situation, so they can end it if they so choose.

What we are now seeking is primarily to clarify present policy and to unite in its application. We are not establishing a new policy. Consequently, my recommendations do not call for an increase in the Armed Forces of the United States or any acceleration in military procurement or levels of defense production. If any unforeseen emergency arises requiring any change, I will communicate with the Congress. I hope, however, that the effect of an appropriate congressional resolution will be to calm the situation rather than to create further conflict.

One final point: The action I request is, of course, no substitute for the treaty with the Republic of China which we have signed and which I have transmitted to the Senate. Indeed, present circumstances make it more than ever important that this basic agreement should be promptly brought into force, as a solemn evidence of our determination to stand fast in the agreed treaty area and to thwart all attacks directed against it. If delay should make us appear indecisive in this basic respect, the pressures and dangers would surely mount.

Our purpose is peace. That cause will be served if, with your help, we demonstrate our unity and our determination. In all that we do we shall remain faithful to our obligations as a member of the United Nations to be ready to settle our international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security, and justice, are not endangered.
